LEGISLATION TO CURB LABOR

CIO Opinion--President Truman's Bill

Pres. Philip Murray's speech of Dec. 5. (Excerpts). ". . .Why did not the Secretary of Labor or the President endeavor to bring the General Motors Corp. of the United States Corp. into collective bargaining conferences with the unions?"
"Instead--legislation is requested. Legislation that can have but a single purpose--the weakening of labor unions--the curtailment of the right of free men to refrain from working when they choose to do so."
"I am profoundly disturbed at the implications inherent in the President's proposal. It marks a very serious departure from the policies which the people of this country have repeatedly approved within recent years under the leadership of President Roosevelt."
" We have known of previous periods in American history when rapacious industry greedilyseeking ever increasing profits has for a time succeeded in the endeavor.
"But in the wake of these policies has come economic disaster. The economic debacle of 1929 followed a period where industry was given an open and free hand to run amuck. But the mass unemployment and human distress which followed will never be forgotten."
"To date the Federal administration has completely ignored the grave human problems which stand unsolved.
"The Federal administration instead is embarked upon a policy of continued appeasement of American industry in the face of its contemptuous attitude toward the American people and the Government itself."
"The CIO is opposed to the basic policies thus pursued by the administration."
"It is within this framework that the proposed legislation of President Truman must be viewed and its real intent understood."
"The design of the specific legislative proposal is to weaken and ultimately destroy labor union organizations. It can be but the first step for ever more savage legislative repression. For this reason the CIO shall mobilise its entire membership and the American people to defeat this specific measure and all similar attempts directed against labor." (CIO News, Dec. 10, 1945)

CIO Opinion -- The Truman bill

"The national industrial picture is so "thoroughly fraught with danger to our future well-being that we cannot afford now to tolerate the kind of stupidity and bungling that characterized the rush to enact such bills as the Smith-Connaly Act of 1943." (Pres. Philip Murray, testifying in opposition ot the Turman proposal, HR 4908). "There have been no lack of cooling-off on the part of labor and certainly the cuts in take-home pay, contrasted with enormous increases in profits, are available to everybody, he said. [Pointed out that CIO Steel workers formulated their demands in September and sought immediate negotiations with the steel industry...90 days have elapsed, and steel workers still had not resorted to stirke. In Auto industry workers "thrashed around" for about 60 days"in futile efforts to induce General Motors to engage in real collective bargaining...] . . . . .
"Explaining that carry-back and carry-forward amounts to 'lock-out benefits for industry', since they are guaranteed their 1936-39 profit level no matter how little they operate, Murray said: 'This carry-back is an atrocity against the American public. It permits industry to be as irresponsible as it likes, with no penalty attached. It should be repealed in the interests of all the American people." He continued, "The Truman bill seeks to give the impression that cooling-off would only last 30 days, during the fact-finding process. But what about an industry refusal to hand over all their books. What about lengthy litigation in the courts to compel an industry to produce everything the fact-finding board needed. . .The proposal is impractical and unworkable. .During all this delay, workers are regimented and compelled not to take strike action." . . . .
CIO News, 12-17-45)

"What President Truman has proposed and what Congress is about to enact,or worse, is legislation which says to a worker that whether he wills to nor not he must work. The American concept of that kind of situation is that it is slavery.... Franklin D. Roosevelt expounded four basic freedoms as fundamental. A smaller man, successor to Roosevelt, either has forgotten what those freedoms were, or has found them incompatible to the pressures exercised by 'advisors'".
"Legislation against the right to strike can be enacted. It can't be enforced in a free America, but only in a fascist American and even then, not completely. . .
"When legislation denying men and women the right to strike fails, there will go up a hue and cry from its backers for 'teeth'. And the teeth will be the teeth Hitler used. . . ."
"President Truman's proposal is subtle. It is designed especially to confuse and confound the liberal, and even honest workingmen. Why shouldn't unions, like corporations, be regulated by law? Well, for one thing unions differ from corporations in that they are formed for mutual protection and not for profit grabbing. Their members work for their wages instead of drawing dividends for doing nothing. Their members make voluntary contributions in the form of dues only for the purposes of administering their organization, holding it together and carrying out their program as decided upon by democratic processes.
"There are exceptions. The exceptions are not genuine unions, but rackets masquerading as unions.....
"The drive of the administration and Congress against labor affects all the people. If labor cannot be free to determine its actions, then Catholics and Baptists cannot be free to worship as they please, there can be no free press and radio, and liberals will be arrested for 'dangerous thoughts'. . ."
(ILWU Dispatcher, 12-14-45, column by Pres. Harry Bridges)

AFL OPINION

AFL Executive Council met in emergency session in Washington, "blasted anti-labor and anti-strike bills pending before Congress and mobilized the entire resources of the AFL to defeat them." [Among bills opposed: the "Norton" bill (Truman plan); Connally-Smith Act Amendments; Hobbs bill.]
(Memphis Lab. Rev. 12-14-45)

"Opening the American Fed. of Labor's campaign to defeat all pending anti-labor legislation in Congress, AFL Pres. Wm. Green emphatically condemned the Norton bill (Truman plan) as an invasion of labor's right to strike and a destroyer of the constitutional rights of free speech, freedom of assemblage and freedom of the press...The Norton bill would make strikes illegal during a compulsory cooling-off period. . .
"Pres. Green charged that the measure 'clearly imposes involuntary servitude on workers' because it prohibits concerted refusal to work for a period of 30 days and nullifies certain provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act, returning workers and their organizations 'to the status of 50 years ago.'"
Detailed analysis, following points made:
"1. [The bill] invades the right to strike, which right labor must posses in order to procure economic justice."
"2. The proposal will serve as a signal to the states to pass similar laws applicable to intrastate disputes of every nature."
"3. Vital guaranties of the Norris-LaGuardia Act are automatically nullified or rendered worthless."
"4. The constitutional rights of freedom of speech, freedom of assemblage and freedom of the press are destroyed."
"5. Government by injunction is reestablished, subjecting violators to criminal contempt charges, and to imprisonment."
"6. The vicious 'doctrine of conspiracy' in labor disputes is reestablished."
"7. Civil damage suits are authorized and encouraged, and such suits may be brought against the union, the officers thereof as individuals, and the individual members. . ."
(Raleigh Union Her. 12-20-45)

Editorial in United Mine Workers Journal (Dec. 15, 1945)."We don't know who induced Pres. Truman to send a special message to the Congress proposing an overall fact-finding bill that would destroy collective bargaining, impose compulsory arbitration and stymie free enterprise and production. Whoever is responsible did a dis-service to the President and the Nation."
"The counsel-draft of the bill. . .is about the most adroit piece of legislative deception that has reached Congress in many sessions.
"It is akin to one of those quickies that the writer used to watch the hired hands of big business and the railroads draft for state legislatures and slip through in a few days, without either the newspapers or the public understanding the full portent of what was being legislated. "
"A mere reading of the Truman message, and the bill based on it, would lead the average person to believe that it was merely an innocent Sunday School proposal based on the Ten Commandments and designed to obtain factual information in labor controversies and upon which a peaceful and equitable solution could be reached. But such is not the case."
"Behind this cleverly conceived, surface deception the Administration sought to politically hawk a 'fooler' bill that would revamp and strait-jacket American industrial relations. . . . .

"I consider HR 4908 a bill which, if enacted by Congress, would restrict the privileges of free labor in our country, would neutralize the strength of the organizations of labor and would contribute to ghe general weakening of the ranks of labor to the detriment of their bargaining powers, and particularly when dealing with those who would purchase their services. . . ."

(UMW Journal 12-15-45)

Railroad Brotherhood Opinion

"The Railway Labor Act, proposed by Pres. Truman last week as model legislation for all labor, was denounced bitterly by Martin Miller, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, before the National Emergency Meeting on Jobs and Security, because it has tied railroad workers hand and foot for the behefit of their employers. "
". . .4,000 cases [he said, are] up before the Chicago Adjustment Board, established under the Railway Labor Act. It will take from four to six years to get these cases, dealing with grievances and demands of railway workers, through the Board."
"The Act, he said further, outlawed the closed shop depriving his union alone of 24 closed shops. After a recital of the injustices this so-called 'model' legislation has inflicted on railway workers, the rail union representative pleaded with delegates to the conference to save the rest of organized labor from its deadly effects.". . . (UE News, 12-15-45)

"False Notions About Truman Bill" (T.K. Hedrick, Federated Press. in Colo. Lab. Advo. 12-20-45). "A false misconception about the Truman proposal for the peaceful settlement of labor disputes is that it is merely the extension of the system long applied to the railroad workers into the industrial field."
"This false assumption is encouraged by many newspapers and by a good many congressmen in attempting to show that the measure is really mild and that labor's objections are not soundly based...
"The [bill]...is a real threat to collective bargaining and serves as an invitation to corporations to decline to reach agreements with unions--to wait until fact-finding boards are appointed. . . .
"The Norton bill differs sharply from the Railway Labor act in that the Railway Brotherhoods face no penalties for noncompliance with its provisions, and the Norton bill (Truman plan) would subject industrial workers to penalties provided in another federal law, although it avoids naming specific penalties in its text ... Most of the difficulty with the...bill springs from the proviso that the fact-finding boards shall not only report their 'findings of fact' in a labor dispute, but shall also make their 'recommendations'. It is the recommendations that give the bill the indirect power to make arbitration compulsory."
"The Railway Labor Act goes into particular pains to exempt both sides from compulsory arbitration. . .
"[Another important difference]...the railroads are public utilities and operate as near-monopolies, while private industry furnishes and entirely different picture. . . .
"To withdraw the right to strike even for 30 days is to play into the hands of management--to permit the use of pressures and bribes, of coercion and promises--in order to weaken the union's position. . . . "

HOBBS BILL
"Organized labor joined a bipartisan group of liberals Congressmen in an effort to head off vicious anti-strike legislation now pending. . .[A special but informal meeting called by Chairman Sabath of House Rules Committee, present were Congressmen and labor leaders. . .] (Richmond Lab.Her. 12-14-45)

"Reactionary Northern Republicans and Southern Democrats made last week an anti-labor union festival in Congress...The Hobbs bill to strangle all unions, and the Arends bill, which repeals the Smith-Connally Act but also takes away from unions the right and authority to solicit funds, vote assessments, accept contributions, or spend any money in connection with any political convention, primary or election. The Arends bill also outlaws strikes and provides excuses for employers to sue unions and their members if they refuse to work on the terms of employers.

"The Hobbs bill provides 20 years in jail and $10,000 fine for anyone who directly or indirectly interferes, or threatens to interfere, with interstate commerce. Its purpose is to outlaw every union activity, for even the discussion of wage matters. . ." "Though aimed primarily at the Teamsters Union, to stop organization . . .the Hobbs bill would strike a deadly blow at all organizations of working people." (Colo. Lab. Advo.-Colo. Teamster 12-13-45)

"The Hobbs bill is another attempt to 'crucify labor with endless legal procedure," said Pres. Tobin of Intl Brotherhood of Teamsters (AFL). "We're bitterly opposed to it and will fight it to the end..." (Colo. Teams. 12-20-45).

"Supporters of the Hobbs bill...seek to convey the impression that it outlaws the use of 'force' and 'violence' or prohibitxs something which the bill calls 'robbery' and 'extortion'...The fact is that the prohibition of 'force' or 'violence' or the prohibition of what the Hobbs bill chooses to call 'robbery' or 'extortion' are not at all the changes which the Hobbs bill makes into law. The Hobbs bill would not for the first time introduce into Federal legislation a prohibition on 'force' or 'robbery' or 'corruption' as those are defined in the bill. All these are already prohibited by Federal law." . . .

"Basically [the changes in the Hobbs 'anti-racketeering' bill] come down to just one change--but very significant from the poitn of view of the direction in which the "anti-racketeering' law of 1934 might be turned.

"[The Hobbs bill removes] from the present law the two provisions inserted to prevent any warped application of the law in derogation of the rights of labor... [It] removes "the provision which prevents application of the 'anti-racketeering act' to the payment of wages by a bona fide employer to a bona fide employee, and [it removes] the provision which prevents application of the law to impair the 'right of bona fide labor organizations lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof.'" . . . (CIO News 12-24-45)

Railroad Trainmen (Dec. '45). President A. F. Whitney(excerpt). "...Last August I described the Ball-Burton-Hatch Bill as 'the opening gun in a postwar campaign to enslave labor.' ...Labor's enemies have now opened up their artillery full blast. [Rep. Hebert proposes amendment to the Anti-Trust Act (HR 4584)] "making 'labor leaders and racketeers' criminally responsible for any 'strikes, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade' which 'are now crippling and obstructing our country's business reconversion..."

"The most immediate danger,..comes from [the amended bill, HR 3937,] which was originally intended to wipe out the disgraceful Smith-Connally Act...."HR 3937 not only forbids unions from making contributions to candidates in Federal Elections, but extends the prohibition to primary elections and political conventions, and presumably even goes so far as to deny labor unions the right to expend any sum of money to express their views on political candidates and issues."..

[Also strikes at collective bargaining rights of labor. That unions that strike in violation of 'no-strike' clauses in contracts shall be deprived of collective bargaining rights for one year and be subject to suits for damages. . ."

ON STRIKES

"This newspaper has carried repeated charges that some sections of Big Business are either provoking strikes at this time, or making no real effort to head them off, because Uncle Sam in effect foots the bill for them."
"Similar charges have been aired in Congress, as well as by administration officials and trade union leaders. They have pointed out that the tax laws operate in such a way as to protect the employers from losses when stoppages occur...
"...Now comes "Business Week", one of the leading publications of the business world, which tells frankly...how the tax laws function to "cushion the impact" of strikes" for manufacturers." [December issue]]points out that G.M. earnings for the first three months of 1945 were more than sufficient to land the corporation in the excess profits tax bracket. All additional profits for the last quarter would, therefore, be subject to an 85.5 per cent Federal tax. Thus, by shutting down and foregoing these profits, the actual loss for the company is only 14.5 per cent on each dollar, the magazine explains....General Motors has the same 'downy cushion' for 1946...Next year the'carry-back' provisions of the wartime tax laws come into operation. Under those provisions, a company gets rebates on previous excess profits taxes paid if its earnings fall below the average for 1936 to 1939. . ." (Labor--organ, RR. Exec. Assn. 12-8-45)

"Full-page ads by the American Iron & Steel Institute [have been satying that the CIO United Steelworkers]'havn't got the right' to strike the steel industry. . . [A resolution passed by Steelworkers' Wage Policy Committeemeeting in Pittsburgh, outlines the union's position"]: States in part:
". . .Each and every contract between the union and the major steel companies contains a clause permitting the union to reopen the contract for a general wage increase upon a change in national wage policy. The union has served notice under each of these contracts in accordance with these clauses. . .
"A change in national wage policy has been announced and the WLB, in a unanimous resolution, has expressly recognized that the union is free to bargain with respect to a general wage increase."
"Under the terms of its contract the union may now exercise all of the rights and remedies which would be available to it in bargaining for a new contract with respect to a general wage increase. These rights and remedies include the right to strike."
"The no-strike clause in the contracts . . . does not surrender the right to strike with respect to general wage increases, but deals ~~wit~~ only with strikes concerning grievances and matters subject to arbitration. A general wage increase is not subject to the grievance and arbitration machinery provided in the contract. . . ." . . . . (CIO News 12-24-45)

"Strikes are only symptons". (Editorial. Exceppt). "....A Strike is the only weapon the laborer has at this disposition when all talk fails. By striking he is using that weapon of withholding his labor in an effort to gain consideration from his employer. The attitude of a great many employer associations, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and many others has been that the evil standing in the way of reconversion is the actual strike itself."
"Labor says that strikes are only symptoms of a disease which business has the power to cure by broadening its entire approach to the economic situation. The disease in the current wave of strikes is that living costs have far outstripped the average workers income.. ." . . . (Colo. Teams. 12-27-45)

"An entirely favorable settlement with the Clothing Manufacturers Association of the United States on the Analagamed (Clothing Workers) demands for an increase in wages and other improvements in working conditions was reached on Dec. 11, the day after that previously agreed upon as the time at which the settlement would go into effect. ...Settlement covers about 150,000 members. in the men's and boys' clothing industry..[Provisions of agreement]:
"1. A general wage increase of 15 cents per hour.
"2. On number 1, 2 and 3 jackets and vests and number 3 pants, a 20 per cent increas in labor costs over 1942 prices. (
"3. [Similar provision to number 2.]
"4. An amount equal to three per cent of the payroll to be contributed to a trust fund for the purpose of establishing retirement benefits to workers on reaching the age of 65."
"5. Six paid holidays annually as follows...."
"This achievement...result of peaceful negotiations . . . . . .
(Advance, 12-15-45)

FULL EMPLOYMENT BILL

"The House Committee considering the Full Employment Bill has rejected the measure passed by the Senate and is now dreaming up a 'compromise' that will limit, rather than expand, the government's powers to attain jobs for all..."
(FE News--Farm Equipment Workers--12-7-45)

"This is no more like a full employment bill than the jackass in the lion's skin was like the king of beasts which the skin had previously adorned." [so stated Congressman Neely, Dem. W. Va.] "The bill as reported by the committee rejects completely the theory--advocated by Pres. Truman, progressive members of Congress, and, of course, organized labor--that the Federal Government must see to it that there is a job for everyone able and willing to work.. ."
(Union. Leader, Chi. 12-29-45)

PRICE CONTROL

"The National Association of Manufacturers opposition to price controls is "utterly foolhardy and dangerous", leading to a dizzy inflation which would "not be accepted lying down by the great masses of the people."
"This stinging rebuke to the NAM plan to repeal price control by Feb. 15, was given the NAM at their golden anniversay meeting...by Chester Bowles, OPA Administrator.
(Colo. Lab. Advo. 12-13-45)

"The National Association of Manufacturers advocates the removal of all federal controls over prices. " . . .
"Thus with fumbling hands and frivolous minds do the leading political-industrial-reactionaries stumble toward the future.". . .
"Another depression is the only outcome to the program of the National Association of Manufacturers in removing all price controls. This would mean an immediate and staggering increase in the cost of living.. .
"...With the scarcity of places to live and things to wear would come uncontrolled inflation. Wages would start up the ladder to catch prices. The National Assn. of Manufacturers knows that. But it also knows that wages never catch up to prices in an inflationary race.. .
"This time the inflation would be worse [than after the last war] because goods are scarcer than they were...Therefore the crash would be worse, too.". . .

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

JOURNAL January, 1946 HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Gentlemen:

This survey of the system of management which the IARE have built up in handling grievances indicates that its accomplishments have been many. As 1945 doors are closed, lets calculate the benefits derived from the IARE and make plans for a bigger and a better future together.

We have given the men employed a better opportunity to learn the art of working on the railroad. We have eliminated some abuses from the hiring of men, and have helped workers in the higer age brackets gain employment.

Our efforts to regulate layoffs are still in the experimental stage but we promise on the whole to be more useful in helping our members adjust themselves. By the introduction of the principle which forbids a union from acting as sole bargaining representative, and by seniority rules, which have been established, we will be able to introduce continuity into many jobs which were formerly insecure.

The system of equal division of representative is expressed in the Case of Elgin, Joliet & Eastern v. Burley, upon which this policy is based, is being reargued before the Supreme Court. However it appears as if the decision will be favorable. One particular important result of such a decision will be to increase the effective collective bargaining of the IARE. This recent developed policy will be a valuable instrument for IARE in the control of improvement of working conditions. It will also reduce in many ways a multitude of abuses of management. It will enable the IARE to obtain steady work for all members and make all jobs secure.

The IARE pledges to continue the fight for equal opportunity. The IARE will continue to gain and promote improvements in the economic status of its members.

The most important economic problem of the IARE during the next generation is likely to be that of stimulating the expansion of employment of Negro railroad workers. Labor Union policies must be operated to encourage the expansion of the Negro. Our survey of Labor Union rules leads to the conclusion that we must develop a system which will

The Negro Railroad Labor represent all crafts of workers, including shop-helpers, freight handlers, station employees, track workers, shop workers, and shop labors. The LARE is, widening the scope of benefits for these workers. The betterment of your working conditions will be obtained. We are extending to you an invitation to join us in this movement. A special dispensation is on, only $2.50 to join and $2.50 per month. Take advantage of this great opportunity and join today. You owe your support to this great movement. Join Today! protect the essential interest of our members. This problem of stimulating Negro employment will depend in a large measure upon the members. It is often said that the railroad men expect to work until they reach the retirement age. Consequently, in a period such as this when this movement is of great concern to you, it is your responsibility to support the LARE, and those within the organization, who promise you this nation wide movement.

Fraternally yours,

General Chairman

LET'S PLAY IT SAFE!

The Negro railroad workers of this road are expecting a change in the conditions under which they work.

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company have purchased the properties of Atlanta, Birmingham & Coast Railroad Company effective January 1, 1946.

The change in companies is of foremost importance to the Negro employees. Of particular interest is the policy which the new company will follow.

In a communicate with Arthur Lewis who calls attention to the fact that the ACL Working Conditions are similar to those of the AB&C, and the the employees will be governed under the same agreements. However, a change may occur.

Unemployment is a threat which may affect each employee on this road. There may be a period when workers formerly employed by the AB&C will have to be discharged inorder to meet the program of the new company. The first months of this year will demand that each worker show the best performance of work possible and every man knows that the better he work and the less he lay off, the more his employer will keep him employed.

We must try to get better working conditions, we must expand our ability to bargain with the new company. We do not want to suffer from discrimination by our employer.

In order that we may prosper and advance under the ruling of this new company we must work together more closely than we did with the AB&C, for our interest and

For the past year we have been engaged in some outstanding plans about the serious injustices imposed on us. Such a program was expensive. I would like to thank each of you for your support and co-operation during this drive.

There will be a continuous effort on our part to obtain equal rights for our members. We urge every man, to do his utmost so that this program will be carried out. We need your co-operation, and your support. Observing the monthly reports, I find that a decrease in membership, we extend an invitation to all former members who have become dissatisfied, to rejoin today.

THE BRAKEMAN AND SWITCHMAN

protection. There is going to be plenty of room for co-operation.

We must co-opeate with the new company, for it helps toward a final understanding. If we share these common views, with the company now, all will be good in the long run. Quoting a old say- "A first impression is the last impression", so let us as a group impress the ACL, and we will be more able to advance.

KEEPING WITH THE NEW YEAR

It is a good thing to observe the New Year. It is a mere marking of time, and season, and the custom of making merry together. It reminds a man of all the past happening of the year, and it helps one to think and plan for the future.

But there is a better thing than the observance of New Year, and that is making resolutions, and most important keeping them.

I resolve to forget what the world owes me, and think what I owe the world; I resolve to put my rights in the background and do more than my duty toward my fellowmen; I resolve to put away my book of complaints against my fellowmen, and look around for a place to sow happiness; I resolve to be more efficient in fullfilling my office as General Chairman; I resolve to bear in mind the things that other people have to bear in there hearts; I resolve to make a grave for my ugly thoughts and a garden for kindly feelings; I resolve not only to keep my resolutions for a day but for always.

Willis Ross

General Chairman

A WORK CREED

If you work in a profession, in heaven's name work for it. If you live by a profession live for it. Help advance your co-worker. Respects the great power that protects you, that surrounds you with the advantages of organization, and makes it possible for you to achieve results. Speak well for it. Stand for it. Stand for your organization.

Emphasizing the word co-operation which is inherent an American tradition. It is the basic in every truly successful line of human achievement. A local is composed of members, united by a common end, but separated by varying problems. The word co-operation is used almost as though it were magic, as if, when by some happy chance we should achieve a state of co-operation all our troubles will disappear. We know well that if we would work together, nine-tenths of our difficulties would disappear. But co-operation is confusing. Each group wants its opponents to co-operate with it, unfortunately each group uses an excuse for its own shortcomings, the statement that the otherside won't cooperate, forgetting that there must be a give & take attitude. CO-OPERATE!

FIREMAN AND HOSTLER HELPER

DECREASE IN MEMBERS IS COSTLY TO THE IARE

The wave of members who stop paying dues is an indication that men are restless; they are discontinued and it is very difficult to understand just exactly why they cannot reason the matter out with the members of their local, or with their Local Chairman, or with their General Chairman, and use every means possible to bring about an understanding without lapsing out of the organization.

There is nothing worse for Unions than for its members to lapse out! There may be a reason for failing to pay dues and assessments, but it is stubborn and unreasonable when no attempt is made to have a conference, and bring about a settlement of the misunderstanding.

The man who believes in settling disputes across the table, makes the best and most loyal member. They have common sense and they understand they cannot gain as a result of refusing to co-operate.

The IARE is law abiding, and hold their members! interest first, the work it has done has brought happiness, into the homes of its members.

Some members receive benefits and contribute nothing in payment of those benefits. In other words, they want everything without contributing towards helping to pay for the many expenses incurred in bringing about legislation and protection.

The membership of a union cannot impose on its officers every whim of every member. The strength of the IARE depends on its members, carrying out certain interest of the IARE. For improvement in conditions there must be an agreement between the members and the officers. The officers of a union by virture of their selection, must assume the obligation to perform, and the members of the union are morally bound to support the officers in performing. The IARE was not organized for misunderstanding but to avoid it. There is no organization that can progress if its members do not co-operate. Co-operationiis very essential, on the part of the officers and the members. Let's eliminate the evils that beset our local, and bring success to it by co-operating.

A HOLIDAY MESSAGE

Again the Joyous season is with us--the season for good will toward all mankind which we hope will some day form the basis for a new era throughout the entire world.

It is in keeping with this spirit of good will that the Women's Auxiliary to the International Association of Railway Employees extend special greetings to the men of this great organization--men who have given us a heritage of which we are very proud.

At the last, convention held in August of this year, we were able to hold fast to the remnants of a fading Auxiliary and with these remnants we have set forth on a program which we hope will strengthen the Auxiliary and give you a different picture of women as partners in your efforts to promote more favorable working conditions on the railroads.

To date you have made many gains through a united front in this direction and though we are proud of these milestones of progress, we are not content to rest upon your laurels. It is our desire to encourage intelligent use of all available resources among all women who realize the need of contributing their time, effort, and money for the men of their homes who by choice serve one of the country's greatest industries, namely the railroads.

Because of this desire, the officers and members of the Auxiliary have succeeded in organizing new auxiliaries, reviving some which for many reasons had become inactive. They look forward to seeing you at the next convention with concrete evidence of having served will. May we extend to you our greetings and best wishes for a happy New Year. May you find spiritual strength and personal self reliance to help implement the true spirit of Christ--the spirit of Peace and Good Will--the gratitude for progress made in obtaining those rights and privileges which are rightfully due you not only for your advantage but also for the perpetuation of jobs for your children. In writing Proverbs Solomon said "A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children." What greater inheritance can you leave your children's children than that of a good job with good pay and good working conditions?

THE NECESSITY OF A LADIES AUXILIARY

The Ladies Auxiliary is necessary from many standpoints. Space will not allow me to go into details on all points. There may be points that cannot be taken under this subject, but I hope that each reader will grasp the idea as to why it is NECESSARY for a Ladies Auxiliary.

As an educational program, the Ladies Auxiliary is necessary, in order that our wives, our daughters our mothers, as well as our friends should become acquainted with our problems respecting our working conditions.

Our wives should realize that they have a part to play as pointed out in the Scripture, in Genesis 2:18, of which a man's wife is called his "Help meet." Both husband and wife should realize that because of the increasing problems of life, we have far more to do than to just REAR large families.

Every woman should realize that when her husband is affected by any problem, she is affected too. Therefore, the Ladies Auxiliary is necessary as a union, so that they may perfect plans among themselves in order that they may present their plans to the parential body, or to the Company Official, or State Official, or anyone else who would have to do with the welfare of their husband's livelihood, of which would affect them.

GREETINGS TO THE LADIES AUXILIARY AND THE PARENT BODY

As the year is based on the earth's circuit around the sun-which has no beginning or end. So is this business of living. The kind of living depends upon the economic opportunity that is to be had. It is our job to see that we share equally in the available jobs especially those for which we are prepared. We want to be like the five wise Virgins, and be ready when the opportunity comes to help.

We appreciate the cooperation we have received in the past, and we hope for continued cooperation and good will.

NEWS RELEASE

It was released by the Office of Price Administration that President Truman's Executve Order continuing the Fair Employment Practice Committee, which was issuded Dec. 20, contained the statement that it had come to his attention that many "loyal and qualified employees have been refused transfer and reemployment by employing agencies solely because of race and creed."

Through this bill the Negro has been able to prosecute unions which ignored antidiscrimination laws. This Committee was established by President Roosevelt's Executive Order, in June 1941. The Order provided that "there shall be no discrimination in the employment of any person in de defense industries or in Government by reason of race, cfeed, color, or national origin...".

It is not difficult to understand why the opposing forces demanded a rehearing on this bill, and attempt to dismiss the bill.

The Committee has widening opportunties for employment of Negroes. Negroes have been able to obtain employment in a number of departments and independent agencies, which had previously refused Negro workers. It would have been a great unjustice to many thousands of citizens if the opportunties issued under the FEPC had been taken from them.

The National Office of the OPA stated that the great majority of Negro employees, who obtained employment under this bill have proved competent and faithful, and that they owe them a real debt of gratitude for their loyalty and good performance.

Employment opportunties are being opened for Negro Employees, I urge you to strengthen this movement. The IARE is one of the many Locals which is helping this movement, I strongly urge you to take steps to aid the IARE, which is also opening employment opportunties to you.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

IT is difficult to fix an exact V-Day for CIO's great victory over wage-cutting and union-busting, just as it was difficult to say which days could most appropriately be called V-E Day and V-J Day.

But for our part—rather than wait for all the die-hards to capitulate and for all mopping-up operations to be completed—we'll arbitrarily pick the day when the U. S. Steel Corp. signed up with the United Steelworkers of America for a wage increase of 18½ cents an hour.

For on this day, the back of heavy industry's war against labor was broken. The lesser steel companies began immediately to fall in line. A pattern of union acceptance and substantial wage increases was set in the most basic of all industries.

It became a foregone conclusion that the CIO would sooner or later win equally substantial increases in its other strikes, and that the big business conspiracy to wreck the unions and keep down wages had been defeated.

The full extent of CIO's great victory in the greatest of all industrial struggles cannot be measured in dollars and cents alone.

The increase in the weekly wages of the individual worker means plenty to him and his family in more tolerable living standards.

The many millions of dollars that will eventually be added to the purchasing power of all American labor means plenty to our whole society.

It will be passed on to farmers, business and professional people, to the whole community, in a greater demand for goods and services, resulting in increased production, more employment and expanding national prosperity.

against what was in store for America in the event of its defeat.

After the first world war, there were inflationary price increases running far ahead of wages, the big industries launched an open-shop drive, and from the defeat of the unions followed wage-cutting, uninhibited profiteering, unemployment and finally the great depression.

This tragic history was on the way to repeating itself, if it had not been for the militancy and determination of the CIO.

A concerted postwar open-shop drive was foreshadowed during the war, when the steel companies and other large employers entered stipulations that they were obeying War Labor Board directives for the check-off and maintenance of membership only under protest and for the duration of the war.

Once the war ended, there was every evidence of a planned strategy on the part of the big corporations to hold up reconversion, to reject collective bargaining and to force a showdown with the unions, for the purpose of destroying union security, of breaking the unions or "teaching them a lesson," as well as of keeping down wages.

But now the U. S. Steel Corp., in extending the existing contract, without changes except for increased wages, has for the first time voluntarily agreed to the checkoff and maintenance of membership. Union security has similarly been preserved in other contracts signed by CIO unions.

Although there are still a number of sharp struggles to fight with die-hard corporations, it can now safely be said that the back of the general union-wrecking conspiracy has been broken.

A lesson has been taught all

'SUPER-SENIORITY' TAKES RAP AT LEGION PARLEY

THE CIO found Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Veterans Administrator, in its corner and Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service head, modifying his adamant stand on "super-seniority" at the American Legion's Employment Committee Conference at Washington, D. C., this week.

Meyer Bernstein of the CIO Veterans Committee told the conference that real job security for ex-servicemen lay not in Selective Service's "super-seniority" for one year but in keeping jobs under union contracts. This was virtually echoed by Bradley.

The VA head declared that most veterans do not have reemployment rights and that the "employment of veterans is not a problem for the next year or the year after that."

It seemingly was obvious, to 200 Legion members, management and other guests, that the real protection of the veterans lay in union contracts guarding their seniority rights.

General Hershey was inching or being inched by the course of events over to CIO's corner. Last April he indicated to the Legion Employment Committee conference that Selective Service's "super-seniority" theory was part of the law, admitting only that such was not the case when he was cornered by questioning from CIO representatives.

This week he told the conference that he was willing to let the courts interpret the law, pinning his faith on a ruling that the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals has been asked to make in the case of Abraham Fishgold, veteran who was laid off for seven days by the Sullivan Dry Dock Co., Brooklyn, with other workers having insufficient seniority to keep them on the job when cutbacks came.

Bernstein pointed out that in any case Fishgold had no protection under Selective Service because more than a year elapsed since he went on the job.

conference. There are now 1,300,000 veterans weekly receiving readjustment allowances — unemployment insurance—under the GI Bill of Rights.

Bernstein pointed out that "the (Selective Service) law simply makes no provision whatever for the very servicemen who, being hurt in body or mind, made the greatest sacrifices in the war. This group if they are being reintegrated into industry, are going back, not as a matter of right, but as a grant, or as a result of collective bargaining."

The CIO representative said that the CIO had obtained contracts for employment of disabled veterans and was seeking others.

Bernstein quoted Selective Service's own figures showing that only 20% of all veterans have "even the beginning of employment rights," adding that under union contracts veterans who had temporary employment before going to war are credited with seniority rights.

SEE 6 MILLION JOBLESS!

THE warning of Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach this week that jobs must be found for six millions by June 30 reflected the concern of the Truman Administration over mounting unemployment.

This week Veterans Administrator Bradley characterized the unemployment ratio of three veterans to one civilian as a "critical emergency problem."

Employment Director Goodwin added that 3,300,000 discharged servicemen are registered with the U. S. Employment Service, and that another four million veterans will be seeking jobs in the next four months.

"Job applications have been increasing much more rapidly than job opportunities. The time has arrived for us to do something about it," Goodwin said.

STEEL WIN CLINCHED, PRICE BATTLE ON

By FRED d'AVILA

(See Other Stories—Pages 3, 4, 6 and 7)

THE conclusive victory of the CIO Steelworkers Union that won an 18½c an hour wage increase and continuation of union security clauses, and smashed the union-busting conspiracy of some of America's biggest employers, will be followed by an equally militant fight to defend real wages by extension of the price control act.

This was the word from Philip Murray, president of CIO and the Steelworkers, at a Pittsburgh meeting of the union's Wage Policy Committee this week. A committee resolution stated:

"It becomes our major immediate task to make sure that our success is not wiped out by any weakening in the battle for control of the price level.

"From the start of its campaign, the union has recognized that all of the objectives sought in our wage fight can be lost if the wage gains of American workers are wiped out by unjustifiable price increases granted to American industry."

Murray said that profits are so high that substantial wage increases without price increases still will give industry profits far in excess of pre-war levels.

Murray stressed the tremendous significance of the steel victory, result of a month-long strike which started Jan. 21 and shut down all but a few firms which agreed to pay the 18½c an hour raise asked by the union.

The victory not only cracked the log-jam holding up settlements in other industries which use steel, but also guaranteed that the union in peace will continue to be protected by security clauses written into contracts during the existence of the Natl. War Labor Board.

These include maintenance of membership and dues checkoff clauses—accepted by many manufacturers only on a temporary war basis.

The establishment of such clauses in the Steelworkers' contracts will help to set the pattern for all industry, and will make it virtually impossible for other managements to insist on other unions signing weaker agreements.

As The CIO NEWS went to press, the 18½c an hour increase had been OKed by firms employing about 500,000 workers—mostly in basic steel—with about 250,000 others in fabricating plants not yet back to work because employers had refused to grant the raise, largely due to questions about price adjustments. U. S. Steel and other basic producers have been guaranteed a price increase of about $5 a ton by the federal government.

Pointing out that a recent ruling of the Office of Economic Stabilization states that it is not necessary for the fabricators to obtain approval of wage increases as a preliminary step toward presenting claims for price adjustments, Murray said:

"The fabricators are engaged in a strike against the people. They have no moral or justifiable reason for continuing in this position. They assume no financial hazards in reaching agreement with our organization. Each employer is guaranteed his peacetime profits."

Murray said the union will not compromise its demand for 18½c an hour for fabricating workers. Pointing out that new fabricating contracts are being approved daily, he said that the entire industry probably will be signed up within the next two weeks.

Meanwhile, in a move to aid non-integrated steel companies, the union passed a resolution urging the Civilian Production Agency to reinstitute allocation of semi-finished steel supplies for these firms, and recommended establishment of a temporary labor-management committee to supervise the work.

In winning the largest wage increase for the greatest number of workers ever won by labor at one time, the CIO has won a great economic victory for all labor and all the American people.

But it has also won more than this.

Just as the full measure of the United Nations' victory must be taken against what would have resulted from a victory for fascism, so CIO's victory must be measured of membership only under protest and for the duration of the war.

A lesson has been taught all right by the CIO strikes. But it is a lesson to the corporations, that the CIO is strong enough to stop any open-shop drive.

Having fought for and won this great victory for higher wages and union security for all American labor, with AFL leaders largely "sitting it out", the CIO emerges with tremendously enhanced prestige, which can now be translated into a great expansion of organizational strength and political influence.

Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, which found that a World War II veteran was not entitled to the job of another employe with greater seniority.

Like Gen. Bradley, the CIO is concerned about all unemployed veterans, able-bodied and disabled alike, Bernstein told the

DOLLAR SHRINKERS AT WORK

By C. W. FOWLER

THE frightening extent of the drive now building up against price control was made clearly evident in the first week of hearings before the House Banking Committee on HR 5270, which renews the act for one year from June 30.

Three main forces are working against renewal of the act—working sometimes in concert and sometimes separately, but with an overall plan to wreck price control and rob workers of wage gains won since V-J Day and before.

These three main forces are the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and other employers, the Republican Party in Congress, and its counterpart among some of the reactionary polltax Democrats.

Standing up to this offensive are Chester Bowles, newly appointed head of the Office of Economic Stabilization, and the unions and the organized consumers. The first week of the fight against inflation has been conducted by Bowles and Paul Porter, his successor as head of OPA. CIO and other progressive groups are set to join in with testimony favoring HR 5270 as the hearings go on.

Bowles, who makes a competent, easy witness despite constant baiting from the Republican side (with a not too active defense from the Democrats), told the House Committee bluntly:

"If we remove controls now—or too soon—we'll have one of the most terrifying economic crashes in the history of this country. Frankly, we underestimated after V-J Day when we thought controls could be taken off quickly. We feel now that a one year extension to June 30, 1947, is an absolute necessity."

Some idea of what could happen if certain industrial interests have their way in abolishing control was given by Bowles when he revealed that Henry Ford, II, asked OPA for a 55% increase in the price of his cars a few months ago.

This figure, Bowles told the committee, was based on Ford's claim that he was losing $300 per car— a figure that was based on a production level of about 1,000 cars a day. Obviously, Bowles pointed out, this was far below Ford's plant capacity.

A further glimpse into the extent of the drive against price control is given in a Federated Press estimate of the amount the NAM is spending on its current full-page advertising campaign, which FP set at a "conservative" $950,000. The NAM ads are simple. They call for abolition of OPA on the ground that controls hold up production.

This claim was attacked by Bowles in a radio speech in which he called it "one of the most irresponsible arguments that has ever been attempted." Production was at the highest levels in history during the war, as were profits, he pointed out—despite price control.

The GOP's part in the inflation drive is obvious in watching the behavior of the Republicans on the House Committee and in reading statements put out by GOP people outside it.

In the committee, their tactic is to stall and to raise endless picayune objections. Regardless of logic and despite the number of times they are answered, the objections are raised time and time again for the sole purpose of sabotage.

In a long series of charts and graphs, Bowles showed the committee that profits of all U. S. business were never higher and failures never fewer than they have been under price control, declaring: "OPA price policies practically guarantee any industry against loss—especially since V-J Day."

VICTORY AND ITS LESSONS

In all American labor's struggles, there has never been a victory so sweeping as that achieved by the CIO in the steel, auto, electrical, textile, clothing, oil and other industries, and in course of achievement by many other CIO unions.

It is true the victory is not yet complete. Not all the steel companies are yet signed up. General Motors, General Electric, Westinghouse, Intl. Harvester, meat packing, rubber and other companies are still holding out.

But with the recent agreements signed by U. S. Steel and other big steel companies for an 18½c increase, and with similarly substantial increases granted by Ford, Chrysler, RCA, General Motors Electrical Division, American Woolen and many other big companies in major industries, final and complete victory is not in doubt.

CIO's victory is its greatest in history, not only for the size of the wage increases won and the number of workers benefited but also for its defeat of a dangerous big-business conspiracy to destroy union security and union conditions.

The union security provisions of checkoff and maintenance of membership, obtained during the war under WLB directives, are now assured of continuance. In the steel industry, for instance, the companies, by extending existing contracts, have for the first time accepted these security provisions under voluntary collective bargaining.

Outstanding credit is due to President Murray and the other CIO leaders, whose brilliant strategy charted the way to victory and marshalled the hosts of labor.

But the success of their leadership has depended and still depends upon the solidarity and determination of the millions of rank-and-file CIO members.

It is they who man the picket lines and endure the hardships. It is their devotion and persistence in following through the line of action on which they have democratically determined that wins labor's battles.

Theirs is the victory and theirs the chief credit in the most solidly organized and most successful strikes American labor has ever conducted.

But this is not only labor's but a people's victory. One of the greatest contributing factors has been the amazing degree of general community support—from political and church leaders, farmers, veterans, professional people and small businessmen.

The CIO was widely recognized as leading the people's battle for higher living standards for all Americans, and because of this it received the people's support.

Looking ahead, it is obvious there are many battles still to be fought. The whole strength of the movement must be mobilized to bring to terms the many employers who are still holding out and bucking the tide.

There is still the acute danger of vicious anti-union legislation being passed by Congress, to deprive labor of many of its gains.

There is also the most immediate danger of inflationary increases in living costs robbing the workers of their hard-won wage raises. One of CIO's greatest campaigns must now be conducted to maintain OPA price controls and to keep down living costs.

The new strength and prestige achieved by the CIO through its victories must immediately be turned to advantage through great union organizing campaigns and through the intensification of its political activities.

We cannot rest on our oars. Only by going forward with renewed energy and determination can we consolidate our victory and reap its full advantages for labor and all the American people.

HOSIERY CONVENTION: Delegates to the 34th annual convention of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers meeting last week in Philadelphia voted to demand a 12½c an hour "cost-of-living" increase from 35 full-fashioned hosiery manufacturers through the country now under contract with the union.

The Federation, an affiliate of the CIO Textile Workers, represents employes in most of the major hosiery plants.

The convention also voted to increase a present hourly minimum of 55c for day workers and 50c for beginners to 70c. Federation Pres. Alexander McKeown said that the additional 12½c increase demanded, added to the 6c increase won last fall in an agreement signed with the Full Fashioned Hosiery Mfgs. of America, Inc., would bring the pay rate up to the standard 18½c formula set in the steel strike settlement.

SERVICE FIRST IS UAW RADIO AIM

Development of public service radio programs, free of some of the inhibitions that have limited most commercial broadcasting, will be a first concern of the CIO Auto Workers Union FM station in Detroit, Pres. R. J. Thomas said this week.

A permit for operation of the station was granted last week by the Federal Communications Commission. Applications for six other UAW FM stations are pending.

3,000 HONOR SLAIN PICKETS

More than 3,000 people this week crowded into the state armory at Peoria, Ill., to pay tribute to two labor martyrs who were shot in the back by armed thugs of George P. McNear's Toledo Peoria & Western Railroad, Feb. 6, and to vow that those responsible for the cold-blooded murders should not go unpunished.

Union delegations attended the joint CIO-AFL-Railroad Brotherhood meeting from all over the midwest, to honor the two men, Irwin Paschon and Arthur Browne.

Paschon and Browne were killed when 16 TP&W guards fired from an armored train into a crowd of pickets at a railroad crossing near Gridley, Ill.

CIO, AFL Make Joint Appeal for Wages

People's support of labor's fight for a living wage and a better America was asked in a joint statement this week by the AFL Central Labor Council and the CIO Council at Cincinnati.

CIO MINE, MILL UNION CALLS NATION-WIDE AS&R STRIKE

SOME 7,000 workers in 18 plants of the American Smelting & Refining Co. are set for a nation-wide strike called for Feb. 25 by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers to back up demands for a living wage and national bargaining, the union announced this week.

When the AS&R workers go out, they will add their forces to the strike ranks of the 20,000 employes in the brass and copper fabricating industry, 65% shut down since the first week in February by the strike of six MMSW locals in Connecticut and Buffalo, N. Y.

Also on strike are MMSW workers at the Laurel Hills plant of the Phelps Dodge Refining Corp. in Long Island City, N. Y., where Local 541 has been trying to negotiate a new contract since April, 1944, and where the company has stubbornly refused to comply with a War Labor Board order issued Apr. 5, 1945. The strike started Feb. 3.

Phelps-Dodge locals at El Paso, Tex., and at Douglas, Bisbee, and Morenci, Ariz. have also voted to strike.

Meanwhile, in Utah picketing continues at 17 plants of the Utah Copper Co., American Smelting & Refining Co. and U. S. Smelting Refining & Mining Co., where 5,000 workers of the Big Three Utah copper companies are on strike for a living wage.

In the Connecticut and N. Y. brass strike, where 20,000 workers have been out since early February, picket lines have been covering the gates of the silent brass mills, with nobody permitted to go through without a pass from the union. The strike followed eight months of fruitless conferences with the companies involved —Chase Brass & Copper, Scovill Mfg. and four plants of American Brass.

Overall strike strategy plans were drawn up at the MMSW's executive board meeting held recently in Chicago. The board voted for the AS&R strike after a Federal Conciliator tried without success to break the deadlock in negotiations at a conference between union and company officials at Perth Amboy, N. J.

The union is demanding a 30% an hour general increase and uniform wage rates in all plants throughout the country.

VETS SHUN STRIKE-BREAKING OUTFIT

INITIAL bid of the Veterans and Patriots Federation of Labor for the support of the veterans in Tennessee ended in failure last week when ex-servicemen revolted against the anti-union practices of the outfit, branded by CIO leaders in the state as "following the footsteps, or attempting to, of the Christian American Society and similar groups."

Answering an ad in the Chattanooga newspapers offering training for "high priced and highly skilled jobs," the veterans were directed by the VPFL to two Chattanooga plants where the CIO Steelworkers were on strike.

1935-45: The First Ten Years

In November, 1935, the CIO was formed, and in a little more than ten years it has secured six million members, substantially raised levels of living and employment conditions, strengthened democratic patterns throughout our nation, and forged the weapons that defeated world fascism.

The CIO has the same ideals as when it started. It uses the same methods. It is opposed by the same kind of enemies and it must overcome similar difficulties. The way ahead will therefore be clearer if we pause to look back over the hard road we have travelled.

Our organizations were, for the most part, born of the misery of lay-offs, wage cuts, breadlines, and the speed-up of the early 1930's. Workers wanted to earn a decent living for their families—and they couldn't at the wages offered. They wanted to be treated decently by the foremen—but they had no safeguard without a union. They wanted steady jobs, year after year, but many millions were unemployed, and workers could be fired for no good reason at a moment's notice. They wanted relief from the terrific speed-up, to be treated like people, not parts of a machine. But even more important perhaps, believing in the ideals of American democracy, they wanted a voice in the important decisions that shaped their lives. The downward plunge to the depths of the depression in 1932 had convinced them that something was wrong. They wanted to wipe out the evils that had led to such suffering.

They were right in thinking that unions were an answer. Big Business in the 1920's had had a free hand. The huge companies in steel, autos, electrical manufacturing, rubber, meat packing, and the other modern mass production industries had managed matters as seemed best to them. They had kept

Issues In The Steel Strike

We reprint excerpts from a radio address given on February 4th by Dr. Liston Pope, Chairman of the Religious Associates.

We need production very badly and very quickly, both for our own sakes and in order to meet our opportunities and responsibilities to the rest of the world. Most nations are looking to us as the source of tools and basic materials for the rebuilding of their economies, and our inability to supply them quickly will lead to unrest and bitterness around the world.

The urgency of the situation does not mean, however, that the steel strike must be settled at any price. The terms of settlement might conceivably be as disastrous as the effects of a long-continued strike would be. If the wage demands of the Union are not met, other wage increases will be doubly hard to achieve, and vice versa. If the ceiling price of steel is seriously altered, the entire structure of price control will reverberate and may conceivably fall. . . . In short, this strike must be settled carefully and with foresight, or the settlement may easily do more harm than good. "Peace at any price" may be a higher price than the workers, the industry, or the public can afford to pay. An industrial "Munich" will only delay, not prevent, further industrial warfare. . . .

The Federal Council of Churches, along with many of the denominations which comprise its membership, has insisted from its beginning in 1908 that the Church must be concerned for justice in industrial relations, and it has sought to define in general terms the principles for which the Church must stand. For example, the most recent revision of its Social Creed calls for "a wider and fairer distribution of wealth; a living wage, as a minimum, and above this a just share for the worker in the product of industry and agriculture." Similar affirmations have been made by spokesmen of the Catholic and Jewish religions, and representatives of the three great religious bodies have joined on many occasions to call for a more just industrial order and a more equitable distribution of its benefits.

Churchmen have not always confined themselves to vague statements or general principles. For example, in answer to the issues posed in the Steel Strike of 1919, the Interchurch World Movement launched a thorough-going inquiry into conditions prevailing in the steel industry at that time, including such abuses as the 12 hour day and the 7 day week, and the flagrant violation of civil liberties in Western Pennsylvania. The report of its findings helped to make industrial history and to modify or eliminate some of the worst conditions in American industry. . . .

It remains for churchmen, including men and women of all faiths, including hundreds of thousands of union members, and countless representatives of management and officials of government — it remains for churchmen to submit the present dispute to examination under the standards of justice and equity, and to help bring an early solution for the good of our nation and of the world.

You have been receiving FAITH AT WORK for several months. What do you think of it? Has it been of value to you? Do you wish to continue receiving it? We would appreciate your suggestions and criticisms.

We believe that you, as religious leaders, agree with our principles. We believe also, that you share our sense of urgency. Issues of tremendous moment are at stake in the coming Congressional elections. Active support is needed to elect progressive measures.

Religious Leaders Aid Strikers

From every quarter come reports of preachers, priests and rabbis doing everything in their power to give sympathy and support to the striking workers. Men and women fighting for a fair wage and a decent way of life have received encouragement from this affirmation of their purpose.

The religious forces have joined the labor movement on the picket lines, they have spoken, written, advertised, been photographed with the pickets, organized aid committees on their behalf. Faith is finding expression in effective action.

In Philadelphia, in Flint, in Los Angeles, in Chicago, in all the cities of the nation, outstanding religious leaders have made public their belief in labor's cause. They have stood firmly on the side of the people.

Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, prominent spokesman for the Catholic Church has said: "I am disgusted and dismayed by the unreasoning attack that has been made upon labor by a powerful and vociferous section of our press. With what is apparently deliberate malice they have embarked upon a campaign of distortion that has not yet reached its peak. . . .

"American business like business elsewhere has not yet learned a very simple thing: the dollar is not Almighty God; but that human beings are very precious. This should be a very obvious principle, but those who advocate it are branded as radicals."

Dr. Alfred W. Swan spoke from the pulpit of the first Congregational Church in Madison, Wisconsin. "What goes on as free enterprise for the enterpriser may be regarded as one of the last survivals of tyranny for the man who is kept in the dark and who has no effective choices in determining the destiny of himself and his family. This it seems to me, is the crux of the matter, and is at the center of the revolution, quiet or tempestuous as it may appear, through which we are inevitably passing."

Committees Have Been Formed

A committee of citizens in Detroit, including ministers, priests and rabbis, studied thoroughly the issues involved in the General Motors strike. They found that the facts vindicated the claims of the United Automobile Workers on every count.

ISSUES for ACTION

PROBLEM	ISSUE	ACTION REQUIRED	INFORMATION
Price Control ●	Inflationary pressures are at an all-time high. Price and rent ceilings must be maintained until the supply of goods can meet the demand. OPA, essential to the fight against inflation, expires June 30th unless Congress approves its extension.	HR 5270 which continues OPA until June 1947, is scheduled for immediate hearings in the House Banking and Currency Committee. Urge Congressmen to support bill actively, stop disastrous inflation and new depression, now.	Office of Price Administration, Labor Office, Washington 25, D. C.
Minimum Wage ●	Veterans offered less than 65c an hour are reenlisting for better pay. Pepper-Hook Bill puts floor of 65c an hour on wages now, 70c after two years, 75c by 1950. Senate Labor and Education Committee has reported the bill favorably and Senate action is now being taken.	Tell Congressmen, Senators, immediate passage of HR 3914, S 1349 is essential for decent standard of living. $26 a week will provide a bare subsistence wage. Extra pay needed for food, clothing and shelter cannot be inflationary.	National Committee for a Fair Minimum Wage, Bishop Bernard Sheil, Chairman, 130 Third Street, S. E., Washington, D. C.
Housing	Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, S. 1592, sets forth a clear-cut national housing policy. It establishes a unified housing agency, authorizes research, improves FHA insurance system, provides Federal aid for slum clearance, establishes rural housing program, etc. Hearings have been completed in the Senate Banking Committee. The Patman Bill, HR 4761, was an anti-inflationary measure. The House Banking and Currency Committee cut the bill's effectiveness, reporting it without provision for price control on present housing.	Write your Congressmen to vote for these bills and urge early hearings. Rally all veterans who need reasonably priced housing to support this Bill actively.	National Public Housing Conference, Washington, D. C. "There's No Place Like Home," CIO PAC, 205 East 42nd St., NYC. "The Veterans' Emergency Housing Program," a report by Wilson Wyatt, Housing Expediter, Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, Washington, D. C.
Unemployment Compensation	Mounting unemployment has not moved Congress to assist individuals over reconversion period although it has liberally financed corporations.	The Kilgore (S. 1274) and Forand (H. R. 3891) bills provided a maximum of $25 weekly unemployment compensation for 26 week maximum period. Passed by Senate without $25 guarantee, the House Ways and Means Committee refuses to consider companion bill. A petition, No. 11, to discharge the bill has been introduced; get your Representative signed.	Social Security Bulletin, Social Security Board, Washington, D. C.
Anti-Labor Bills ●	Anti-labor legislation is being rushed through in record time while constructive measures are stalled and filibustered. The Case Bill was passed by the House without public hearings and penalizes strikers, forces arbitration, restricts organizing and revives the hated labor injunction now banned. The Hobbs Bill outlaws picketing, fundamental union activities under guise of "anti-racketeering," was passed by the House and is now in the Senate Education and Labor Committee.	Wire Senators to defeat Case Bill no matter how amended. Tell Senators the Hobbs Bill, the Norton-Ellender Bill, the May-Arends Bill, any anti-labor legislation will hinder, not help labor-management situation. Urge your Congressmen to work and vote against these bills and any substitutes.	National Lawyers Guild, 16 E. 41st St., NYC; CIO, 718 Jackson Pl. NW, Washington, D. C. "The Truth about Unions" by Leo Huberman, published by Pamphlet Press, NYC.
FEPC	There is need for permanent federal agency to prevent discrimination in employment. Enemy ammunition did not differentiate between Catholic, Protestant and Jew, white and Negro, native and foreign-born. Neither should employers or unions. Bill, killed recently by filibuster of Southern Senators, could have been saved by cloture (two-thirds of Senate voting to limit debate).	H. R. 2232, previously reported favorably by House Labor Committee, is bottlenecked in House Rules Committee, which is dominated by Southern Democrats. Urge representatives to sign Discharge Petition 4 to get the bill on the House floor for debate.	Legislative office, Southern Conference for Human Welfare, 935 G Pl., Washington, D. C.; National Concil for Permanent FEPC, 930 F St NW, Washington, D. C.; National Federation for Constitutional Liberties, 205 E. 42nd St., NYC.
Abolition of Poll Tax	Poll Tax disfranchises 10 million Southern citizens, makes possible the election of men like Rankin, Cox by less than 10% of people of their districts. H. R.7 passed the House and was reported favorably by the Senate Judiciary Committee along with the O'Mahoney-Hatch Constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax, which will take many years to ratify.	Wire Senator Barkley to bring up HR 7 for debate immediately, before the constitutional amendment. An attempt will be made to filibuster. Ask your Senators to commit themselves to the democratic procedure of cloture (limitation of debate).	The National Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax, 127 B St. SE, Washington, D. C.
Veterans	Minimum wages price control, housing, FEPC, full employment, abolition of poll tax, etc. affect all or a substantial majority of veterans.	Arrange meetings with local veterans groups on veterans' problems. Press for Federal action on temporary housing and enlarged education facilities to relieve present crowded state of colleges.	American Veterans Committee, 554 Madison Ave.; CIO Council, 1133 Broadway, NYC; National Conference of Union Labor Legionaires, 55 West 42nd St., NYC.
Seamen's Bill of Rights	Merchant seamen provided heroic war service for nation. More than 6,000 were casualties of enemy action. They have been awarded nearly 400,000 war zone bars, 85,000 combat bars, 400 mariners medals (equivalent of Purple Heart) and 117 Distinguished Service medals.	Bill (H.R. 2346) would give merchant seamen benefits similar to those granted soldiers, sailors, marines. Disabled seamen would get hospitalization, vocational rehabilitation, disability benefits. All war service seamen would get educational benefits, employment assistance, guaranteed loans, etc.	National Maritime Union, 346 W. 17th St., N. Y. C. 11.
Atomic Power ●	The McMahon bill, S. 1717, is the only atomic energy bill under study, which maintains the principle of government responsibility to the people. There is a danger that the May-Johnson bill, temporarily halted, which sets up a commission responsible to no one, may be revived unless there is public pressure.	President Truman favors the McMahon bill. It is extremely important that citizens voice their approval. Wire and write the President and Senator McMahon.	Federation of Atomic Scientists, 1018 Vermont N.W., Washington D. C. Committee for Atomic Information, 161 F Street, Washington, D. C.
Germany	Heavy industry in American zone of occupation is reported as being sustained and rebuilt, rather than removed to former Nazi-occupied countries. Potsdam Agreement needs support.	Urge Congress to demand that Administration carry out Potsdam Agreement, that German heavy industry be completely removed from German control. Demand strict allied control of education.	"Germany Is Our Problem" by Henry Morgenthau, jr. Former Sec. of Treasury.

British Loan ●	Loan will bring increased world trade and prosperity. Alternative is division of world into viciously competing economic blocs which would threaten international peace.	Hearings will start soon in the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. Support of loan should be stressed in messages to Senator Barkley and other members of the Committee.	"Questions and Answers on the Anglo-American Financial Agreement" Director of Monetary Research, U. S. Treasury Dept., Washington D. C.
Palestine	A trickle of 1500 immigrants a month is being allowed into Palestine while the joint U. S. British Inquiry Commission completes its investigation.	House and Senate have passed resolutions calling for immigration into Palestine but strong Administration action is required.
Colonial Affairs	British, Dutch, and French foreign offices with help of U. S. lend-lease materials are attempting to crush peoples' revolts—Indonesians in Java, Annamites in Indo-China.	Urge Congressional censure of Secty. of State Byrne's suggestion that lend-lease materials could be used to crush colonial peoples, providing U. S. labels were first removed.	Institute of Pacific Relations, 1 E. 54th, N. Y.
Spain	U. S. includes airplanes among its exports to Fascist government of Dictator British lives in Mediterranean, while "Blue Division" actively fought Red Franco. Phoney wartime neutrality of Franco government cost American and Army.	Secure your Congressman's support of House Resolution 312 to break relations with Franco Spain. Boycott Spanish goods.	Committee for Spanish Freedom, 55 W. 42nd St N. Y. C.
Argentina	Fascism flourishes in Argentina as pointed out by State Department and Spruille Braden, former U. S. Ambassador to Argentina and present Undersecetary of State.	Urge President Truman, Congress to demand severance of relations with Argentina, letters of encouragement to Braden for his progressive views.	Blue Book on Argentina, State Dept., Washington, D. C.; Nations Associates, Inc., 20 Vesey St., N. Y. C.
Civil Liberties	House Committee on Un-American activities is conducting new witch hunt in the style of Martin Dies. Rep. Wood has introduced H. R. 4775 to intimidate radio commentators by requiring sponsors to state political affiliation and making them liable to prosecution within 500 miles of station.	Dissolution of committee can be accomplished by getting 218 signatures to discharge petition on House resolution 376 which will permit consideration of resolution 58 to abolish committee. H. R. 4776 attacks fundamental right of free speech and must be opposed. Now in the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Write Committee head Rep. Clarence Lea and your Congressman.	Citizens United to Abolish the Wood-Rankin Conmittee, Suite 170, Hotel Astor, N. Y.C., Veterans Anti-Discrimination Committee, Hotel Diplomat, N. Y. C.
Child Care	In 1940 over ½ of America's children lived in families with incomes of less than $20 a week. Most received inadequate health care. Results dramatized in rejection of 40% of men examined for military service; 33% of WAC applicants. 31,000 babies' lives would be saved every year, if infant mortality rate for all states were brought to level of best state.	Bill (S. 1318) (H.R. 3922) now in the Senate Education and Labor Committee, would provide $100 million for pregnancy, infancy and child care, aid to crippled children, dental care, etc., through states. Get your Senators to press for immediate hearings. School Lunch bill (H.R. 3370) last year missed defeat by 1 vote. Wire your representative to support this bill for the health of our children. Room 407, 654 Madison Ave., NYC, National Child Service Bureau, (School Lunch), Parents Magazine, 52 Vanderbilt Ave., NYC.
Health	Modern Science makes it possible to prolong life, reduce misery and suffering. Principal problem remains the distribution of medical care, that scientific advances may be within the reach of all. Wagner-Murray and Dingell bills assure adequate public health service to all parts of the nation.	S. 1606 and H.R. 4730 need pressure from the people. Now in the Senate Education and Labor Committee and the House Interstate Commerce Committee, they remove $20 million limit on Federal grants to state for social services, provide for training personnel, allow Federal grants for medical service for those on relief, make grants for research, establish nation-wide health insurance system.	Physicians Forum, 510 Madison Ave., N. Y. Ask for "A Prescription for Your Doctor" and pamphlet "For the People's Health," illustrated by Crockett Johnson.
Radio Control	The people own the air waves. Unwarranted exploitation of publicly owned airwaves and abuse of listening public can be corrected by public awareness of its rights. Federal Communications Commission is now licensing new FM (Frequency Modulation) stations, renewing AM licenses. Public should have opportunity to be heard on applications and renewals.	Bill (H.R. 4314) introduced by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D.-N.Y.) provides for adequate public notice before license renewals, would have FCC prescribe standards of public service broadcasting, would require more complete reports by broadcasters. Urge your Congressman to support the bill. FCC has arranged hearings on applications in many communities. Write FCC for information. Arrange to testify.	"Report on Radio Broadcasting" by the National Citizens PAC, 205 E. 42nd, New York 17, N. Y.
Carry Back Repeal	Bailey Bill (HR 5180) repeals provision of present tax law that guarantees corporations profits at the 1936-39 level through Treasury refunds. Thus industry can earn while idle and has no incentive to settle strikes or begin production.	Bill is now in House Ways and Means Committee. Write your Congressman to support it.
United States Employment Service	A Federal USES is vital in this reconversion period. Murray-Ramspeck bill continues it until June ,1947.	Passed by the House, hearings are now being held in the Senate Education and Labor Committee. Write Senators and Committee head, Senator James E. Murray.
Worker's Protection	The Gwynne bill (H.R. 2788) would make it impossible for individual workers to make claims under wage-hour and 16 other protective laws after 1 year.	Bill is now on the House calendar, which means it can be brought to the floor at any time. Wire your representative to oppose passage.	CIO, 718 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C.
Missouri Valley Authority	Since 1940 more than a million people have left the Missouri Valley. Upper valley problem is lack of water—at least 4,400,000 acres could be irrigated and provide homes for 500.000 more people. In lower valley, 1,800,000 acres are subject to floods. Damage 1942-44 totaled $150 million. Whole valley lacks low cost power.	Bill (S. 555) would create a Missouri Valley Authority to serve Missouri Basin (1/6 total U. S. area). Bill unfavorably reported by hostile Senate committees on Commerce and Irrigation and Reclamation. Now in Agriculture Committee. Write Sen. Elmer Thomas urging that the Agricultural Committee hold field hearings. Get Senators pledged to support S. 555.	Regional Committee for an MVA, 278 Aquila Court, Omaha, Nebr. Strike Action

The National Committee to Aid the Families of the General Motors Strikers includes the following religious leaders: Archbishop Robert E. Lucey and Bishop Bernard J. Sheil, of the Roman Catholic Church; Bishop Francis J. McConnell and Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church; Bishop William Scarlett and Bishop Edward L. Parsons of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise.

The Religious Associates is one of twenty organizations sponsoring the National Religion and Labor Conference which will be held in Detroit at the Rockham Building on February 25th and 26th. The theme of the Conference will be: "Religion and Labor—Allies for Freedom."

Besides two large public meetings, there will be ten panels, each dealing in terms of human freedom with one of the following critical issues: Interfaith Action; Race Equality; Respect for Minorities; Full Production; Full Employment; People's Purchasing Power; Access to Facts; Access to Atomic Energy; Abolition of War; Worldwide Democracy.

Word has come of the death of the Rev. Harlow Graham, Pastor of the Middletown Methodist Church in Newport, Rhode Island, and one of our Religious Associates.

Rev. Charles A. Hutchinson, Jr., his colleague in the Methodist fellowship, pays tribute to him in these words:

"Harlow came as close to being intuitively right on social questions as any brother minister I have known. In addition to that he was a courageous preacher, and the soul of honor."

MONTHLY MESSAGE

by James Luther Adams, Vice-Chairman of the Religious Associates, Professor of Theology, Chicago University

The other day a minister from North Dakota who has been a member of Spiritual Mobilization, Inc., paid me a visit to ask me how I could justify my being a member of Religious Associates. He reminded me that I had written an article characterizing ministerial supporters of S. M., Inc., as Protestant Priests of Mammon. If ministers behind S. M., Inc., are merely the hireling priestcraft of the temple of Mammon, he seemed to ask, are not the Religious Associates themselves a priesthood tethered to the labor temple? The two groups hold different social philosophies, but for ministerial supporters what is the difference in principle so far as a tether is concerned?

At first blush, these seem to be fair questions. In answering, I of course stressed the superiority of the ethical outlook of National Citizens Political Action Committee, pointing out that PAC supports principles that will extend democracy for all, whereas S. M., Inc., only favors the interests of the class that pays its bills. (Moreover, this class already gets the best, if not the exclusive, hearing in the churches.)

But this is not the only or the most important difference, I said. The literature of S. M., Inc., has uttered no protest against "Christian" subservience to the class interests of that organization, not to speak of the absence of protest against the Babylonish captivity of the churches themselves.

The attitude of members of Religious Associates is quite different. It presupposes that both the church and the labor movement should serve something higher than either of them. It implies that the Religious Associates have an "inside" job to perform. On the one hand, as an autonomous group, they have the "inside" job within the National Citizens PAC not only of supporting its democratic principles but also of criticizing it and the labor movement, in the very name of these democratic principles and in the name of prophetic religion. Every worthy supporter of the labor movement must needs say to it, "I could not love thee, loved I not justice first." The Religious Associates are with the Political Action Committee because the PAC is with democracy.

Extend Price Control

I urge every citizen who is concerned about his nation's future to give immediate attention and full support to the fight against inflation.

I am certain that the voices of the millions of members of people's organizations, like the National Citizens Political Action Committee, will be heard.

It seems to me absolutely vital that all of us understand the stake we have in continuation of price and rent controls for another year. For if we fail to hold the line, prices will skyrocket, inflation will destroy our savings and endanger our whole economy for years to come.

Churchmen Address President

We reprint a letter to President Truman which analyzes the international situation.

President Harry S. Truman
The White House
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. President:

As Christian ministers visiting Washington we take this opportunity to convey to you our concern, shared by many people who, like us, view with fear and trembling the present course of international events. We hail your reassurance that these events do not destroy our hope of peace, and pray that this reassurance will not stop with words.

At Potsdam you assumed leadership of America's destiny for peace. Your success in regaining your leadership spells life or death for civilization. As a first step in regaining your leadership we urge that you stand firmly for civilian control of atomic energy. Army control as Secretary Wallace has warned us opens the door to military fascism and chaos; and it could only be interpreted as a threat directed against other nations.

The warning of our young scientists that unilateral control of atomic bombs cannot, by its very nature, serve peace in the One-World context of our time is confirmed by our Christian faith, and by man's experience that those who trust only the sword shall perish by the sword. Indeed, unilateral or bilateral possession of such power, which because it is scientific is international and may not possibly be kept by some from others, only leads to mutual distrust and tension in a world that depends entirely upon mutual policy and interdependence.

We do not condone unilateral action anywhere, but concentrations of Russian troops in Iran or Manchuria cannot honestly, or realistically, be understood apart from similar concentrations of British and American troops in Greece, India, Syria, Lebanon, Iceland, China and elsewhere. In this crucial position of international forces we cannot demand multilateral policies in Eastern Europe and still pursue unilateral policies in the Americas and the Pacific. Does not international justice suggest that decisive harbors and canals should be primarily under the control of those great powers to whom such seaways are immediate and vital, with other nations participating according to their proportionate interest? Can we properly object to Russia's demands for a special position in the control of the seaways of the Dardanelles which is essential to her life and trade so long as we ourselves insist on exclusive control of the Panama Canal by the United States?

The churches have seen nations rise and fall because they would not accept the truth that mere trust in military power is not the road to peace. There is only a limited time in which to act decisively. It is no mere slogan to say we live in One World or No World! Irresponsible influences like Mr. Churchill's would destroy us and the United

Acting On Faith . . .

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, D.D., President of the Federal Council of Churches, declared in a press interview March 6th that Christians in America must not allow themselves to be stampeded into "a holy war with Russia". He also called for severance of all diplomatic and economic ties with Franco's regime in Spain. He said: "The time for fascism has passed. American soldiers who died to destroy fascism are betrayed by the continued deals with fascism. Franco is a fascist and his fascism is not acceptable whether blessed by churches or condoned by his beneficiaries."

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America held an emergency conference in Columbus, Ohio, March 5th. A report on atomic warfare was presented by twenty Protestant theologians, three of them Religious Associates. It was based on four major theses:

(1) Christians should resist development of situations leading to the use of mass destructive weapons; (2) Control of such weapons depends on the abolition of war since it is futile to outlaw weapons once war has begun; (3) The churches should urge that manufacture of atomic bombs be stopped and that the United States affirm publicly with guarantees that it will not use atomic weapons first; (4) Talk of "world government" should be discouraged and the United Nations Organization should be supported as a first step toward international comity and joint effort. The statement also declares that "political and technical resources need to be sustained, directed and inspired by the development of spiritual world community."

A "Win the Peace" Conference called to meet on April 5-7 at the F Street Auditorium, National Press Bldg., in Washington, D. C., will discuss means of consolidating the unity between the United Nations, upon which the future peace depends.

Among the sponsors are the following Religious Associates: Rev. Dwight J. Bradley, Rabbi J. X. Cohen, Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, Clark Foreman, Rev. Stephen H. Fritchman, Dr. Channing H. Tobias, and Bishop R. R. Wright, Jr.

National and local organizations interested in repairing, preserving and perpetuating the unity of the great nations are invited to send delegates. For information, write Robert T. Leicester, Executive Secretary, 1310 14th St. Washington, D. C.

Support Original McMahon Bill

Rev. Clifford Vessey, minister of the Community Church in White Plains, N. Y., a Religious Associate, has enlisted his congregation in support of the Atomic Energy Control bill, S.1717, sponsored and introduced by Senator Brien McMahon of Connecticut. Members of the Church have sent a petition to Sen. McMahon:

"We the undersigned, urge you to continue your courageous fight to make sure through your Bill S.1717, that the immense possibilities for peacetime production through the use of atomic energy be carefully developed by a Board of Civilians responsible to our elected Representatives. The interests which have fought to keep atomic energy a force of war instead of for peace must be defeated. We count on you to keep up your battle. We support your outstanding leadership."

ON ISSUES THAT FACE LABOR

A. F. Whitney, President, Railroad Trainmen. (excerpts):. . . . . .

"The domestic scene is of critical significance to the future peace and prosperity of the world, because it presents the alternative of stability or confusion, depending upon which way the wage struggles are finally resolved. By every standard of measurement, the wage movement that has swept the nation is the greatest manifestation of the strength of organized labor in American history. Never were so many workers forced out on strike at one time by industrial money-grabbers. Never were the employers so hesitant about organizing 'back-to-work' movements through the picketlines."...

"...Labor is fighting not only labor's battle, but the battle of the consumer—meaning everyone."

"The workers have asked for wage increases, to compensate for losses sustained in reductions in take-home pay. . .What they want is simply to maintain their standard of living, and to improve it where necessary.". . .

"...The Battle of the Price Bulge is now on in full swing. Wall Street's panzer divisions have gone into action against the OPA,. . .Even as I speak, they are boldly bringing out into the open their conspiracy to kill price control in a made scramble for ever more profits."

". . .Failure to renew price and rent control legislation when it expires on June 30 will open the gates to an orgy of inflation such as would more than cancel out whatever wage increases are won in the present period.". . . .

"Labor's support of price control is not inconsistent with the drive for higher wages—contrary to what business propagandists would have you think. There is no real basis for asserting that prices must necessarily rise with wages. Wage increases are a consequence of increased productivity and reflect labor's bargaining strength. They affect profits, not prices. Prices have increased many times without accompanying wage increases. Conversely, there are numerous instances, notably in the public utility field, of price or rate decreases at the same time that wages have increased. The modern air transport industry is a vivid example of this fact."

"To block inflation, not only is it necessary to hold the line on prices, but it is equally essential to increase the production of commodities. Elimination of scarcity should be our primary economic goal. If we are aiming in this direction, it is not quite apparent to this observer.". . .

(Railroad Trainman, Mar. 1946, From address before Cleveland Community Religious Hour.)

AFL - Pres. William Green. (excerpts).
"I propose, first, that the present crazy-quilt program [for wage-price stabilization] be scrapped and that the President invite representatives of labor, industry and agriculture to confer with him on the drafting of an entirely new one which will be fair and just to the entire nation."
"Secondly, I recommend that this new policy be adopted for the dureaction of not more than one year. . ."
"Finally, I urge. . .that the government eliminate itself from the sphere of labor-management relations except for offering a strengthened Conciliation Service to both parties and allow labor and industry to work out their problems through collective bargaining and voluntary arbitration.". . . .
"The big danger we face is the establishment of a permanent economy in our country regulated and regimented from beginning to end by the federal government. That is a step toward totalitarianism. When freedom of enterprise for labor and for business is wiped out by government, every other freedom enjoyed by the people stands in jeopardy." (E. Bay Labor J., 3-29-46)

[In testimony before House Banking and Currency Committee, Pres. Green spoke on OPA]. "The people are tired of emergency and they are tired of controls. . v. But they are also frightened. They are frightened by the brazen display of financial and political pressure exerted upon their government in a reckless and irresponsible drive to destroy price control and profit from its destruction at the expense of the mass of the people. The people are frightened at the prospect of the feverish runaway price boom which is already close upon them."
"They are frightened by the spectre of the next depression which will follow swiftly and inevitably if we don't prevent the runaway boom now and thus invite the collapse it will precipitate. Their fear does not come from the lack of courage or of confidence. They have limitless determination to make reconversion to full production and full employment a success. But they know that while the war is won the grave postwar emergency of economic readjustment is by no means past.". . . (Rich. Lab. Herald, Mar. 29, '46)

CIO - Editorial in Advance, organ of Amalgamated Clothing Workers.(Excerpts):
"The Battle of labor to achieve the purposes for which it was organized never ceases. And it will not cease until all its goals are realized. Today labor faces four immediate issues. First, the wage demands of some sections of organized labor have not yet been granted. . . .
". . .The workers of today are not the workers of 15 years ago. They have gone through the experience of low wages or no wages at all in the dark age of the depression and, in these last few years, they have also experienced an approximation to a comfort wage. Millions of workers now believe rightfully that they should continue to earn the same wages in peace time as they did in war time."
"Those workers who are not on strike, and they are the vast majority, are determined to support unionists who were compelled to strike. They have enough knowledge now of their organized power to use it in support of the entire labor army. They know that if any portion of this army is beaten, there is danger of the entire army being thrown back into old conditions."

"The second issue which the great army of labor has to face and solve is the organizing of the millions still unorganized. It is true we have quadrupled the number of organized workers in recent years, but there are still millions remaining outside the ranks of organized labor. They must be reached and brought into the trade union movement. Together we can build up a real indusfrial and political democracy. What is more, the only ones who can do this successfully are the great producing mass of our people."

"The third issue that must be faced at once is the defeat of anti-labor bills in Congress and the prevention of the crippling of labor legislation already passed and being administered. We have had much to say regarding the Case Bill, passed by a majority in the House and now in the Senate. The Tory bi-partisan group will try to get it through that body, either just as its provisions now stand or through bargaining by the amendment process. The bill should be defeated in its entirety. If the organized workers of this country make their influence really felt it can be defeated..."

"The fourth issue that must be faced is inflation. This must not be allowed to take place. Of course, what inflation really means is an increase in the cost of living, and that must be prevented. Again, the only part of our citizens who can do this is the same producing mass who must face and solve the other issues we have named."

"Those who live by owning, those who live by the labors of other people, those who live by speculation in stocks and bonds, are all favorable to inflation. That is the best reason why those who live by earnings of salaries and wages should be opposed to it. ". . . (Advance, 3-15-46)

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING ISSUES

STEEL.

"With the dawn of the Twentieth Century the steel union (Amalgamated Association) was busted. It had been busted at Homestead in 1892, and by 1900 had less than 10 per cent of the iron and steel workers as members."

"The Homestead strike had been fought over wages and the right to have a union. The workers lost both. When Henry Clay Frick broke the Homestead union in 1892, steel workers' wages and hours were:

Common labor.	14 cents an hour
Average hourly earnings.	23 cents an hour
Average weekly earnings.	$19.32
Average hours per week.	84

"Eight years later—the year 1900—the Homestead laborer was receiving more than he had in 1892. His wage was now 15 cents an hour—in increase of one cent in eight open-shop years. But the average steel worker was still getting 23 cents an hour, because. . .tonnage rates were cut drastically. [Work-week still 84 hours, seven 12-hour days. Average weekly wage still $19.32.]

"Thirty-seven years—all open-shop years—went by before a steel workers' union broke the open shop. The union, the SWOC—the predecessor of the United Steelworkers of America, forced the first union wage increase upon the steel industry in November, 1946. [Four months Later SWOC won union recognition and the second union wage increast in the twentieth century.]

"During 37 open-shop years. . .steel workers' wages and hours had advanced as follows:

Wages and Hours	1900	1936*	Increase
Common labor.	15 cents	47 cents	32 cents
Average hourly earnings.	23 cents	66 cents	43 cents
Average weekly earnings	$19.32	$26.40	$7.08
Average hours per week.	84 hours	40 hours	44 hours-Decrease

*Average for first 10 months of 1936
Pittsburgh and Chicago districts

"The 1919 strike failed to win union recognition and collective bargaining, but an aftermath was the ending of the 12-hour day in 1923."...
"All the 37 open-shop years got the steel worker was $7.08 more a week for working 44 hours less a week.". . .
[This may seem a lot. But compare it with production]:
[In 1900 steel workers produced 11,411,000 net tons of steel ingots. During 37 years ingot production rose 366 per cent. But weekly earnings rose a mere 37 per cent, while production increased 10 times as much.] . . .

SWOC period. [First wage increase won by the union was in Nov., 1936. It was on an unfair percentage basis; hence common labor only got five-and-a-half cents... The next four general wage increases"were on the fairer basis of cents per hour and were all negotiated in collective bargaining by the union in contrast to the Nov., 1936 increase..."]
"In rapid-fire succession, the union, first as the SWOC and later as the USA-CIO, won the following five general wage increases:

Union-Won Steel Wage Increases

Date	Amount
November, 1936.	6.6 cents per hour
March, 1937.	10.0 cents per hour
April, 1941.	10.0 " " "
February, 1942	5.5 " " "
February, 1946.	18.5 " " "
Total	50.6 " " "

"In 1946 the average steel workers' earnings and hours compare with the last open-shop year of 1936 as follows:

Wages and Hours	1936	1946	Increase
Common labor.	47 cents*	.965 cents*	49.5 cents
Ave. hourly earnings	66 cents	$1.31	65.0 cents
Ave. Weekly earnings	$26.40	$52.40	26.00
Ave. hours per week	40 hours	40 hours	no change

*Pittsburgh and Chicago districts
"The union...has raised average straight-time hourly earnings an additional 14.4 cents an hour through non-basic wage increases--a grand total of 65 cents an hour increase.". . . .
"In 1946 it is estimated that 85 million tons of steel ingots will be produced. This compares with 53,214,000 tons in 1936, an increase of 60 per cent.". . .

"On Saturday, March 2, 1946, the Rubber Workers Union and the "Big Four" rubber companies made history through the peaceful settlement of their wage issues. This event stands out as a shining example of what can be done by industry and labor through the processes of collective bargaining."

"Represented in these discussions were the Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and United States Rubber companies and our International Union representatives, combined with the representatives of 41 of our Local Unions from the plants of these companies."

"The Union was represented directly in these negotiations by an 18-man committee composed of five members of our General Executive Board, Attorney G. L. Patterson and the Twelve-man 'Strategy Committee' previously selected by the 'Big Four' Local Unions. . .Some 30 other Local Union representatives listened in on the negotiations.". . .

"Since the main issues involved included questions of overtime pay, hours of work and night bonus increase as well as the question of a general wage increase, our whole problem was much more complex than are the problems involved in current wage disputes between other International Unions and their respective industries. Our problem was further complicated by the fact that approximately one-half of the workers represented by us in this 'Big Four' case were working the six-hour day while the other half were on an eight our day.". . .

". . .The companies held widely divergent viewpoints as to policy, managerial patterns and labor-management relations...Our union representatives failed to see eye-to-eye on many of our problems. . ."

". . .Because of these factors the settlement finally reached was in the nature of a compromise with each side receding from their original positions.". . . .

[Then are listed under six points the benefits gained by this March 2nd agreement, including a "straight, across-the-board wage increase of 18-1/2 cents per hour for all hourly and incentive workers covered by the settlement;" double regular rate on Sundays and six holidays; a pledge to adjust promptly all inequalities all inequalities or inequities in job rates at the plant levels...; 12¢ of the general wage increase to be paid retroactive to Nov. 1, 1945, etc.]

(Un. Rubber Worker, CIO, Mar. '46)

ELECTRICAL

"This week 100,000 UE members are in process of returning to work throughout the nation-wide chain of GE plants, winners of the greatest victory ever achieved by this Union. [United Electrical, Radio,&Machine Workers,CIO].

[After two months of strike they return with a settlement of 18-1/2 cents an hour increase for all, 10 cents or 10 per cent retroactive pay to Januaryl to 15, no discrimination in re return of any employee, an agreement by company to extend present contract for 90 days and during that period to negotiate a new contract.]

"Yesterday, just six days after GE [settlement], Westinghouse made its first wage settlement offer to its striking UE members. "

"For the 10,000-odd employees of its lamp division, production and salaried alike, Westinghouse offered no wage increase at all."

"For the rest, the Westinghouse offer amounted to an average of not more than 9.7 cents per hour. . . ."

[In a letter to the Company rejecting the Westinghouse offer the UE stated as follows]: "1. Your wage offer amounts to no more than 9.7 cents an hour for those employees to whom it would apply. 2. [It excludes the some 10,000 workers in the lamp etc. divisions.]

"This is the first wage offer you have made after nine weeks of strike by 70,000 members of this Union. The multitude of conditions with which you have surrounded your offer nullify it.".

"In view of the other wage settlements recently made by the UE-CIO with major employers, and in the light of wage increases recently granted the employees of other large manufacturing industries, the UE-CIO rejects your proposals."
(From two articles in UE News, March 3-, '46)

"A complete vindication of the UE position in Westinghouse negotiations is coupled with a scathing rebuke to the Westinghouse Co. in the report of Special Mediators William H. Davis and Arthur Meyer to the U. S. Secretary of Labor, according to reports received from Washington. . .The report of Davis and Meyer marks their withdrawal from the case. . .
"While no copy of the mediators' report had reached the UE at the time this issue goes to press, it is reported by telephone from Washington that the Davis-Meyer report points out that the Westinghouse offer is 'not for 18-1/2 cents, for 17, nor 15.". . .
(UE News, 3-30-46)

COAL

"John L. Lewis, United Mine Workers president, charged Monday that the operators have threatened a nationwide lockout instead of the miners threatening a strike. ...
"Previously, Lewis had said to the operators, 'We present no arbitrary formula on hours or wages. We are ready to work for you in your mines. What have you got to offer? Make us an offer, gentlemen. Maybe we will buy."
"Lewis sprang a surprise by not spelling out any of the UMW demands. It is his strategy to wait for definite offers from the operators to meet the UMW's call for shorter hours, a higher basic wage, unionization of mine foremen and supervisors, and establishment of a health, hospitalization and welfare fund to be conducted by the UMW and financed by the mine management.". . . .
(Colo. Lab. Advocate, AFL, 3-21-46)

Mine Workers Journal: "The Bituminous Coal Operators' Wage Negotiating Committee, by continued refusal to give serious consideration to the establishment of a health and welfare fund, or recognize in any sense prior to legal determination by the U. S. Supreme Court the NLRB decision granting supervisors the right of collective bargaining and membership in the UMWA, forced the UMWA to bring to an end the operators' stalling tactics and to serve notice of the termination of the wage agreement at midnight, March 31, as provided for in the existing wage agreement."
"From the very beginning, in both public sessions and sub-committee meetings, the operators assumed the negative on all requests included in the UMWA contract proposals. .."
"Following the receipt of the contract termination notice, the operators made public an alleged 'all-we-can-grant' offer handed the UMWA representatives March 25. This was purely a publicity gesture in an endeavor to offset the analytical, damacing statements made by Pres. Lewis to the press in announcing the contract termination date. "
"As to wages, the proposal was ambiguous and offered nothing definite."
[These are then quoted].
"Then the operators proceeded with the following paragraph to repudiate even the ambiguous offer contained in the paragraphs above, by stating that:
"'This proposal is made with the knowledge that any increase granted must be fully and completely compensated by corresponding price increases."
"It doesn't require much intelligence---and, certainly, the mine workers are not 'dumb'---to understand that the operators are merely trying to dump the whole wage negotiations into the lap of a Government agency. . .
[Quotes operators proposal to "accept the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Laws of those states wherein such acceptance is optional,"and comments]:
"Such proposal is a complete negative answer to the miners' request that the operators join with the UMWA to improve compensation awards in all coal-producing states and put an end to company and political abuses of compensation payments."

"The operators completely rejected the principle of a UMWA-administered welfare fund. They proposed exploration. . ."
"The operators emphatically said no to acceptance of the recommendations of the United States mine inspectors to promote safety. In lieu therefore they proposed that committees, composed equally of UMWA and operators' representatives, should be appointed to investigate safety conditions, 'and suggest. . .such amendments to existing laws as said committee may consider necessary to further safety.' There could be no better plan to a dead end.". . . .
(Un. Mine Workers Journal, 4-1-46)

Railroad Labor

(See also March issue. To be continued in May issue.)
(As of March 27), "Two arbitration boards started preparation of their decisions ...as proceedings in the wage case involving 18 railroad unions and 1,300,000 workers ground to a close..."
"...Counsel for the 15 'non-ops' put [the wage issue] bluntly. 'We mean 30 cents', he told the board. 'We have proved 30 cents and we ask for an award of 30 cents.'"
"...Counsel for the three 'ops', insisted that his unions have--on the record--justified an increase of at least $2.50 a day."
"During the rebuttal, economists for the unions entered many new exhibits to demonstrate, among other things, that railroads are in unusually good financial shape and can without question afford the wage increases demanded.". . . .
(Labor 3-30-46)

"Arbitration boards in both the 'operating' and 'non-operating' wage cases handed down their awards..., and the rail unions affected united in denouncing the awards as totally inadequate."
"For nearly 300,000 'operating' employes represented by three Transportation Brotherhoods--the Firemen and Enginemen, Conductors, and Switchmen--the board granted a raise of only $1.28 a day, which works out to 16 cents an hour on a basic eight-hour day. The unions had asked for a $2.50 increase."
"For over a million 'non-operating' employes, representing 15 cooperating railway labor unions, the second board came down with a straight 16-cent an hour award. These unions had demanded 30 cents."
"The awards are retroactive to Jan. 1. . .
"Though the awards are binding and are to be put into affect, the unions are free to proceed immediately under the Railway Labor Act with new movements to obtain the additional increases they feel they are entitled. All they need/is to serve 30-day notices of desire to change wage rates."
Pres. Bert M. Jewell of Railway Employess' Department, and chairman of committee for 15 non-operating unions, said the "award is wholly unsatisfactory..."
"The three operating unions are likewise planning further steps. [Will meet soon to make plans.] Said Pres. D. B. Robertson of Firemen and Enginemen, "...The award has proven that railroad employes cannot get justice through voluntary arbitration under the Railway Labor Act.". . .
(Labor 4-6-46)
[Negotiations etc. by the other two Railroad labor brotherhoods, Trainmen and Engineers, will be reported on in the next issue.]

New Haven R-L Council Ends Year With Successful Youth Conference

Secretary Dodson's Report to Board of Directors Reveals Widening Range of Church-Labor Action

"Did you see his eyes—they seemed to bore right through you!"

"Were those figures right that he gave us about housing in the United States?"

"If conditions among workers are as bad as he says, why isn't our youth group doing something about Christian social action?

A group of high school students were sitting around on the grass discussing Roy McCorkel's speech. They were part of a group of forty young people from churches throughout the New Haven area who had come together for a conference on the church in social action, co-sponsored by the Youth Senate of the Council of Churches and the Religion and Labor Council of New Haven.

The conference, held the weekend of May 3 and 4 at the Giant Valley Country Club, had for its theme, "The House I Live In," and the young people, through discussion groups, tried to find out what kind of a house America is to live in. They discussed the relationship between people on the lower income floor (labor) and those on the upper income floor (capital) and why there was tension between them. They found out that much of the house needed improvement: that many groups in our nation are ill-housed, ill-fed, and ill-clothed. They discussed what role the church should play in some social and economic house cleaning.

Roy McCorkel, of the American Friends Service Committee and the executive board of the National RLF, was the keynote speaker, and his incisive talks set the stage for some interesting discussions.

The two days were not devoted wholly to study and discussion. Plenty of time was allotted for recreation: a softball game, a hike up Sleeping Giant mountain, a wiener roast, square dancing. The planning committee did not overlook the need for worship and personal committment: the students planned and led their own worship services.

Fitz Dodson, executive secretary of the New Haven Religion and Labor Council, said this about the conference: "I believe that this conference was the single most important thing the Council did all year. The kids were all enthusiastic about the conference, the speaker, and the discussion groups. Many were disturbed over the lack of a program of social action and Christian outreach in their own youth groups. Several have told me that they are going to try to fill in this gap in their youth programs for next year." Dodson, a second-year student at Yale Divinity School, has been serving as executive secretary of the Council for the past two years.

Seminary Students Identify Themselves With Labor's Cause

Reports Include Active Participation in Strikes, Voluntary Organizing, Legislative Campaigns, Meetings and Conferences, Lectures Classes on Trade Union Techniques, Study on Labor and Political Movements

That the National Religion and Labor Foundation will play an increasingly important part in effecting a rapprochement between the world of religion and the world of labor is attested by the fact that its message and program are so warmly received in many of the leading theological schools in the United States .

A survey of the RLF Interseminary Division shows that the work of the Foundation is now felt in 43 theological schools. Official Locals are established in thirteen seminaries, and there are active unofficial co-operating groups in eleven others. Twenty-eight of the 43 schools have one or more faculty members who take an active interest and who think seriously about the relationship of theological education to future development in the field. Forty of the 43 schools have sent delegations to one or more interseminary conferences.

Personal interviews and correspondence with theological students now indicate that there is a restless minority of future religious leaders who somehow feel that the church is not at the center of the swift current of social and economic change and who fear that their present preparation

FAITH AT WORK

Monthly Message

By Rabbi Jacob J. Weinstein
Cong. Kehillath Anshi Mayriv of Chicago, Ill.
Vice-Chairman of the Religious Associates

Claude Williams of the Peoples Institute of Religion has demonstrated that the New Testament can supply some excellent pro-labor texts. The same is true of the Old Testament. It is important that liberal clergymen learn how to use them. There is still a large segment of our population that takes its social directives from the Book of Books. Others, who may not be pious in any doctrinal sense, still prefer to have the moral sanction of the Bible.

The harsh and oppressive bargain which Jacob drove with his brother Esau, that time he obtained the birthright for a mess of pottage, affords an excellent springboard to chastise those employers who believe that a touch of hunger puts labor in the proper mood to be reasonable at the bargaining table. While Jacob did get his birthright, he lived in fear and trembling of his brother Esau for more than twenty years and was willing to give half of his great possessions to appease the wrath of his brother when he returned to his birthplace after his long and prosperous sojourn with Laban. The story can be even better used to caution labor not to sell its birthright for some glittering immediate gain.

The technique which Moses used in bargaining with Pharaoh for the freedom of the children of Israel can instruct labor leaders even to this day. When Pharaoh refused to let the slaves off for a three-day holyday; but instead, increased the work load, Moses realized that it was foolish to trust the heart of a dictator. He saw, in fact, that gracious handouts given by a boss in his benevolent moods were poison to the people for they merely muted their rebellious instincts.

The story of Onan in Genesis 28 makes a powerful parable of the sinful waste of a scarcity economy and offers dramatic warning of the inevitable doom that awaits all who spill their seed on the ground. Free enterprisers, who prefer to dump their product rather than have it circulate in the general stream of consumption at prices within the reach of all, are guilty of the sin of Onan. Manufacturers, who strait-jacket their machines rather than lower the price of their controlled merchandise, are guilty of the sin of Onan.

The story of Samson also lends itself for a pro-labor text. Samson can be compared to our giant industry blinded and blinkered by monopolistic, greedy Philistines and set to grinding corn for their own pleasure and profit. But Samson regains his shorn strength and, in a sullen fit of revenge, shakes the pillars of the Temple and brings down its gaudy roof on the heads of the oppressors.

These are but a few of the many such texts to be found in the Old Testament. Lecky was right when he called the Bible a revolutionary document.

We Share the Guilt. . . .

We are endangered — all of us together — whenever human rights are threatened. Here in our native soil the roots of racism strike deep. The growths from these roots are an ever-present danger.

To men and women of religious faith, equality and freedom are not mere words for pious mouthing. They are concepts which must live, if we are to live. If therefore, by our passivity we permit their flagrant flouting to take place, we share the guilt for each act of violence and discrimination committed. In the war against injustice and persecution, no one can be neutral.

Equality and freedom are moreover concepts to be applied to public affairs. They are principles to be enacted into law through such measures as the FEPC bill and the Anti-Poll Tax bill. The authorities are required by them to protect each person from terrorism and lynch rule and not to abet the terrorists.

Upon ministers of religion an obligation is laid by the ethics of their spiritual calling. It is their responsibility to do their part to guarantee to all their basic rights in a free democracy.

MASSACRE IN TENNESSEE

James Stephenson, Negro Navy veteran came to the aid of his mother when a radio repairman struck her in an argument over a bill. This incident so incensed some Columbia citizens that Stephenson had to be hurried out of town to prevent a lynching. A mob turned towards the Negro community.

Behind barricades, all that night, the Negro population waited in their homes while armed men roamed the streets looking for a Negro to lynch. Twice that night white officers who drove past the section in cars, firing into homes as they went, were peppered by birdshot.

The Columbia police, enforced by more than 100 highway patrolmen and more than 400 troops of the state guard, threw a cordon around the Negro business section where the shots had been fired. In the morning they wrecked every store, broke the windows of the buildings and sprayed the insides with machine guns. They arrested every Negro they could find, and beat the prisoners. Two were shot to death by guards.

Nation-wide protest has caused U. S. Attorney General Clark to order a Federal Grand Jury investigation. But he put in charge a Columbia resident already on record as saying there were no federal violations. Demand that the investigation be headed by someone willing to be just.

CIO 1946 POLITICAL ACTION PROGRAM

"Under the leadership of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, our nation, together with our great allies, have won conclusive victory in the long war against the fascist powers." . . .

"In November 1946 we will elect a House of Representatives and one-third of the members of the Senate. The actions of this new Congress will largely determine whether or not our nation shall embark on a firm course of enduring peace in the world and an economy of plenty at home."

[The CIO Political Action Committee submits its program for 1946...provides a firm foundation for stable peace, full employment, greater security and wider democracy for our nation...a program around which labor and Americans in all walks of life can unite.]

"[It] calls upon the people to measure the record of every candidate for office against this program". . . .

Foreign Policy

"The will of all peoples is peace. The United Nations is the expression and the instrument of their will. The United Nations must command the full support of our nation and its people so that it may grow strong in the battle for peace."

"The war-born unity of Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States was the key to our victory over the enemy. Their unity is no less essential if the United Nations is to be the sure guardian of the peace."

"We repudiate all efforts calculated to weaken or destroy friendship and close collaboration among the Big Three. We reject proposals for American participation in any bloc or alliance which is inimical to their unity."... [Support of these principles calls for common action]:

[1. The destruction of the economic and social roots of fascism in Germany and Japan through full implementation of Potsdam decisions.]

[2. Respect for right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live--opposition to any form of aggression by any power.]

[3. Restoration of sovereign rights and self-government to those formerly deprived of them.]

"We urge that regulation of all phases of atomic energy be promptly lodged in the United Nations, with full power of inspection and control over atomic weapons, and that all atomic weapons be delivered to it. Pending the exercise of these powers by the Security Council, we urge legislation by the Congress vesting control of atomic energy in a civilian commission." . . .
[Urge full and unstinting support to UNRRA as the essential agency to alleviate starvation and aid rehabilitation. Support immediate resumption of food rationing to make American food available to the starving of other lands.]
[Urge prompt extension of loans to our needy allies to enable them to buy equipment and get wheels of industry turning.]
[Assistance for relief, rehabilitation etc. should be on basis of need alone.]
"The power of the American dollar should not be used to coerce or influence free peoples in the exercises of their inalienable right to self-government."
[Urge full American support to the just demands of Colonial peoples for the rights of self-determination and self-government.]
[Urge American support for effective support of World Federation of Trade Unions in the work of the United Nations.]

Domestic Affairs
"The Roosevelt Economic Bill of Rights embodies the hopes of all America. His vision remains for our efforts to fulfill. [Quotes this "Economic Bill of Rights.]
"We emerged from the war with a national income of two hundred billion dollars, a vastly expanded industry, a sharp increase in labor productivity and with our liquid reserves at an all-time peak. We have all the requisites for an economy of abundance: the natural and human resources, the industrial plant, the technical know-how, and the financial capital."
"These great strides must be made to serve the whole people. They can do so only if our economy generates the mass purchasing power which will enable all Americans to enjoy the abundance our farms and factories are geared to produce. The program of CIO is directed to this end. It is directed against the forces of reaction whose program is abundance for a privileged few and want of the many."
Then relates status of living costs at war's end—"more than double the increase in basic wage rates;" that reconversion carried with it a sharp decline in the purchasing power of the American worker. The CIO offered its program to the President's Labor-Management Conference for maintaining national purchasing power. It was "given a curt answer: No." "The answer revealed their "captains of America's basic industries" program: to smash our labor organizations, destroy the workingman's only source of strength, depress wages, and shrink up mass purchasing power." "The CIO had no recourse but to the picket line. The common people, farmers, veterans, small businessmen, rallied behind its struggle to preserve the nation's pay envelope. Through the strength of its organizations and with the support of the people. CIO won the first round in the battle for American abundance."
"Now the fight shifts from the picket line to Capital Hill and to the ballot box. Our victories on the economic front will be swept away if the people meet defeat on the political front."

[Calls for continuance of OPA without loopholes and amendments.
[Urges enactment of 65-75 cent minimum wage amendments, etc. That white collar workers be included in social security and health protection: "The future of the teacher and professional worker is dependent upon the wage of those he serves."] Demands immediate enactment of Pat-man Wyatt emergency housing bill, including provisions for 600 million dollars in subsidies and for ceiling prices on new and old homes. Also, for a long-range Federal housing program. Asks for prompt enactment of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill providing an integrated Federal program for slum clearance and low-cost housing. Describes situation as to national health, and demands immediate enactment of Wagner-Murray-Dingell Health Bill, and proposals for more adequate old-age benefits and unemployment insurance. Urges provisions for veterans' needs. Calls for "equality of educational opportunity to every American", and that the Federal Government establish minimum educational stands, "based on the principle that every boy and girl is entitled to free education through the high school level, with advanced study for those of demonstrated ability"; the raising of teachers' salaries; federal grants in aid to eliminate existing inequalities between rural and urban education, and between education for Negroes and for white children. Deals with farmers' needs and rights--urges continuance of price guarantees to farmers to encourage full production and a fair return for their products; federal subsidies on meat and other foods to assure fair price to the farmer, and encourage production, without increasing the cost of living or contributing to inflation; and all farm programs (Farm Tenant Purchase Program, rehabilitation program and soil conservation program) should protect the family owned and operated farm. Deals with small business man and his rights and needs, including adequate program of government credits to aid him. Treats taxation--"Tax policy should be directed toward maintaining the national purchasing power at a maximum."]
"Fascism thrives on prejudice. Fascism organizes prejudice." [Condemns attacks on Jews, Catholic, Negroes, Italian-Americans and other minorities.]
"The hateful practice of discrimination because of race, religion or national origin must be stamped out. Full economic, political and civil equality must be guaranteed to every American regardless of his race, creed, or national origin." [Condemned the filibuster against the FEPC. Call for "full political democracy", including abolition of voters' poll tax. Condemned revival of use of injunctions against labor.]
"Free, strong and responsible labor organizations are the bulwark of democracy. Their growth, and the extension of the process of collective bargaining throughout American industry must be encouraged as an objective of national policy." . . . .
"The 1946 elections must witness a tremendous reaffirmation of their [the common people's] will by the election of candidates committed, in word and deed, to the realization of this program." . . .
(CIO News, 4-22-1946. Excerpts.]

AFL ON GOVERNMENT WAGE CONTROLS

"In an interim report officials of the A.F.L. declared that free collective bargaining, and not Government regulations and red tape, is the answer to the labor-management problem in the United States."
[Stated Pres. William Green]: "Workers had no share in the huge profits from war production, but, instead of the regular increases in their buying power which had characterized 1890-1940, the buying power of the hourly pay went downward--a severe cut which increased with the return to the normal work day and week."

"Recalling that 'collective bargaining was effectively suspended during the war', Green emphasized that the suspension must be considered as still in effect so long as the Government continues to regulate wages. He stated that it was the joint responsibility of management and labor 'to cooperate in establishing a balanced economy that can maintain maximum levels of production affording maximum employment at rates of pay that will enable workers and all others to have maximum standards of living."

[The aids which the government should furnish, according to AFL, were outlined as follows:]

"1. The necessary basic economic statistics to enable us to gauge the result of known policies."

"2. A shelf of public works ready to go into operation."

"3. A federal housing program."

"4. Equal and adequate educational opportunities for all throughout life."

"5. Provision for adequate scientific research including the social sciences and the training of scientists."

"Green asserted that such a program necessarily implied 'cooperation between unions and management to increase output per man-hour and to decrease production costs.'"

[He stated:] "Management should provide workers with production and costs records as the basis for their cooperation and be ready to make accumulated records the basis for collective bargaining."

George Meany, Sec.-Treas., AFL, in an article in American Federationist, asserted that "the oil of federal wage regulation will not mix with the water of collective bargaining". Traced the history of wage regulation since December, 1941 to the present. He said, "Wage regulations have been issued to a confused public at the rate of one set every 60 days. And there is no sign that this flood will subside. From the relatively simple regulations of Oct. 2, 1942, we have steadily progressed into the labyrinths which apparently have no exit."

"Meanwhile the wage earners have watched their stand of living drop as the number of orders increased. The threat of inflation which deluded workers to accept wage regulations is now here. The right to bargain collectively has become a will-o'-the-wisp which approaches reality under one executive order only to be drawn away by another."

LABOR ON OPA

AFL

"AFL Pres. William Green called on Congress to extend OPA price and rent controls for another year...warned that otherwise a run-away boom will develop that inevitably will result in another depression."

He stated: "The people are tired of emergency and they are tired of controls. But they are also frightened. They are frightened by the brazen display of financial and political pressure exerted upon their government in a reckless and irresponsible drive to destroy price control and profit from its destruction at the expense of the mass of people. The people are frightened at the prospect of the feverish runaway price boom which is already close

"They are frightened by the spectre of the next depression which will follow swiftly and inevitably if we don't prevent the runaway boom now and thus invite the collapse it will precipitate. Their fear does not come from the lack of courage or of confidence. They have limitless determination to make reconversion to full production and full employment a success. But they know that while the war is won the grave postwar emergency of economic readjustment is by no means past."
"Every day the American consumer--the breadwinner, the housewife--hears the rising clamor for the immediate and complete abandonment of price controls. They watch the pressures exerted upon their Congress from all sides--the momentum of a stampede to throw overboard the very steering gear which alone can guide the nation toward stability, prosperity and lasting freedom. And they say to the Congress: that must not be done!"
[Mr. Green "did not give blanket endorsement to OPA controls..charged it had permitted exorbitant increases in prices of clothes and shoes and other consumer articles...but...defended the OPA against the charge that it has clamped the brakes on expansion of postwar production.] . . . .
[He "strongly urged...that OPA be given an extension of a year 'without weakening amendments.'"]

(East Bay Labor J., Calif., 4-5-46)

"Humanitarians are urging a return to rationing in order to save food for the starving peoples of the world. Public opinion polls show a majority of the people themselves are willing to limit their meats, fats, oils and grains for this purpose...."
"The grain shortage is costing American jobs. The rush of growers to collect the 30-cent bonus on wheat to be shipped overseas is throwing the wheat, milling and baking industries out of focus."
"Packinghouse workers are being laid off. Black markets abound."
"Such dislocations may be inevitable in a world motivated by greed for money, yet it seems unreasonable that American workers--always the first to respond to a call for help--should be deprived of their jobs because of the nation's response to a plea for food."
"It is bad enough for labor to suffer the loss of jobs but it is asking too much to have them to compete in black markets with those who have money. The working people of America are willing to do their share, but they also have a right to expect and demand protection at home. Rationing would supply some protection from those who place profit above the general welfare."

(Editorial, Colo. Labor Advocate, 5-16-46)

"...Whatever degree of success the anti-inflation legislation obtained, the fact remains that wage-earners have contributed their share--perhaps more than their share--of the sacrifice necessary to retard inflation. Never has the American workman been refused the right to accept wage rate increases voluntarily offered by an employer. But now--in the postwar years, when historically inflation really reaches its high point--there is prevalent the idea that all price control be abolished. . x"...x
"One fact is certain: while American wage-earners were restrained from obtaining even the wage rate increases needed to preserve their pre-war standard of living, the profits of employers--after taxes--were reaching new highs. After this price has been paid, are American wage earners expected to accept the destruction of price controls at the very time they need them most?". . .

"Price control can work. The government can control prices. But there must be willingness to accept price regulation. There cannot, for example, be 'cotton Senators' keeping ceilings from being placed on cotton. There cannot be 'oil Senators' or 'grain Senators'. Nor can there be strikes against the Federal Government by clothes producers, underwear producers and so forth."
"But if each group insists upon 'protecting' itself--and the devil take the hindmost--then inflation is inevitable."
(Plumbers & Steamfitters J., 4-'46, Editorial)

"The Office of Price Administration, conforming to the pattern of confusion that has become its trademark, is currently carrying on two activities that are mutually contradictory."
"Standing on the public rostrum, OPA is telling Congress and the Nation that price controls must be continued for one year with no change in the rules. In the privacy of its own offices the agency is busy handing out price increases, hand over fist.". . .
"All this adds up to inflation whether OPA likes it and will admit it or not."
"Price control never was anything but a negative medicine for the disease of inflation, for which production is the only sure cure. Necessary during the war because materials of all kinds were scarce, it serves only the purpose of hampering production and creating artificial scarcities in normal times.".... (United Mine Wks. J., 5-1-46)

Resolution of CIO Executive Board, meeting in Washington, March 15-16.
Price Control (Excerpts): "...The opposition to inflation must come from the American people, from labor, consumers and veterans. The fight must be waged on the broadest terms with the closest cooperation of all groups in the country affected by inflation. Labor's gains in the recent wage struggles are at stake."...
"The issue is being resolved now in the fight for the renewal of the Price Control Act..."
"The strategy of the inflationists is: (1) to stall the renewal of the Act by prolonged hearings; (2) to cripple the law by amendments: (3) to make price enforcement impossible by cutting OPA funds."
"To protect incomes, small savings, and uphold and extend the American standard of living, the people must fight to RENEW OPA WITHOUT DELAY, WITHOUT AMENDMENTS, AND WITH ADEQUATE ENFORCEMENT FUNDS. [It enumerates what unions can do.]
"...The monopolists and reactionaries have thrown a challenge to the American people. We stopped the inflationists and their powerful lobbies before. We will do it again. Let's protect those wage increases. Let's protect and extend our American democracy."

ORGANIZING CAMPAIGNS IN THE SOUTH

C I O

From speech by Philip Murray before United Auto Workers' Convention (excerpts):

"...We had a meeting of our CIO Executive Board over in the City of Washington, and there a decision was arrived at that our CIO national unions would collect a million dollars to conduct an organizing drive in the South that would put two hundred people to work, experienced men, who have an understanding of southern problems, who would engage themselves in this campaign of organization to bring this message of a better life to the economic serfs of the South, where people are still persecuted and suffer much."

"There is no other instrumentality that I know of anywhere in America that seems quite so capable of performing that task as the Congress of Industrial Organizations. ..."

"In the conduct of its crusade to emancipate the people there, it has got to point out to the people of the South the great advantages that are bound to accrue to the entire community by supporting the CIO campaign to organize the unorganized workers of the South. I shan't attempt here... to describe the pitiable life and the pitiable conditions of Southern workers; it is not for me to do that here; you know it, you know the rank type of discrimination which is exercised not only the colored worker of the South but the poor whites, as well.

"Well, we will embark on that adventure within the next six weeks or two months. We have created the Organizing Committee. Pledges are coming in, and we expect to collect for our original organizing drive a sum in excess of $1,000,000."

"We are not going into the South to violate the law; we are not going in there for the purpose of creating turmoil. We are going into the South in the year 1946 like we went into the North, to carry the message of the CIO. That was ten years ago. You remember we started this crusade in the North just ten years ago; and now we are going into the South..."

"It is going to be part of your work and part of the work of the hundreds of thousands that you represent to lend all the support you possibly can to this Southern drive, because the South, as you doubtless know, constitutes a type of economic millstone thrust around the necks of the people who are working in the North. It sort of tends to drag them down, the competitive force of these very types of living conditions has that effect. Hence the need of revitalizing or giving vitality to the work which CIO has undertaken in the Southern states.". . . .

(United Automobile Wk., Apr., 1946)

"The South must be organized!

"Until it is, union standards won in strongly-organized areas will remain under a constant threat."

"With those concrete facts in mind, the international executive board of the United Steelworkers of America has authorized a contribution of $200,000 toward the $1,250,000 fund being raised by CIO unions for the Southern organizing Committee". . . .

"Van A. Bittner, assistant to the President of the USA-CIO, has been named chairman in charge of the overall campaign. He moves into the Southern drive with a perfect batting average in leading organizing drives in the steel industry, notably the Bethlehem Steel campaign."
"Determination of the CIO to push the new campaign grew out of a report submitted to the CIO executive board by a committee which made a survey throughout the United States to determine where an all-out CIO organizing campaign could do the most good.". . . .
(Steel Worker, May, 1946)

"A $100,000 contribution to CIO's southern organizing drive... [was voted] by the CIO United Auto Workers Union's 10th Convention [in Atlantic City.]
(CIO News, 4-8-46)

"Plans to launch the most intensive organizing drive ever undertaken in the South by the trade union movement were announced by AFL Pres. Wm. Green.
"The main goal of the campaign is to enroll 1,000,000 new members in AFL unions in the next year, Mr. Green said. The drive will be directed entirely by the executive officers of the 12 State Federations of Labor in the South and George L. Googe, AFL southern representative.". . .
"The organizing drive will be launched [at the third biennial Southern Labor Conference to be held May 11 and 12 in Asheville, N.C.] ..."
(Richmond Lab. Herald, 4-26-46)

"An aggressive militant drive to organize the workers of the South was pledged by AFL Pres. Wm. Green in the keynote address before the convention of the United Textile Workers of the AFL [in Washington in May].
(Said Pres. Green-excerpts): "I pledge you the full support of the American Federation of Labor financially and in the help of trained organizers in your campaign to bring the underpaid workers of the South into the House of Labor."...
"Assailing the 'raiding tactics' of the CIO, Mr. Green predicted such practices would be of no avail against the tried and proven soundness and record of the AFL."
"Nothing can stop or slow our drive to organize the South," he said. "We cannot be turned aside from the militant, aggressive, uncompromising campaign which we have planned. ..."
"...This does not mean that we are only now beginning to organize the South. We have been organizing in the South for half a century. ..."
(Richmond Lab. Her., 5-10-46)

(Speech by Pres. Wm. Green before Southern Labor Conference in May--excerpt):
"Let me give the workers of the South this solemn assurance...When you organize into AFL unions you will be promoting your own interests and you will run your own affairs." . . .

Can Labor Lead the Way?

By HENRY NELSON WIEMAN

Reprinted, With Permission, from June Issue, The Woman's Press

When we speak of labor's leadership, we do not mean that thousands of men can all be leaders. Leadership must always be in the hands of a relatively few; in the most democratic society as much as any other. In every industry, including those which are thoroughly democratic, there must be a few managers who exercise supreme control. No kind of social organization is possible without this apex of authority. Onr plea is not to abolish this apex but to distribute, as widely as competence permits, throughout the ranks of labor the initiative and responsibility for conduct of industry.

Whether we follow the road to freedom and peace, or to war and tyranny, will depend in great part on the policy followed by management now in control of industry. If the management opposes any advance of power and responsibility on the part of labor, it will be dragging us toward a fate which no men in our society really want, least of all the managers. On the other hand, if management will help to extend responsibility and power as widely as possible to industrial workers and their organizations, it will lead us into a world which will be best for the managers, best for the workers and best for us all. —H. N. W.

The claim that the road to a free and just society is by way of full production and full employment is not based on the belief that men will be just and provide for freedom only when they have economic abundance. That misses the point entirely. The point is that every impulse and social development inimical to justice and freedom is magnified enormously when unemployment spreads in a highly industrialized society.

When unemployment deepens, racial hatred, with Jews and Negroes the chief victims, becomes a mania in our country. Between employers and employees, and between the wealthy and impoverished, bitterness and suspicion get beyond control. Sources of information, so indispensable to a free and just society, become unreliable and deceitful because they become more intensely partisan. Fanatical or cynical demagogues whip up a frenzied following. Agencies, striving to control the masses, employ spies and use the courts, the police and the militia to restrain outbursts of fear and hate and the movements of masses seeking some escape from their troubles. Men who are unemployed in a highly industrialized society lose their sense of belonging, their sense of social function and responsibility. Then they become less subject to regulation by that subconscious structure of life which directs the interests of a man when he has some responsible part in the social order. Hostility between national states becomes more intense; war threatens and surely comes if there is no other escape from the downspiral of economic depression and unemployment.

Technology—The Supreme Instrument of Power

These are the conditions that arise when unemployment spreads and production lags. Plainly, these conditions render impossible the attainment of a free and just society. Therefore, full employment and full production in a society as highly industrialized as ours become imperatives for all who intelligently seek freedom and justice. This may not always be true; a time may come when economic abundance is so easily achieved that the serious work of human life will shift to other concerns. But this is the situation today: and he who talks about freedom and justice, without giving first place to this prime condition, is talking folly.

Full production and full employment will come sooner or later because they are a modern imperative. But they can come either destructively or constructively. They can come by way of a dictator, combined with the threat of war. They can come under the leader-

Henry Nelson Wieman is professor of the philosophy of religion at the Divinity School of Chicago University and one of the most distinguished American leaders and writers in this field.

In this article, Dr. Wieman gets at those deep and often hidden reasons for social struggle of which even the participants may be unaware. It is the hidden hunger in men's souls, even more than hunger of the body, which leaves indelible marks upon the men and women whose struggle for existence is waged in a setting where all sense of individuality and participation is lost. The author here develops the subject with which he dealt when he addressed the National Religion and Labor Conference in Detroit in February.

FAITH AT WORK

"Faith, if it hath not works, is dead."

Acting on Faith

"The Devil Takes No Vacation"

This is an old proverb, very much to the point for preachers this summer. Many churches slow up in hot weather. Ministers go away for a rest. The Lord's house is vacated—sometimes it is even locked up. Congregations take their Sundays off and leave their pews unoccupied till autumn.

But all this while the evil forces keep on plugging. This will be particularly true this year. The devil won't be taking a vacation in July and August, 1946.

What can we do about it? Ministers deserve their respite from pastoral responsibilities. They need a little time to spend with their families, to think over their next season's work, to plan their sermons and church programs.

But they can still be active. They can make contact with progressive forces in communities where they spend their vacations. They can serve as missionaries in the cause of social, economic and political justice—in the cause of tolerance.

If they stay at home they can specialize on public affairs while parish duties are less exacting. They can give the devil a hard time. They can work for the coming elections getting citizens to register, keeping before the people the important issues of the campaign.

They can act in this critical summer as leaders who know the signs of the times and have no fear of interpreting the signs so that all may understand. They can make religion a power in public affairs. They can help win many a congressional District and State for candidates who represent the things in which forward-looking religious men and women believe.

Religious Associates are already deep in political action in hundreds of districts. Two members, both parish ministers, are running for Congress. Others are working with political action groups and independently where no organization is yet established. Gone is the day when religion and politics could be divorced.

The struggle for democracy is basically religious. From hundreds of pulpits and religious platforms, democracy is being preached.

"Cracking Down On Liberty"—

By DR. FRANK KINGDON

The industrial crisis which has developed following the war has thrown the issues of our present political situation into such sharp focus that nobody can avoid taking a stand.

The President has proposed, and the Congress has passed, legislation which presents the most direct attack upon our fundamental liberties of any measure seriously suggested since the Civil War. This legislation is currently described as being an effort to "crack down on labor." The point which many observers miss is that when we get to the business of "cracking down" on the free action of particular groups, we end up by cracking down on liberty itself.

This is precisely what has happened in this case. It raises questions which touch on politics at the deepest ethical and social level they can reach. In terms of the ethical foundations of our democratic society, we have no profounder moral conviction than that of the equality of all men under the sovereignty and fatherhood of God. Legislation aimed at the freedom of action of any group in the community is an attack on this equality. It is discrimination, and therefore a denial of the universal dignity of all men. It says that some men are less than others, and opens the door to that witches' cauldron of false philosophy which ends by asserting that some men are born to be masters and others to be slaves. The twin moral insights which underlie and inform a truly ethical association of men are liberty and justice. This denies both of them, and thus cuts to the roots of the beliefs on which alone a good society can be built.

Class Legislation

Socially, this legislation is class legislation. It is the use of the power of the government to serve one section of our people against another. In the economic struggle, labor has but one weapon, joint action by workers to force higher standards of work and wages. The final use of this weapon comes in the strike, the only action which labor can take in an extreme dispute to force employers to accede to its demands. A strike is the expression of the right of any man not to work for an employer if that employer exploits him or refuses to improve his conditions of work. The fact that it comes by the decision of a group of workers rather than by that of one does not alter its basic meaning. To deprive workers of the right to strike is to rob them of the most effective of their protests in a clash. It is to put them at a disadvantage. It is taking sides with the employers. Even more fundamentally, it is denying their right to work or not to work by their own decision. Thus it becomes the enactment of involuntary servitude, and the worker becomes a chattel slave who can be forced to work at the point of a gun.

Hannegan, Morse to Address School

Postmaster-General Robert E. Hannegan, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and Senator Wayne L. Morse, Republican of Oregon, will share the same platform as featured speakers at the opening session of the School of Political Action Techniques at the Willard Hotel in Washington, D. C., Wednesday evening June 26. "The Significance of the 1946 Elections," subject of their discussion, marks the beginning of the four-day series of courses sponsored and conducted by National Citizens PAC.

Hailed by Press

The school is open to everyone, but registration is limited to 500 students.

Announcement of the school brought forth much press comment. Described as "rabble-rousing" and "pinko" by John O'Donnell and attacked by other spokesmen of reaction, the school was for the most part enthusiastically greeted. In a column which the N. Y. "World-Telegram" suppressed, Thomas L. Stokes explained the attacks:

"The truth is that the old-line, hard-rock politicians, especially those who have sat too long too comfortably in places of power, are afraid of this new enterprise, and are whistling to keep up their courage.

Vol. VII No. 6 June, 1946

When the People Vote—They Win!

We elect a third of the Senate and 435 Congressmen this year—the first national election since the death of President Roosevelt.

Thirty million voters went to the polls in 1938; 50 million in 1940; 28 million in 1942; 48 million in 1944. Up and down; up and down.

In 1946 there is a potential vote of 88 million. How many Americans will go to the polls in November? The answer will decide whether we have a liberal or reactionary Congress for the next two crucial years.

Politicians call 1946 an off-year election because the Presidency is not at stake. But they think also of the general apathy that has marked such national elections in the past—particularly in 1938 and 1942.

Too many Americans regard politics as a boxing match—a purely spectator sport. In the past, their non-participation has led to great victories for reactionary forces; machine politics control the results when voters sleep.

Study Table 1. Even in the presidential election year of 1944 the turnout was little more than two-thirds of the potential; look how the turnout dropped in 1942. That drop spelled disaster for the American people; it meant victory for reaction.

Will 1946 be another 1942? Or will the bulk of citizens exercise their democratic right to vote?

This "Outlook" is devoted to some aspects of vote turnout. It points one moral: a big vote is a good one. Mass registration and mass voting is the best guarantee of liberal progressive government.

The great swings in popular participation are just as great if considered state by state.

The Senator elected from Illinois in 1942 received 1½ million votes; in 1944 it took 2 million votes to win. The total Senatorial vote in 1942 was less than 3 million; in 1944 it was nearly 4 million.

Massachusetts elected a Senator in 1942 with 700,000 votes out of a total 1,300,000; in 1944 the candidate elected received over 1,200,000 votes out of a total of nearly 2 million.

The same pattern holds in rural states with smaller populations. Iowa cast 700,000 votes in the 1942 Senatorial election and over a million in 1944.

Nevada cast 41,000 in 1942; over 52,000 in 1944.

A study of individual Congressional districts shows that the decrease in the use of the vote between 1940 and 1942 was, if anything, greater than usual. In 1942, 50 Congressional districts which were Democratic in 1940 shifted to Republican. In almost every case this shift meant replacement of a progressive by a conservative. Only six Republican districts went Democratic.

Of the 50 districts that went Republican in 1942, 18 returned to the Democratic column in 1944. Another 18 which had been Republican in 1940 and 1942 shifted to Democratic with large 1944 votes.

A study of the districts which swung from Democratic to Republican makes it very clear that the

RESTRICTIVE LABOR LEGISLATION

TRUMAN BILL

President Green: "The American Federation of Labor cautions Congress and the President to take time out to consider carefully before going ahead with this program. [The Truman bill and the Case bill.] If it is put into effect, Fascism may grip America unawares."
"Even the effects of a nation-wide strike on a vital industry could not be as permanently disastrous to our economy or to the American way of life as slave labor and the nationalization of industry."
"To compel free workers to remain on the job against their will by drafting them into the armed forces and making them subject to court martial if they refuse is slave labor under Fascism."
"To seize private industry and operate it as long as no agreement is reached on a new labor contract constitutes nationalization of industry, not under Socialism, but under Fascism."
"The American Federation of Labor, founded upon the principle of voluntarism and giving its first and full allegiance to the principles of American democracy, will resist such punitive restrictive and un-American legislation as the Case bill and government seizure bill to its last breath."
(Excerpts in Justice-ILGU-AFL, 6-1-46)

President Philip Murray: "In a moment of wild hysteria an attempt is being made to stampede through Congress legislation which has as its sole aim the destruction of the labor movement of this nation."
"The Case bill [which has passed both houses of Congress], and President Truman's recent proposal, which has passed the House of Representatives, if finally enacted as law, would accomplish this most devastating end." . . .
"The Case bill and the President's proposal repeal for all practical purposes the benefits which labor has gained in the last thirteen years. Through the threat of injunctions, criminal penalties and the draft into military service, this legislation savagely attacks labor and imposes the equivalent of involuntary servitude."

"These measures constitute a beachhead for those sinister forces in American life which seek to use the military power as a means of crushing labor. Unless promptly rebuffed by lovers of liberty these forces will thrust all democratic rights into permanent quarantine.". . . .
(Excerpts from Murray statement. Advance-ACWA-CIO, 6-1-46)

President A. F. Whitney, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen: . . . . . .
"President Truman has made one of the most astounding propositions ever made by a President to the Congress. His actions are a stunning example of government by hysterics."
"Workingmen under his proposal would be drafted into the army and come under complete military law. He did this after having been told that coal could not be mined nor the railroads operated with bayonets. He would thus jeopardize all seniority rights."
"Granting any President at any time unlimited power to order the arrest of any striker and to put him in the army is opening the doors to Fascism."
"Since when did the broad lands of the United States become a penal institution by which laboring men are forced to serve in it as punishment?"
"The whole proposal of the President is so utterly foreign to the entire American philosophy of life that it will not work.". . . . .
(Excerpts, from statement on Railroad strike. Railroad Trainman 6-46)

President James G. Patton, National Farmers Union:
"This is a shameful hour in American history."
"None of us had ever thought to see the day when a President of the United States would recommend the impressment of free American citizens under the threat of violence, or would see members of the House of Representatives, a body of free men elected by free men, vote in glee to force their fellow citizens to work under the bayonet."
"Sorrowfully and with the deepest emotion, the National Farmers Union must denounce President Truman's message and speech in the settlement of the railroad strike, and the bill he has proposed, as naked, open fascism."
"The fact that the bill now before the Senate carries a provision for the confiscation of profits of seized plants does not in any way mitigate the additional fact that the bill, for the first time in American history, proposes to use guns to coerce free citizens to work. Nothing can condone that. Hitler himself also confiscated business profits when it was expedient to do so."
"We stand at a crossroads, far graver in its import than any we have faced before in the workings of our democracy. Our whole national existence stems from the refusal of farmers and workingmen in 1776 to put up any longer with military domination and coercion."
"We have just fought another war on behalf of the same principle. In order to fight that war our sons were impressed into service. . .Neither Congress nor the President has the moral right to turn them into the agents of fascism."
. . . . . "Every citizen who values his liberties, every citizen who venerates the men who staked 'our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor' to found this republic, should rally to combat this enactment of brutality into legislation."
(Excerpts from statement. National Union Farmer, 6-1-46)

Advance(ACW-CIO)(6-1-46). Statement of Pres. Sidney Hillman to the Senate:
"Acting in a moment of national hysteria deliberately provoked by the reactionary forces of big business, the President has proposed and the House has adopted hastily conceived and ill-considered legislation vesting the national government with the most extreme and autocratic controls over the liberties and democratic rights of American workers ever seriously proposed in the history of our nation."
"The use of the injunctive powers of the federal courts and the military powers of the federal government to coerce free citizens and suppress their basic right to act in concert for the protection and improvement of their living standards and working conditions, violates the most fundamental concepts of American democracy."
"It is inconceivable that our national government should reward the devoted effort the self sacrifice and self restraint that American workers displayed in winning the victory by depriving them of the very freedoms which we fought a bitter war against fascism to preserve.". . .

CIO News. (6-10-46)
"In Washington and the nation, a labor movement united in defense of its basic rights this week demanded defeat of the sweeping Truman bill to kill strikes and throw striking workers into the army. "
"Spokesmen for CIO, AFL, Railway Brotherhoods and independent unions saw eye to eye on the necessity of defeating the suddenly-concocted legislation cooked up at the White House during the railroad strike and tossed before a Congress. . ."

UE News (Un. Elec. Radio & Machine Workers-CIO) (6-1-46)
"In the greatest peacetime demonstration of labor unity in action, CIO, AFL and railroad unions this wrek were engaged in the historic battle to beat back President Truman's attack on the labor movement. From every part of the country wires have been piling onto the desk of the President denouncing his proposals, and into the offices of the United States Senators demanding that they vote down the Truman proposals." "The National officers of the UE, in a telegram to the President . . .charged that legislation he proposed 'would destroy the freedom of the American people'". . .
(6-8-46)--"President Truman's bill 'satisfies the wildest anti-labor dreams of the most reactionary big business outfits and their representatives in Congress'", said a resolution of the Westinghouse East Pittsburg Works. "American labor would be reduced to the status of the slave labor of Hitler Germany and Fascist Italy."
"Big Business, freed from the threat of strike and other ecobomic action by labor, would open a drive against our wages and living standards."

Shipyard Worker. (CIO) (6-3-46). Statement by President John Green. Excerpts:
"The fight is on."
"President Truman has touched off a mad frenzy of hysteria to 'get labor.'
"He has sounded the signal that has long been sought by all the rapid foes of unionism, both in Congress and without, to start a legislative lynching bee with the unions as victims.". . .
"That it may usher in an orgy of restrictive legislation both on labor and on social issues at this writing seems a fairly certain conclusion.". . .

ACA News (May '46). Telegram of Pres. Selly, of ACA-CIO. Excerpt:
"...The American people will not tolerate threats, implied or otherwise, of involuntary servitude. We bitterly protest the threatened use of American troops who were recruited to fight fascism as mercenaries serving the railroad carriers against patient and long-suffering American working men." . . .
"The American people are shocked at the biased attitude expressed in your address in which the niderate and just demands of the railroad workers were completely ignored.". . .

ILWU Dispatcher-(CIO)(5-31-46):
"An angry tide of protest against President Harry B. Truman's crackdown on the railroad strikers and his vicious 'work or be drafted' strikebreaking bill swept the nation this week and stiffened the resistance of senate opponents of the measure." (From a news item.)
"Make no mistake about it. We are in the fight of our lives. The President and Congress have declared war on the working people, and we have just begun to fight."
"When a President of the United States tells Congress that members of labor unions should be put in jail for carrying out their constitutional right to strike, that is a declaration of war. And when the Congress of the United States supports him by passing legislation that will wipe out all of the gains labor has made in the past two decades, the Congress supports this declaration of war against the working people." (From a column by J. R. Robertson.)

Brief items from AFL press.

International Teamster (July '46):
"Under the pretext of restricting strikes, Congress is conspiring against the welfare of the American people. The program of Congress is not to eliminate strikes. It is to lower the standard of living. Legislation against strikes is only one phase of the program. By itself, it is serious enough. Coupled with the plan to raise prices, it is catastrophic." (Excerpt)

Typographical Journal(June '46). (President's column. Exerpts):
"Slavery of American workers has been given consideration by the Congress under the guise of 'emergency legislation' and the fallacy that this country is still at war. 'Emergency legislation' is an unacceptable palliative and the contention that the war is not over (depite the plain fact it actually ended more than a year ago) until the President or the Congress says so is no excuse for invasion of constitutional rights of American citizens."
"Reactionary legislators, encouraged by the noise generated by an hysterical press and wet-nursed 'news' commentators, went rampant when the President ill advisedly made his plea for conscription of labor. Loud applause was followed by quick action in the House of Representatives. But the program for hasty action stalled in the Senate.". . .
"Legislators who found great comfort and courage in the furore generated against mine and railroad workers in the hysteria of the moment would do well to give sober consideration to the temper of an outraged American people whose constitutional rights as free citizens they would invade. Annoyed expressions of an inconvenienced public do not reflect that real convictions and beliefs in a free country and the duty of their government to protect those constitutional freedoms."

East Bay Labor Journal(Calif. AFL. 6-7-46):
"With organized labor fighting furiously for self-preservation, broad and powerful opposition swiftly mounted against President Truman's sudden demands for power to draft strikers into the Army and jail union leaders.". . . ."...There is no time to lose! The slave labor bill is a blow from which free American workers can never recover!" (. . . .

AFL Executive Council (In Colo. Lab. Advo. 5-23-46):
"Lashing out strongly at foes of labor who are pressing for hasty enactment of anti-strike legislation 'in the spirit of vengeance', the Council pointed to millions of members of the AFL whose unions have negotiated new contracts by peaceful collective bargaining since the war ended without an interruption of production."

"The members of these unions, the Council declared, 'are bound to resent any attempt to penalize them with drastic legislation.' None of the restrictive labor measures proposed in Congress, the Council asserted after careful study, 'is constitutional of workable.'". . . .

Milwaukee Labor Press (AFL) (5-30-46)
"The 'fascist' labor bill which was slapped through the House last Saturday at the invitation of President Truman, is meeting with stiffer opposition, in the upper chamber of Congress."
"The measure was passed by an anti-labor majority in the House which has been 'needling' organized workers all during this session. It had the added incentive this time, of a bid from the executive department to 'do its worst', and it did." . . . .

CASE BILL

CIO President Philip Murray, in a letter to President Truman asking for veto of the Case Bill. (Excerpts):
"I write you at this critical moment in the Nation's history. . .I respectfully request you to veto this piece of legislation [H.R. 4908-the Case Bill] which has just been hastily passed by both Houses of Congress."
"This Act is not merely ill-considered and injurious to labor; it presents exceedingly grave dangers to the public welfare. Far from removing the causes of labor disputes, it will in fact encourage and increase labor disputes.". . . . . ."Those who have sponsored and actively promoted this legislation constitute the same vindictive goal-conscious minority which has been engaged in a campaign for the past ten years to repress labor and to destroy its rights.". . . . . ."Mr. President, the ill-assorted conglomeration of provisions which constitutes H. R. 4908 is a menace to sound labor relations. I repeat, not one of these proposals will promote industrial peace. Not one of them will reduce strikes or shorten their duration. All of these proposals are merely servings from a warmed-over anti-labor stew which has been kept brewing for the past 10 years.". . . . . .
". . .The campaign against labor in this country has three historic peaks, each coinciding with a period of great national tension. The first occurred in 1937 when trade unionism first became a force in the mass production industry.". . . . . ."The second drive against labor took place during the war itself. The sole product of that attack was the shameful Smith-Connaly Act."
"Today we are confronted by still a third attempt of organized anti-unionsm and its congressional spokesmen to utilize the tensions and readjustments of the post-war period for their own sinister ends. This third historic attack on labor, Mr. President, must be smashed because a free labor movement is a vital part of a free America." . . . . (CIO News 6-10-46)

President William Green, AFL urges veto of Case bill.
"As it passed Congress, the Case Bill. . .constitutes a dangerous, if not fatal, legal club over organized labor. The bill's most menacing feature is the one which makes unions liable to be sued for damages in event of strikes involving interstate commerce. In the opinion of the AFL's legal staff, this provision may deluge unions with lawsuits and, unless they take careful precautions, plunder their treasuries.". . .(From Chicago Union Leader, under headline "Veto Case Bill, Demands Green". 6-8-46).
Stated Green: "...The seven million members of the AFL will be rebels as long as that bill is on the statute books of the nation. . . .We will never accept it willingly. We will continue the fight to have it wiped out. We will try and have men elected to Congress by the votes of labor who will repeal such abhorrent legislation." . . . . (Colo. Lab. Advo, 6-13-46)

"The labor movement, both national and local, is rallying its entire strength in a desperate attempt to get President Truman to veto the Case bill, the most vicious anti-labor measure ever passed by the House and Senate.". . . . .
(COLO. Labor. Advo. 6-6-46)

"The furious tempest over the Case bill, now vetoed by President Truman, has focused national attention, among other sharply controversial points, on one major provocative issue--labor's inabridged right to strike.". . . .
"But what about the right to strike? Is it an absolute or a conditional right? And if it is a conditional right, who is to impose the conditions--industry, government or labor itself? The position of organized labor right along--and this position has not been changed in the slightest way by the recent strikes in the essential industries--has been that the right to strike in private industry is absolute and that no workers, whether individually or in groups, could be required to render service against their will. This absolute right, labor insists, can be modified either by a labor-management agreement for a given period or by voluntary action in time of national emergency, as was the case of organized labor's solemnly adhered-to pledge not to strike during the war years."
"Labor, however, will fight any legal curtailment of the right to strike in private industry as an invasion of its basic right--call it absolute right, if you will. Organized labor is fully aware that once this interference starts, whether in the form of a 60-day cooling off' period or in the form of federal agencies vested with mandatory powers, it will continue worming its way into the very heart of normal collective bargaining until only an empty shell is left.". . . .
"The demise of the Case bill will be regretted only by those employers -- or Congressmen--who have never viewed collective bargaining as anything but an infliction perpetrated upon industry by the hated New Deal. . . Like the Smith-Connaly Act, it would have done little to reduce strife and prevent stoppages. Instead, it would have added to labor's deep sense of injury and offended the elementary American principles of freedom". . . . .

HOBBS BILL

"AFL President William Green, in a telegraphic message to President Truman, made an urgent appeal for immediate veto of the Hobbs bill."
"Similar appeals poured into the White House from Daniel J. Tobin, president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters (AFL) and other AFL leaders. . ."
[Green called for veto on three grounds: (1) The danger, that if it became law, it would "interfere with the exercise of the elgitimate activities" of those in the transportation industry and in production of goods entering into interstate commerce; (2) that it would be susceptible to broad and dangerous interpretations by the courts. "The penalties provided in the bill might be imposed upon members as well as officers of unions engaged in a strike...when, through the influence and instigation of labor-hating employers, violence in some form might occur;" (3) that widespread unrest and discontent in the ranks of labor would prevail if the measure became law.] (Memphis Lab. Review, AFL. 6-28-46)

CIO President Murray urged veto of the Hobbs "anti-racketeering bill as a menace to honest and legitimate union activity." . . .
"President Murray's letter pointed out that the Hobbs bill 'is the same measure which you condemned in your veto message. No attempt has been made to meet the objections to it which you voiced and which impelled you to veto it." [He stated that the Anti-Racketeering Act of 1934, already on the statute books, and the Hobbs bill 'adds absolutely nothing' to legal protection against racketeering. On the contrary, said Murray, it deletes from the 1934 act the only two sections providing for the protection of labor's legitimate rights. These two sections were added to the bill in 1934 at the express request of the Attorney-General. These two provisions said (1) that the Act was not to apply to the 'payment of wages by a bona fide employer to a bona fide employe'; and (2) that no court was to construe the Act 'insuch manner as to impair, diminish, or in any manner affect the rights of bona fide organizations in lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof."] "It is these two provisions which the Hobbs bill would delete," stated Murray. . . . (CIO News 7-1-46)

LABOR ON PRICE CONTROL

"President William Green of the AFL branded the proposed amendments [to the price control act] as 'destructive' and warned they would 'breed strikes'".
"...The amendments approved by both houses of Congress 'mean complete abandonment of price control' at the end of June and charged that 'Congress failed to honor the clear, emphatic and overwhelming mandate of the people to hold the line on the cost of living.'". . .
"Lifting of price ceilings on a number of commodities, as provided for in the Senate Amendments, would result in mounting discontent and dissatisfaction among wage earners of the nation."
"The failure of Congress to extend the Price Control Act for one year without weakeningamendments is bound to bring about widespread and disruptive industrial strife.". . . . (Raleigh Union Her. AFL. 6-20-46)

"CIO President Murray...called upon President Truman to veto the "amendments to the Price Control Act" [and ask for resolution securing extenstion of OPA for one year.] . . . ."The proposed measure is not price control[Murray said] but rather a guarantee of inflation and soaring profits at the expense of the American people.". . . .
"...Amounts to repeal of price control...would thereby mark the beginning of inflation which could have no stopping point short of collapse and economic chaos."
..."I share fully your concern for the maintenance of industrial peace in America. In that spirit I must point out that the proposed amendments would gravely jeopardize the hard-won industrial peace which the nation is just now achieving...The policy contemplated maintenance of an effective control over the cost of living of American workers.". . . . Veterans and Labor

Paid Education for Veterans at Labor School Here

By ALLEN ROSENFIELD
CLS Veterans' Director

THE California Labor School is the only progressive labor school in the nation where veterans can study under benefits of the GI Bill of Rights.

It is mushrooming to prominence as the nation's recognized training center for trade union leadership because it is the only labor school so equipped to train trade unionist-veterans for active leadership in their unions.

LOW COST LEADERSHIP

Combining the advantages of the school's accrediting for GI education with its special training facilities, all unions now have the opportunity of securing leadership instruction for selected members at a minimum investment of time and money.

Under the GI bill provisions, veterans attending the school full time receive $90 monthly subsistence pay if married or with dependents, $65 monthly if single.

In addition to this, all tuition, books and other fees are paid the school by the Veterans Administration.

In order to save one or two months delay in getting GI Bill payments, veterans should apply to the Veterans Administration nearest home for a Certificate of Eligibility necessary to receive the educational benefits. A photostatic copy of discharge papers is required when applying.

ASSISTANCE AT SCHOOL

While veterans returned to their trade unions are going to school on the subsistence provided by the GI Bill, the unions as well have found an additional way to assist the student-veteran to mutual advantage of both union and individual.

SCHOLARSHIPS SET UP

Progressive unions, aware of the need for leadership development to shoulder the increasing burden being placed on organized labor by government and industry, and recognizing the returned veteran as a natural source for such leadership, are setting up nominal scholarships to give veterans added

Peace, Full Employment School Aim

By HOLLAND ROBERTS
CLS Educational Director

ALL courses of study at the California Labor School are created to help those who come here solve today's problems of society and personal welfare; the problems of full employment, homes, a rising standard of living, a permanent peace.

How can every able-bodied person in the United States have a secure job at good wages?

Full employment is the goal of the American people and to this ringing question an answer is fashioned in more than a dozen courses of study at the school; study in economics, American labor history, in imperialism and union organization.

BUILDING PEACE

To the general welfare, building the peace is another key; a key now being polished for the September 3rd opening of the fall term at the trade union fostered San Francisco school.

Many courses will be offered this term to point the way to peace. "China and Japan" and "Latin America Comes of Age" are two, to be taught by Ramon Lavalle, a Republican Army veteran of the Spanish Civil War, who renounced a nine-year diplomatic career when he quit the Argentina Embassy in Tokyo to become a citizen of the United States.

Thomas Harris, executive director of the American Russian Institute, will draw upon his travels and study in Russia, Europe and the United States to present a colorful, special course on the Soviet Union. Jules Carson will illuminate the necessity for understanding and controlling monopoly

ILWU Urges Locals to Use School

California Labor School training of trade union leaders to help realize objectives of organizing new workers and strengthening existing locals has been urged by the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union in a letter to all ILWU locals.

The letter, signed by ILWU President Harry Bridges and Secretary-treasurer Louis Goldblatt, declared:

"This school offers an unique program of workers' education, especially designed for active union members who wish to become trained, efficient union leaders. We urge you publicize this program among the veteran members of your union and encourage brothers and sisters with leadership possibilities to take advantage of it."

The letter stressed the need for trained leadership to meet the growing demands being imposed on labor by trends in government and industry.

Film, Foundation Funds to School

Substantial support for the California Labor School's expanding program of trade union education has been received from the Frank Sinatra film, "The House I Live In," and from the Robert Marshall Foundation.

The School was awarded $3,000 from proceeds of the singer's RKO film on tolerance, and trustees of the Marshall Foundation voted the School a grant for the year of $2,500 "for the training of leadership in the trade union movement."

The school was one of ten organizations in the nation chosen to share in the film's net by Malcolm Ross, chairman of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

Ross, in announcing the award, said it was selected because it shared with the film "the aim of making America a place where all groups can live together in harmony."

Build Peace Keynote for Special Study

and Leon Alexander will paint a course in World Labor: Past, Present and Future, with the brush of his European experience.

Classes at the California Labor School are informal and simple. There are no grades, examinations or degrees. Thus people come to the school to learn easily what they want to know about the world in which they live.

LEARNING PRACTICED

Whenever possible, students practice what they learn so that theory is integrated with an actual working knowledge. In this way every class becomes a workshop.

Such practical learning is possible beyond scope of the ordinary academic institution, because teachers at the California Labor School are professional people as well as instructors and many earn their living in the same field in which they teach. By daily practice in their professions, they keep up to date and give their students latest expert knowledge.

All courses focus on building the labor movement as a central means of maintaining and developing our democracy. There are courses to give particular attention to the history of American and world labor movements, economics necessary for labor progress and the techniques needed by all who build the labor movement.

In the forthcoming term, School Director David Jenkins will join with union leaders as guest instructors to analyze recent strike struggles. Trade Union Director Irwin Elber and selected union leaders will explain the operation of unions under present day conditions. They will draw from factual experience in their unions to detail the techniques of organizing the unorganized, drafting and negotiation of contracts and duties of officers and stewards.

Political and union leaders will participate in Elber's special course, "Labor's Political Program Today," and labor's legislative needs will be studied and current legislation analyzed in "Labor Law and Legislation," directed by Vivian Dahl, of the U. S. Department of Labor, and selected specialists.

HOW CONTRACT WORKS

For labor leaders and others who wish to understand the inner workings of contracts as they operate in industry today, a special course on Collective Bargaining and Research will be taught by Lincoln Fairley, ILWU national research director; Paul Pinsky, California CIO research director, and Philip Eden, California CIO research associate.

Union members and leaders will be trained to conduct meetings in Effective Speaking and Parliamentary Procedure, taught by Isobel Cerney. Practical workshop tasks taught by working journalists Tom Weber, Gail Hazard and Jules Carson will emphasize Labor Journalism. Writing shop papers and leaflets, and such technical aspects as copy reading and make-up will be studied.

The school uses history as a weapon to arm labor against fascism and reaction. The history needed to understand the problems faced today is dramatized in a wide variety of courses on American history, History of Our Times, and Modern European History, taught by Hazel Grossman and Leon Alexander. In Negro History and Culture, Thelma Gorham, Negro community leader, brings to light the contributions of the Negro people to our nation and draws them into focus on the struggle against discrimination and bigotry.

The Industrial Arts department offers job training in many fields: plastics, ceramics, photography, industrial design, interior and home design and the fine arts. A special seven-week workshop course in mimeograph and layout will be valuable to union office workers and all who need a working knowledge of the use of mimeograph.

Isobel Cerney directs an English department which offers a broad range of work from basic classes for those with little knowledge of English on up to college and graduate programs.

BOOKS PUBLISHED

Young writers interested in the short story, novel, poetry or the play are offered evening study or full-time work under successful writers and teachers. A number of books are now being written by students in the school, and they have published several stories and articles, as well as one book.

Foreign language courses will provide practical speaking knowledge in Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Yiddish and Hebrew, along with reading and writing. Such utilitarian training as shorthand, arithmetic and bookkeeping is to be given.

The school also has its special cultural features. Leo Christiansen, former director of the People's Chorus, conducts the notable Labor School chorus. There will be training in piano and singing for those wishing solo work.

Mara Alexander presents the Union Theater, a class in drama for working people and professional actors desiring to appear before union audiences. Modern Dance Workshop is directed by Mimi Kagan. There are also offerings in recreational dancing, young people's dancing, folk dancing, led by Julia and Earl Lundwall, and ballroom dancing.

Growth of School Helps Build Labor

By IRWIN ELBER
CLS Trade Union Director

THE California Labor School is the largest of its character in the history of the United States.

Within four years, over 20,000 people in the Bay area have attended classes and lectures at the school or in extension classes at union halls.

The CLS has been nationally and internationally recognized as the nation's top labor school by notable educators, non-unionists of prominence and by visiting and lecturing international labor figures.

Despite this recognition, the school is not large enough even yet to help labor, of all affiliations, meet the deep problems and threats it faces today.

'PARLOR CAT' BID

Every honest labor man who knows the score realizes that monopoly-employer interests are out to break the unions determined to protect and improve the conditions of their members, or to encourage "parlor cat" unions that would sell out their members to curry employer favor.

The role of labor education thus boils down to the question:

"How can labor education help us in the day to day job we face as active unionists?"

FOUR ANSWERS

Here are some answers already evolved by unions in close working cooperation with the California Labor School:

1. If you think union membership meetings are too often long and boring, then the school's now established film, pamphlet and visual education aid department can be used at nominal rates by all unions to enliven meetings.

2. If either as a rank and filer or an official you want to hit the floor more but aren't sure of yourself enough to feel you can put over your point, then the school's classes in public speaking, parliamentary procedure and union building will provide you the necessary poise and savvy.

3. If only a few people instead of many are carrying the entire load of committee work, grievances, dues collection, negotiation, organization, etc., then follow the lead of some unions who have already solved these problems by training additional secondary and top leadership at the school.

4. If you regard economics and politics as something so mysterious that only a few politicians, bankers and big money editorial writers can understand (with the result you're taken in by the phony economics that says high prices, low wages, "boom and bust" are inevitable in the American way of life), then the school's classes in economics, labor history, theory and practice have the scientific basis for the kind of economics and politics you must know to explode those phoney economics.

EDUCATION PRACTICAL

Concerning theory and practice, practice without theory is a ship without a destination. You can steam ahead, but where are you going?

Some labor people belittle education as "ivory tower," unrealistic; and not without some reason.

Unions themselves can be the best schools for workers. But let's not fool ourselves.

Education pays off — when it combines the "Know-How" with the "Know Why."

Isn't it about time we made our unions the kind of schools which can organize and maintain permanent security and peace?

The 75 AFL, CIO and R.R. Brotherhood unions which sponsor and support the California Labor School do so because this school is trying to combine the theory and practice which can help working men and women and other progressive sections of the community realize these objectives.

The school is not yet large enough, because labor is not strong enough. The education of labor and the progress of labor must go together. Build labor education, and build stronger unions.

CIO, AFL, Brotherhood Leaders Praise School's Training for Building of Labor Unity

"THE International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union and its locals in the Bay area have cooperated with the California Labor School on training courses for ILWU members with highly successful results.

"Union members, particularly veterans, should take advantage of the opportunities offered by the school.

"Labor's program requires the development of new, trained leaders, with new skills and techniques, and will command the full use of all our resources. The California Labor School can and does play an integral part in that program."

H. R. BRIDGES, President CIO Intl. Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

"THE California Labor School is deserving of unrestricted commendation for its contribution to the educational strengthening of the entire labor movement.

"I cannot strongly enough recommend to all unions the use of its facilities as a certain means of forwarding the progress of organized labor; both through training within labor ranks and enlightenment of those outside the pale of organization.

"The California Labor School can play a vital part in equipping labor to meet its tasks of the day."

G. F. IRVINE, Legislative Board, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen.

"I LAUD the role of the California Labor School in strengthening the labor movement and urge all members of my union and other AFL unions to take full advantage of the union building opportunities offered by this school.

"I have endorsed the school since its inception, and I am proud of its contribution to organized labor.

"I am additionally proud that my son, George Hardy, a veteran returned from overseas, actively participated on the school's board of directors."

CHARLES HARDY, Intl. Vice President AFL Building Service Employees Intl. Union.

Labor School Gives Vets Both Classwork, Job Training aid while training at the Labor School.

ILWU Local 6, San Francisco, has set up five $50 per month scholarships. ILWU Local 13, San Pedro, has established the same. San Diego's FTA local 64 set up one scholarship of $150 for one term. Others are following suit in varying degree.

The California Labor School's special course for trade unionists extends over fifteen weeks full time. There are 25 hours of instruction per week from 1:30 to 6 p. m., Monday through Friday, plus one or more evening classes.

Such classes are included as American Labor, Economics and Labor, Effective Speaking, Collective Bargaining and Research, Organizing and Union Building and Labor Journalism. Registration currently is open by mail or at the school, 216 Market Street, San Francisco (11), for the Fall term starting September 3.

HOUSING, PART TIME JOBS

In addition to easy registration, the school's policies of no entrance requirements eliminate necessity of pre-formal schooling and no discrimination offer advantages to Negro and minority group vets unobtainable elsewhere. The school also has arrangements for low cost housing and part time jobs for vets. But the main thing, with crowded state and private schools turning away applicants, is that enrollment at the California Labor School is OPEN!

Concerning trade union veterans, three steps are suggested to interested unions:

1. Endorse and become another of the 75 CIO, AFL and RR Brotherhood unions sponsoring the school.

2. Inform your veterans committee of the educational benefits available at the school and urge individual veterans in the membership to take advantage of them.

3. Establish some scholarship basis on which one or more selected members may be sent to the school for special training.

During the summer term, more than 175 veterans were enrolled in the California Labor School. They found it mature and practical in its approach to problems of the day, because it is a trade union school, fostered and supported by 75 CIO, AFL and Brotherhood unions, as well as by other forward-looking groups.

Student participation in establishment of school policy has proved itself popular with veterans attending the California Labor School. Under the plan student council members representing each class meet regularly with school administrators to discuss curriculum and school affairs.

During its recent California State Convention, the American Veterans' Committee vigorously endorsed the school as a "center for labor, liberal and community organizations" that "can make an important contribution to the knowledge of individual veterans."

Vets Tell Aims in School Study

VETERANS studying at the California Labor School are quick to speak of their aims and purposes in attending the nation's adult education center for trade union training.

HARRY H. McNEILL, AFL Masters, Mates and Pilots, says: "I'm taking a full labor course to equip myself for more effective contribution to expanding and strengthening trade unionism."

KEITH EICKMAN, CIO International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, declares: "What I am learning at the California Labor School will be of terrific help in my work. I had some experience in the labor movement, but I hadn't begun to appreciate what there is to know."

SARA SCHEIBER, former WAVE, was looking to crowded University of California for her Masters' Degree but: "I found the best workable training to be at the California Labor School, academically because of its special labor courses and practically because of its close working cooperation with the unions themselves."

TED ALLEN, Negro veteran from Texas, asserts: "The California Labor School is especially good for Negro veterans because it teaches a special understanding of the ways to advance the labor movement and secure lasting peace through harmony between races."

Teachings Offered to Meet Aims

UNDER four main divisions, the California Labor School teaches many subjects.

LABOR ORGANIZATION trains for union leadership through the development of a comprehensive understanding of labor's history, present program, political aims and economic struggles. Special classes deal with preparation and negotiation of contracts, labor statistics and research, organizing and union building, all the functional items of unionism. Students attend actual union meetings, work with shop stewards, meet with union leaders and learn how to issue union publications.

SOCIAL SCIENCE emphasis is on economics, history and current politics, with the aim of providing a basic knowledge of the major forces at work in the world and the direction necessary for progressive action on a community, national and international basis.

CREATIVE WRITING is designed for those desiring a profession in writing, with a program particularly arranged for those actively working on books or other material. A Writers' Seminar provides regular criticism and assistance with work in progress.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS provides practical job training for work in plastics, ceramics, furniture design, construction, photography and graphic arts. Much time is spent in workshop activities under guidance of established artists and craftsmen.

A SHORT CUT

EVERY vet will save from one to two months getting subsistence pay by applying to the VA nearest home for a Certificate of Eligibility. You have to have this certificate to claim the pay off. You can still get it through the Vets Department at the school when you enroll, but you'll save time and trouble if you get it NOW! It costs nothing, and whether you go to school now, later, or at all, the Certificate is good indefinitely. If you get it NOW you'll have it if and when you want it. AND IT'S IMPORTANT to take a photostatic copy of your discharge papers with you when you apply for the Certificate.

Your Veterans' Advisor at the California Labor School, Room 309, can assist you. The California Labor School also offers special counseling and guidance to veterans on their study program.

S. F. School Affairs

No dull atmosphere is to be found at San Francisco's Labor School. To the contrary, students and friends have made of it a lively community center.

Extra-curricular activities at the school include frequent social affairs where students and faculty members become fast friends. The popular Sunday night film series, also, offers San Franciscans rare foreign films as well as early American "classics" seldom displayed elsewhere in the city.

Oakland Labor School

Now commencing its third year of operation, the California Labor School in Oakland offers numerous educational and cultural advantages to East Bay residents.

Taking advantage of the abundance of experienced labor leaders and trained instructors in the Bay Area, the Oakland school presents a varied course of study for unionists, veterans, and others seeking practical education.

The Oakland school is located at 2030 Broadway.

SCHOOL AND COMMUNITY

THE California Labor School participates in many community activities. Forums and conferences leading to action have dealt with public health, housing, transportation, minority problems and liberal education.

Outstanding among these have been the World Peace Forum, the Workshop in Public Relations which won national industry and labor attention, the Journalism School taught by guest instructors from the San Francisco-Oakland Newspaper Guild's working newsmen, and Mara Alexander's labor theater.

During the United Nations Conference in San Francisco, the State Department designated the California Labor School as official host to labor delegates. French delegates Marcel Camus of CGT and Jean Brodier of the French Christian Federation of Workers officially informed the State Department that the Labor School constituted a high point in their labor survey of the U. S. and that they had recommended its features be incorporated in French labor education.

DISTINGUISHED GUEST SPEAKERS have included Czech Consul Bohus Benes, ex-British Labor Minister Rt. Hon. Margaret Bondfield, Yugoslav Undersecretary of State Stoyan Gavrilovich, Latin-America Labor Leader Vicente Lombardo Toledano, All-Soviet Trade Union Congress General Secretary Michael Tarosov, India's Railway Workers' Vice-president Fasal Qurban, Labor Leader Harry Bridges, Actor Orson Welles, Poet Muriel Rukeyser, Architect Frank Lloyd Wright, Journalist Eric Severeid, Artist William Gropper, Anthropologist Dr. Paul Radin, Psychiatrist Dr. Jacob Kasanin, Screen Writer John Howard Lawson, Singer Paul Robeson.

DISTINGUISHED SPONSORS include U. S. Senator Sheridan Downey, U. S. Congressman Franck Havenner, Attorney General Robert Kenny, State Senator John F. Shelley, Bishop Edward L. Parsons, Attorney Bartley C. Crum, Conductor Pierre Monteux, Editor Carlotta Bass, Crocker Bank Chairman J. K. Moffatt, Superior Judge Sylvain Lazarus, Civic Leader Martha Gerbode, Stanford University Professor of Industrial Relations Paul Eliel, Wendell Phillips, AFL, and Paul Schnur, CIO.

SCHOOL AND TRADE UNION

THE most vital single function of the California Labor School is carried out in classes by the Trade Union and Industrial Relations Department.

Because of the dynamic role of organized labor in the nation, a high percentage of men and women studying at the school came for labor classes. Their teachers are union leaders, government and labor experts. In the classes, they study labor's political program, economics from labor's viewpoint, the history of American and world labor and labor techniques.

The memberships of some unions have voted that new members attend classes at the school in order to learn the basic facts of the labor movement. Others send shop stewards and officials to classes.

An example of how the school works with the union concerns ten ILWU students from the five Hawaiian Islands, officers from sugar and pineapple workers, longshoremen and warehousemen who came to the mainland last February. They trained at the school in basic labor courses, then went into locals here to sit in on actual negotiation and membership meetings. They visited plants and warehouses, came back to the school to polish their training in advanced courses and at forums, films and lectures, and returned to their Island locals in April.

In many such instances, unionists have used the knowledge and ability gained at the school to reach positions of greater responsibility and leadership in their organizations.

SCHOOL AND ART

CALIFORNIA Labor School art courses offer a functional approach to art and job training for new professions and industries.

Teachers are professional artists and craftsmen.

Students learn theory as well as technique. They study basic design, the uses of tools and materials.

Composition, color, metals, design, figure drawing, painting, ceramics, plastics and photography are major subjects taught.

The Gregor Duncan Memorial Gallery at the school regularly exhibits the work of outstanding students and local artists and craftsmen.

EDUCATIONAL Director Holland Roberts explains relations of American history to labor and minorities to vet students Wing Art Ng and Jack Randall (MC&S).

Instructors Selected From Labor Movement

THE California Labor School has over 100 instructors and lecturers handling some 1500 full and part-time students in over eighty courses.

In keeping with the school's orientation on the labor movement the major part of the school's teaching staff is drawn directly from the labor organizations.

For example, the school's trade union director, Irwin Elber, is a veteran trade unionist with years of active trade union experience. Elber was a national organizer for the United Federal Workers of America; West Coast director of the Oil Workers Organizing Campaign; Labor consultant of the Western Regional Office of the War Manpower Commission.

His classes reflect this rich background. You will find in all the other classes of the labor department at CLS instructors of the same calibre. Lincoln Fairley, ILWU research head, Julius Stern, director of the CIO veterans' bureau and many other trade union leaders bringing their practical experience and teaching ability into the class room.

The same high standards are maintained in the other department at CLS. The Social Sciences, headed by Hazel Grossman, with years of experience in the labor and progressive movement has a well-trained staff of instructors including Isobel Cerney, Ramon Lavalle, diplomat and war correspondent, Thomas L. Harris of the American Russian Institute and many others pre-eminently qualified in their fields.

Heading the educational department is Dr. Holland Roberts who gave up his professorship at Stanford University to teach at CLS. Dr. Roberts has worked closely with the labor movement since he joined CLS's staff and has won a wide following among trade unionists for his penetrating and original treatment of labor education. His courses in American History and History of the American Labor Movement are among the most popular at the school.

Dave Jenkins, CLS director, has more than 15 years of active labor experience behind him. Jenkins has been, among other things, Educational Director of the National Maritime Union, Legislative Director of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific and Secretary of San Francisco's Labor's Non-Partisan League. His class for the Fall term will be Recent Strike Struggles, which will deal with role of strikes and the development of the American labor movement from 1919 to the present.

Space limits the listing of the instructors and lecturers slated for the fall term at CLS to a few:

Helen Wheeler, business agent, Miscellaneous Employes Union Local 110, AFL; Tom Weber, journalist formerly on the staff of Friday Magazine; Paul Pinsky, research director, California CIO; Luisa Moreno, Regional Director, Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers, Archie Green, AFL Shipwrights and Joiners; Charles F. B. Roeth, state director California U.S.E.S.

The Industrial Arts Department is manned by a staff that is top-flight in its field. Heading the industrial arts program is Eugene Bielawski, instructor in basic design workshop and photography, Institute of Design, Chicago. Working with Bielawski are such well known artists as Giacoma Patri, Margaret De Patta, Milton Halberstadt, Peter Macchiarini, Victor Arnatoff and others.

Whatever the course, the California Labor School has sought and found for instructors the people who were tops in their particular field. What the school demands from its instructors is that they know their stuff, have experience in their field and have the knack of getting it over to others.

Academic traditions and stuffiness go out the window at CLS. Student and instructor relationship is close and relaxed. The student can and does say: "I don't get it," or "I don't agree" or "please repeat that," or "I should have heard this long ago. It would have helped a lot."

And all you have to do to come to CLS is to register any time up to September 18, or at any five-week period thereafter.

You can't miss.

Realism Biggest R Of School

By DAVID JENKINS
CLS Director

REALISM is the biggest of the California Labor School's three Rs.

It was born of trade union parentage in San Francisco shortly after Pearl Harbor.

To organized labor in the closed shop city nearest Honolulu, Pearl Harbor meant production. The sinew of production was labor. The brain of labor was leadership. Labor set about building ships, mounting guns and training leaders.

FIRST TWO HUNDRED

Six CIO and AFL unions foraged an $1,800 founding fee, assembled a 2,500-volume library, and 200 union students subscribed to the first fifteen classes in an auto loft over Van Ness Avenue.

The school today is sponsored and endorsed by 75 AFL, CIO and RR Brotherhoods, including the Allied Printing Trades, S. F. Building Trades and California CIO Councils and the State Legislative Board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, as well as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the American Veterans Committee and the Howard Sperry Maritime Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

It has a 7,000-volume library and is in a five-story building on S. F.'s main Market Street, complete with administrative offices, classrooms, work shops, auditorium, art gallery and student lounge. It has an East Bay branch at 2030 Broadway, Oakland.

Students average 900, taking 2,000 classes per quarter, of which 50% are unionists. Roughly 20% are veterans (176 attended last term). About 55% are women, many from the armed services.

ADULT EDUCATION

It is a school of adult education with an average student age of 28 years and with a functional curriculum keyed to labor history, theory and job practice but including cultural classes.

Such a program has special appeal for the awakened veteran of the war against fascism.

In fact, biggest boost to the trade union fostered school's ambition to attain an enrollment position comparable to the academic state and private schools is it's recent accrediting for veterans education under the GI Bill of Rights.

The Labor School, with a five-year foothold in the labor movement, with policies of no entrance requirements and no discrimination with that five-story Market Street building to fill, will have no such problem of accommodation with the opening of the fall term September 3.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

A REPUBLICAN 'GIFT' ★ ★ ★ MEAT FOR THE RICH

By FRED d'AVILA

THE POLITICAL organization that inflicted Herbert Hoover and the 1929 depression on the American people, this week became the Party of Red Meat Plus High Prices.

Those who could afford dollar a pound round steak cheered the action forced on President Truman, who removed meat from price control under pressure of a Republican-inspired, unworkable price law and a meat shortage created by big packers hungry for profits. Reactionary Democrats, in opposition to the Admistration, cooperated with the Republicans.

Millions of workers, however, became the victims of rationing in reverse. With food prices up nearly 50% since V-J Day, wage and salary earners found little to cheer about. Where meat was available, prices were outrageous. Sample retail checks in N. Y. City and Washington, D. C. showed the following comparisons between former ceiling prices under OPA and the new levels set by the GOP and the Packers:

	SEPT. OPA CEILING	GOP PRICES
Hamburger	30c lb.	55c
Pork	43c lb.	89c to $1
Rib lamb chops	64c lb.	79c
Ham	42c lb.	68c
Frankfurters	50c lb.	65c
Bacon	43c lb.	70c
Chuck Roast	47c lb.	78c

One Washington meat market offered hamburger ground from top round steak at $1.40 a pound! At another shop, porterhouse steak sold at $1.15 a pound, sirloin at $1 and round steak at 95c.

IN A REPORT on the situation, the CIO Political Action Committee charged that the Republicans, guided by Senators Taft and Wherry, had led the fight to wreck price control and had encouraged packers to hold back supplies in the hope of creating a crisis.

"It is clear," said the PAC report, "that the packers, in a well organized attempt to place their Republican spokesmen in the 80th Congress, have engineered the greatest conspiracy ever perpetrated against the American people.

"At their instance and that of the Republican Party, we are well on the way to economic disaster. Nothing but a tremendous outpouring of votes against this coalition in November can stem the tide."

SAMPLE of what's to come—with only 15% of the average family's food budget subject to price control—was a Dun & Bradstreet report showing the organization's wholesale food index hit an all-time record of $6.15. The previous record was $5.42 last Aug. 27. Under OPA controls, the index stayed below $4.50.

Removed from controls this week were: margarine, shortening, mayonnaise, salad dressing, cooking and salad oils, coffee, soybean oil and byproduct animal feeds and mixed feeds. The Price Decontrol Board refused to reimpose ceilings on milk, butter, cheese and other dairy products despite the fact that it agreed their prices have risen to "an unreasonable level."

As meat controls went overboard, wholesale prices jumped in some cases over 200% and the run of cattle from the 12 major livestock centers in the West

Tennessee Edition

Mob Rule Reigns In Parsons, Tenn.

Law and order doesn't prevail in some sections of Tennessee, CIO organizers have found out. Recently four representatives of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers were ordered out of Parsons, Tenn. The order did not come from a goon squad nor from a company official. It came from the highest official of the city—an official under oath to uphold the laws. It was the mayor himself, W. H. Long, of Parsons, who ordered the organizers out of Parsons.

The organizers were Ed Blair, Eula Mae McGill, W. W. Luke and Clara Luke. All are citizens of Tennessee, and Blair and Luke are war veterans.

The group recently had organized and won an election in the Salant & Salant plant in Lexington, Tenn., some 18 miles from Parsons. Salant is one of the most vicious anti-labor companies operating in the south. The ACWA won an election in the company's plant at Union City, Tenn., in August, and the company quickly refused to bargain with the union.

After the Lexington election, three ACWA members in that plant had began voluntary organizing work in the Salant & Salant plant at Parsons. Apparently the company found out about it. The mayor apparently was notified of that fact.

When the Lexington workers started out on a trip to Parsons early in September, they were met some miles from there by a deputy sheriff who warned them to stay away. The CIO members were told by the deputy that the road into Parsons was barricaded and that if they went any closer "something might happen to you fellows." They were advised by the deputy to return to Lexington by a back road "so that nothing happens to you."

Then the ACWA organizers went into Parsons. They were making good headway with the workers.

Late in September while the ACWA organizers were in Parsons, Mayor Long told Ed Blair to leave town—"if you don't, you folks may get hurt."

It was evident to Blair and the others that the mayor meant business, so they left quietly.

Protests were filed by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Paul R. Christopher, Tennessee CIO Director, and W. A. Copeland, West Tennessee CIO Director and president of the state council, to the mayor, to the sheriff and to the governor.

The mayor and sheriff didn't bother to answer the protests. The governor wrote a letter to Copeland, which was a nice letter, but didn't say anything. The governor, in effect, wrote that there wasn't anything he could do; that he couldn't use the state patrol as requested by Copeland to protect the CIO organizers. As a matter of fact, the governor wrote that he wasn't so sure that he could do anything about the situation.

The State Council adopted a stiff resolution at its Nashville meeting protesting again to the governor, reminding the chief executive that Parsons was in Tennessee; that the organizers were on a peaceable mission to Parsons and were entitled to the same legal protection as anyone else visiting Parsons.

CIO Dixie Drive Picks Up Steam

The Southern Organizational drive began to pick up steam in Tennessee during recent weeks with seven plants added to the CIO fold in the state in addition to the big Atomic Bomb plant at Oak Ridge. A number of petition are still on file.

When completion of the Oak Ridge campaign, State Director Paul H. Christopher assigned organizers to other sections of the state, with indications that few, if any, counties in Tennessee will be neglected in the organizational effort.

Elections won during the last few weeks in Tennessee (in addition to Oak Ridge) were:

Tennessee Marble, Inc., at Knoxville: United Stone Workers 43; District 50, 9.

Caine Steel Co., Memphis, Steelworkers 27; no union 9.

Star Mfg. Co., Memphis, United Furniture Workers 13; no union 4.

Salant & Salant, Lexington, Amalgamated Clothing Workers 108; AFL 89.

Miller Bros. Co., Knoxville, Woodworkers 85; no union 8.

Nashville Cotton Oil Co., Nashville, FTA 63; District 50, 24.

American Optical Co., Memphis, Optical Workers 31; no union 11.

The Miller Cros. election at Knoxville, was a particularly significant victory for it was the first time a woodworking plant in that city had ever been permitted to have a union. Numerous efforts had been made to unionize woodworking plants in Knoxville, but all had ended futilely.

District 50 was given two trimmings in the elections won by the CIO, and the AFL's United Garment Workers took another pasting at Lexington.

170 Plants Added to CIO List in South

CIO unions have been chosen collective bargaining agencies of the employes in 170 Southern industrial plants since late in May, Director Van A. Bittner, of the CIO Organizing Committee, reports.

Twenty CIO victories against two defeats in NLRB elections were reported to the committee during the week of October 1-7 by state directors, Mr. Bittner said.

International Woodworkers of America and Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers—with 27 victories each—are now leading in number of elections won.

United Steelworkers has won 23 elections in the CIO's organizing drive, and Textile Workers Union has won 16.

United Auto Workers and Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers are tied for fifth place, with 10 victories each.

FRAZIER ELECTED PAC CHAIRMAN

Chattanooga—W. B. Frazier, Steelworkers representative here, has been elected chairman of the Chattanooga Area Political Action Committee. He succeeds James Payne, who resigned after accepting an assignment with the CIO Organizing Committee.

Other Chattanooga PAC officers named are: Eugene Orten, president of Branch 99, Hosiery Workers, vice chairman, and E. A. Stephenson, secretary.

CHEMICAL WORKERS NEW NAME

Name of the United Gas Coke and Chemical Workers was changed to the United Chemical Workers at the recent convention in New York City.

CIO Atomizes AFL In Oak Ridge Vote

OAK RIDGE—The AFL felt the weight of the CIO's atomic bomb in the tussle of the two unions to represent workers at the Atomic Bomb plants here.

The CIO Atomic Bomb Committee won the NLRB election in the Carbide and Carbon Chemical unit, with approximately 4,000 workers, while the AFL had to be content with winning in the Monsanto Chemical unit with only 500 workers. At the same time the AFL took a shellacking from the No union vote in the huge Tennessee Eastman plant, which has more than 6000 workers.

In winning the Carbide and Carbon unit, the CIO places itself in a strategic position to move back into the Tennessee Eastman unit and possibly to expand its organizational activities into other units of the Atomic Bomb plants.

Results in the NLRB elections held in mid-September were:

Carbide and Carbon Chemicals Co.:
AFL—1893

Tennessee Eastman Co.:
No Union—3120
AFL—2503

Monsanto Chemical Co.:
AFL—336
CIO—136

After the results were announced, the AFL immediately began to squawk and filed protests, which later were overruled by the NLRB.

The elections were held after campaigns conducted by the CIO for only three months, while the AFL had been in the plant for four years.

State Council Asks End of NLRB Delay

Nashville—The National Labor Relations Board, in a resolution adopted by the Tennessee Council Executive Board, was called upon to transfer field examiners, attorneys, etc., from other regional NLRB boards to the three southern regions to take care of the huge backlog of petitions on file.

In the three southern regions more than 300 petitions are on file awaiting attention, with the backlog increasing every week. Elections are being delayed because the few board agents can't get around to them.

The resolution pointed out that collective bargaining rights, guaranteed under the NLRB Act, was being denied workers because the board in the south was understaffed.

The resolution called upon Congress to make more funds available to the NLRB, condemning the 33 per cent cut in the NLRB budget which forced sharp curtailment early in the year of the NLRB staff.

NASHVILLE ON ORGANIZING MAP

Nashville—With the Oak Ridge campaign concluded successfully, Nashville is benefitting by the beginning of an intensive CIO organizing campaign.

A staff of five representatives has been assigned to Nashville under the direction of Louis Krainock, who was one of the leaders in the Oak Ridge campaign.

First major assignment of the staff will be completion of organization of the huge DuPont plant at Old Hickory, near here, where the Textile Workers already have one department under contract.

RIFFE GUEST OF COUNCIL

Nashville—John Riffe, assistant to CIO Organizing Committee Director Van A. Bittner, was a guest at the Nashville Tennessee Council board meeting.

Riffe was enthusiastic about the progress being made in the Southern organizing campaign, and appreciative of the assistance he was getting from CIO leaders in the south.

ANNUAL WAGE WORKS IN MEMPHIS

MEMPHIS—A CIO union and a Memphis firm are in their third year of operation under a guaranteed wage plan—and both like it. The plan was put into effect without fanfare at Stratton-Warren Hardware Co., two years ago and its provisions written into a contract with United Steelworkers.

A recent contract between the two, providing for 10 cents an hour wage increase and continuation of the guaranteed wage, was negotiated by Earl A. Crowder, United Steelworkers representative, who negotiated what was believed to be the first guaranteed page in the south.

"Mr. Crowder presented the plan to us and we could see no objection to it," Leslie M. Stratton, Jr., executive vice-president of the concern, said.

"As long as an employe is with our company we are guaranteeing him 40 hours pay each week of the year. The purpose of the plan, of course, is to provide steady work—a job 52 weeks a year. We see nothing wrong with the idea."

Stratton said that he didn't think the plan had been given a "fair test" in his company yet because conditions have been such during the past two years that employes have worked between 50 and 55 hours weekly. But if business does get dull, they are guaranteed 52 weeks of 40 hours each.

About 125 workers are involved.

HALT GOP RENT PROFITEERS

GET OUT THE VOTE NOV. 5!

Your rent and your vote on November 5 are as closely connected as bread and butter.

A vote for big-business Republican candidates on November 5 is a vote for higher rents on January 1.

A vote for PAC-endorsed progressive candidates is a vote for continued, effective rent control.

A dangerous alliance of big landlords and realtors, big bankers and insurance interests, powerful Republican leaders and a few "yes-men" among the southern polltaxers, are bent on smashing rent control.

The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, spearhead of this movement, is publicly on record with a new demand for a 15% rise in rents. That would mean a 5% immediate jump in the cost of living for the average American family.

CIO-PAC

The fight against the big packers and the Republican tories who forced decontrol of meat is being led in Omaha, Neb., by the CIO Iowa-Nebraska Council Women's Auxiliary. Mrs. Phyllis Goodman (center) signs a petition circulated by Auxiliary Pres. Mrs. Maurice Cronin (l.) and Mrs. F. J. Gallagher, chairman, Omaha League of Women Shoppers.

IT'S UP TO YOU!

If you're 100 percent in this election—

- You have made a last minute check in your plant of all registered voters.
- You have called your PAC Committee together and said: "This is it, boys and girls! November 5th is around the corner. Are we ready to see to it that everyone in our plant who is registered votes?"
- You have received or given your last instructions in your wards and precincts. You have sent out a call for as many canvassers as you can get for November 5th. Your wife is in it, your sister, niece, and mother-in-law, too. Everybody is set to go for the big turn-out of the biggest vote ever.
- Your sound trucks are ready; your posters are in place; your poll-watchers have their instructio:
- You who have cars have already signified that you will help bring the aged and the handicapped in the neighborhood to the polls.
- You have talked about voting to your neighbors, to your club members, to your friends in church, to your grocer.
- You remember the politician who said: "Many close elections have been won by the election district workers bringing in four, five, six or more additional votes to the polls during the closing hours."

But don't wait for the closing hours. Start early and keep getting voters to vote until the polls are closed.

You have done all this—and we're in.

Kroll Charges

GOP TORIES BETRAYED CAMPAIGN PROMISES

ATTACKING Republican leaders for "betrayal of campaign pledges," Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, this week cited the GOP failure to support the Fair Employment Practices Act as proof of a deliberate policy to deceive American voters.

Calling attention to this and other "betrayals by the GOP brass-hats," the PAC chief called for a large vote on Election Day to defeat those "who would plunge us into another Hoover depression."

"In its 1944 platform, the Republican party promised to establish by federal legislation a permanent FEPC," Kroll said. "This act is vital to labor because it prohibits job discrimination on the basis of religion, race or national origin.

"The GOP merely used the popularity of this measure to gain votes, for when the real test came to get the FEPC bill out of committee, where it had been bottled up, 118 Republicans out of 183 in the house refused to sign the discharge petition," Kroll decared.

Further revealing the "GOP sham," he pointed to the GOP plank—"Our goal is to prevent hardship and poverty in America"—and said, "Today this party, following the Herbert Hoover philosophy, is depressing the living standards of the American people and cutting deep into their pay envelopes by forcing prices upward and instituting a drive to lift all rent controls. As Republican prices go higher and higher there will be more hardship and poverty in America."

THE PAC chief charged that the Republican stand on rent ceilings makes their pledges sound even more hollow. He declared that low-income tenants would be doomed to permanent homlessness if left to the mercy of greedy landlords.

When Sen. Albert Hawkes (Rep. N. J.) introduced an amendment to the Price Control Extension Action to increase rents 15%, nine Republican Senators approved it.

Another GOP-sponsored amendment to do away with OPA rent controls in those states having a rent control law met with the approval of thirty-one Republican Senators.

"They voted for state control because they knew such restrictions would be weaker and easier to circumvent," commented Kroll.

THE GOP was further criticized for having maintained a negative attitude on medical care. The 1944 GOP platform pledged support of the "stimulation by federal aid of state plans to make medical and hospital service available to those in need without disturbing doctor - patient relationship or socializing medicine."

Kroll asserted that liberal Democrats like Wagner, Murray and Dingell have sponsored a bill that would carry out these objectives.

The Republicans, led by Senator Taft, have fought this bill by smearing it falsely as "socialistic." The party's real lack of interest in better health facilities is shown by the fact that it has put forth no proposal as a substitute for this legislation, he said.

THE GOP platform stated that it accepted the purpose of the Wages and Hours Act and promised a "fair and just administration of these laws."

Kroll recalled that the Republicans had not only bitterly opposed the 65c minimum wage bill introduced in the 79th Congress, but had even fought a 25c hourly minimum originally provided in the 1938 Wages and Hours Act. Thirteen GOP Senators had voted against this proposal in 1938 while only two favored it, Kroll said.

The PAC head branded as "pure hypocrisy" the GOP promise to accept the purpose of the Natl. Labor Relations Act with the pledge of a fair and just administration of the law.

Pointing to the Republican-sponsored Case anti-labor bill, which would have nullified much of the Labor Relations Act, Kroll said, "If that bill had become law, the Wagner Labor Act protection would have been cut to the bone and labor's right to organize and strike would have been virtually abolished." The Case measure had the support of 149 Republicans in the House and 33 Republicans in the Senate.

"I am convinced that this sort of hypocritical lip service to the people's needs will not hoodwink American voters into the Republican column. On November 5 there must be a record vote cast—and cast against empty campaign promises."

INFLATION

PRIVATION

INDIGNATION!

A grim—and revealing—reminder of the long lines of unemployed during Republican President Hoover's 1929 depression was the comment this week of GOP senatorial candidate Thomas Sweeney of West Virginia. In a debate with Sen. Harley M. Kilgore, Democrat, supported by CIO-PAC, Sweeney said, "We in the Republican Party would never let anyone starve if hard times come again . . ." This, said Kilgore, is the Republican "platform." It was mighty shaky in '29!

GOP PLUNDERBUND ON RENT HIKE RAMPAGE

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE nation's big real estate groups, closely aligned to the Republican party, started this week to throw the dice in earnest in a mad gamble to blow the ceiling off rent controls and squeeze hundreds of millions of additional dollars from the American public.

With elections less than a fortnight away, the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards renewed its drive for a 15% rise in rents on the phoney issue of providing "justice and emergency relief" to organized landlords — now more prosperous than ever before in history.

Meanwhile "Charlie McCarthy" subsidiaries of the NAREB began to beat the tom-toms throughout the country, with threats of landlord "strikes" to keep vacated apartments empty until OPA controls have fallen to the greedy onslaught.

The CIO Political Action Committee was quick to answer the real estate multi-million dollar grab with charges that the GOP is collaborating "in a traitorous attempt to remove ceilings on rent."

And in Seattle, scene of one landlord's sitdown, Walter Deebach of the Veterans of Foreign Wars official, declared:

"This is the most unfair thing I've ever heard of. Those guys are forgetting the boys who kept those apartments safe for them."

In a detailed analysis of the situation, CIO-PAC warned that the Republican victory in the meat-ceiling fight foreshadowed "Republican rents" at highly increased levels if the Republicans win Nov. 5.

"Only a tremendous vote turnout against Republican rents and prices can save the last remnants of our dollar bills," declared Jack Kroll, PAC director.

OFFICIALS of PAC recalled that on two previous occasions the Republicans had sought to legislate rent controls into the garbage pail.

One of these efforts was led by Sen. Albert Hawkes (R. N. J.), who filed an amendment to force OPA to lift all rent ceilings by 15%. The proposal mustered only 14 votes, the overwhelming majority of which came from Republicans, with a few polltax Democrats uttering the usual "me too."

A second proposal, by Sen. Knowland (R. Cal.) was passed in the Senate, thanks again to the Republican and "me too" votes. Only one Republican Senator—Aiken of Vermont—voted against the measure.

"The mad rush to plunder the consumer-tenant's purse is on," PAC charged, "and the Republicans intend to help the landlords get their share of the booty."

IN HALF a dozen cities, associations of apartment house owners—many of them tied to the local Republican machines — are conducting landlord sitdowns. Apartments are being kept unoccupied, despite the pressing need of millions of families, until the owners wring concessions from OPA or see the price control agency's doom written in a swarm of reactionary victories at the polls.

The widely publicized landlord's "strike" in Seattle was labeled by some OPA officials as the "beginning of what may be a national movement by real estate people."

The "renting strike" by two powerful groups of Seattle apartment house owners—who cotnrol most of the apartment space in the northwest city—was planned by men who have worked closely with the Republican party, and have been consistent foes of every form of price control.

Members of the Pioneer Apartment Group—one of the two striking landlords' associations—passed two resolutions:

1. To rent no vacant apartments until rent controls are killed.

2. To vote the straight Republican ticket.

Pres. J. H. Totten of the Pioneer landlords offered the motion for support of GOP reactionary candidates after declaring:

"We are not sure all the Republicans are against OPA, but we do know that all Democratic candidates are for it."

The more powerful Seattle Apartment Owners Assn. picked up the ball from the Pioneer group. Its secretary announced that the national apartment owners trade outfit—which meets in Oklahoma City in mid-November —will call for national anti-tenant action.

In Baltimore, Md., George W. Proffitt, executive secretary of the national organization, voiced a strong prediction that the outfit's convention would take action similar to that in the northwest.

THE NAREB has a three-point program:

- An immediate increase of 15% in residential rents "as a matter of fundamental justice and emergency relief" to allegedly poverty-stricken landlords.
- A plan to free from all controls those landlords who would give tenants a year's lease at a 15% increase in rent.
- Immediate elimination of all price ceilings and rent controls on new residential construction.

The firm controls on rent levels —the most effective of any handled by OPA—have permitted an increase of only 4% since the beginning of the war, government officials maintain.

A 15% rise would jump the cost of living 3% to 6% for most families, whose budget usually provides for from 20% to 40% of their total income for housing. Such a rise would bring widespread hardship to millions of families straining to make both ends meet under the existing situation of jumping consumer prices.

Across The River

Canada has firm price controls. The government has resisted all efforts to weaken those controls. As a result, prices have stayed down.

But at Niagara Falls, N. Y., U. S. housewives—thanks to the attack on OPA by the meat lobby and GOP leaders—pay $1 to $1.25 a pound for steak, 98c a pound for butter.

At Niagara Falls, Ontario—just across the river — Canadian housewives pay 45c a pound for T-bone steaks, 45c a pound for butter.

HAD ENOUGH? VOTE PAC

HAD ENOUGH? Frankly yes. We've had our belly full of tory Republican rule in Congress. We want a change.

This rule hasn't been the least sweetened by the incidental fact that it has depended upon the complicity of tory polltax Democrats.

For all-too-many years Congress has been ruled and ridden by this predominantly Republican combination.

It has constituted a reactionary majority which has constantly overriden a minority bloc of progressive Democrats aided by a little handful of liberal Republicans.

THIS TORY gang bucked and blocked all of President Roosevelt's progressive domestic policies.

Since his death, it has grown even more arrogant and powerful.

In the 79th Congress, it defeated the administration right down the line in the latter's none-too-aggressive efforts to carry forward the Roosevelt program.

It is responsible for the sorry record of that Congress—for the wrecking of price control; for sky-high prices and lowered real wages; for anti-labor legislation; for continuance of the polltax and ending of the FEPC; for failure to raise the minimum wage and to take any adequate steps for the health, housing, social security and full employment of the American people.

Yes, we've had enough — more than enough.

WHAT HAS tory Republican rule done to your dollar?

A dollar ain't a dollar any more. The Bureau of Labor Statistics has been criticized by labor for grossly underestimating increased living costs. But even its figures show the purchasing power of the dollar shrunk to 69 cents, from January 1941 to Sept. 15, 1946.

Since then, the tory Republicans have been able to boast of still further victories over the American people, by forcing the lifting of practically all price controls.

So by Nov. 5 your dollar will probably be worth about four-bits. They'll offer you two-bits or less for your dollar, if you care to vote for them.

HAD ENOUGH Republican-cum-tory-Democrat rule?

If you want more, you can give this old gang a chance to cap its wrecking of price control by the destruction of rent controls, which will be next on the agenda, if it is returned with a strengthened majority.

If you want more, you can have still tougher anti-labor legislation to wreck unions and keep wages down, while prices and profits soar.

If you want more, put in the tory Republicans again and, with the polltax Democrats already assured of election, they'll have a big enough majority to cook up another Hoover depression.

BUT IF you've really had enough and don't want any more, then VOTE.

If you forget to vote, or can't bother to vote, you will let the old tory gang ride in again by default, stronger than ever.

If you've had enough and want a better deal in the future, vote out the anti-labor wreckers of price control, vote in again the progressives who have fought the people's fight—and add to their number so they may become a majority in the next Congress.

Sure, your vote alone can't do it—though it can't be done without your vote—so get all your family, your neighbors and your friends to vote as well.

Join with your union and the PAC in organizing to get out a record vote. The time is short. Get busy NOW.

Had enough? Then vote progressive, vote for PAC-endorsed candidates, and get others to vote.

N

BY LEN DE CAUX

IF YOU don't bother about your future, don't bother to vote on Nov. 5.

The old gang that ran the 79th Congress will look after you—and how!

They've already got your future doped out, if they can count on you not to vote.

(They aren't counting on many trade unionists being so dumb as to vote for them, but your uncast ballot will have the same effect).

THE OLD gang's press is hopefully predicting a tory Republican swing.

Although in a technical minority in the 79th Congress, the Republicans actually had their way in every important vote, due to their close alliance with a minority of tory Democrats.

So a GOP majority in both Houses would not change the control of Congress. It would simply strengthen the old gang's control, and make it easier for them to dish out more and worse of the same.

THIS IS the kind of future the old gang has doped out for you:

Having wrecked price control in the last Congress and having made you pay higher prices for nearly everything, it would finish the job by boosting prices still further on everything.

What's more, the landlord's lobby is not voting tory Republican for nothing. So you can expect to pay double rent, if the old gang is returned strong enough to abolish rent control.

BUT IF all living costs are boosted still higher, at least we should be able to raise wages proportionately, you may say.

The old gang has the answer to that one too. Not for nothing is it so ardently supported by big business.

Remember how the GOP-tory Democrat old gang passed the Case bill in the last Congress? It was only the minority of progressives that prevented it from being enacted over the President's veto.

All the old gang needs is a few more votes to enact this or similar legislation to cripple the unions and render them incapable of raising wages adequately.

HIGHER PRICES and rents and lower wages aren't all you can expect, if you let the architects of the Hoover depression get back into the saddle.

All competent economists are predicting a bust after the inflationary boom of sky-high prices and profits.

Many of them gave us several years before the next depression. But after seeing what the old gang did to price control, and noting press predictions of Republican victories, most of them now place the depression in 1947, any time from spring on.

SOME OF the Republican candidates say they won't let us starve in their next depression, like they did in their last.

But don't count on this too much.

For the old gang has a long record of fighting social security and anything else that would relieve the plight of the unemployed.

In the last Congress, the GOP-polltax Democrat majority fought and blocked every kind of social welfare legislation, whether for housing, health, social security, minimum wages or full employment.

Put them back in again with increased power, and they'll put us out again on the breadline.

WHILE THE big business press is counting its chickens before they are hatched, the wise-money boys are not.

Wall Street reports indicate that, whereas a rising stock market is expected to follow a Republican victory in November, this prospect is not being "discounted in advance."

In other words, the speculators are not so sure of a tory sweep as to bet any big money on it yet.

BIG BUSINESS sees a joker in all its press predictions. And that joker is you, brother and sister unionists.

It can't count on you being so careless of your future as to fail to vote and to get others to vote.

If you really organize and work to get out a record labor and progressive vote, you can clean out the old gang.

You can scrap its whole program of high prices, low wages, inflation and depression by electing a progressive Congress.

FASCIST SMITH BACKS TOP GOP CANDIDATES

HAMMERING away at the endorsement of top Repubican candidates by Gerald L. K. Smith and his America First gang, Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, this week called for a deluge of votes in November to prevent the America First pro-Nazi philosophy from dominating the Congress.

The list of America First Party endorsements is printed below so that voters in each state will recognize the candidates backed by Gerad L. K. Smith. (Endorsements in southern states where there is no real contest now that the primaries are over are omitted).

Congress of Industrial Organizations

CIO

718 Jackson Place, N. W. • Washington 6, D. C.

October 23, 1946

TO EVERY MEMBER OF THE CIO:

This is a message of great urgency for every CIO member. We write you on the eve of the 1946 Congressional election, an election which will decide America's course and the fate of every American and his family. The fact is that if the American people are not to be thrust back again to depression, if we are to avoid another horrible war, if our unions are to survive, a progressive 80th Congress must be elected on November 5th.

Our opponents in this campaign, the reactionaries in both the Republican and Democratic Parties, have sought to scare the American people by a smoke screen of confusion. Although they bear responsibility for whatever confusion and shortages now exist by their butchering of OPA, housing and other vital legislation in the 79th Congress, they seek to place the blame elsewhere. This is not a new story. They have used it in past elections, unsuccessfully. The people examined the charge, rejected it and then carried the fight to the enemy.

The people, the voters, will do it again on November 5th. Our weapon is the ballot. We must use it. We have seen in the past few weeks the mobilization of those forces that were Franklin D. Roosevelt's staunchest supporters. We have taken our message, the fulfillment of the Roosevelt program, peace and prosperity, to the American people. They have accepted it.

We need to implement that acceptance at the ballot box. The only way reaction will be swept aside, will be by a huge outpouring of votes. The responsibility is that of every decent American, of every decent union member to go to the polls on November 5th and vote. And to help in getting his family, neighbors and friends to also vote.

Remember, voting is the answer to our problems. Voting is the way to a better Congress.

Sincerely and fraternally,

Philip Murray — President, CIO

Jack Kroll — Director, CIO-PAC

Gov. Thomas Dewey gave a reluctant and fruitless audience to 75 ex-servicemen who last week-end asked him to call a special session of the N. Y. legislature to relieve the critical lack of veterans' housing. After the veterans waited overnight in the Senate chamber, Dewey deigned to see them. One of the ex-GIs' leaders, William Rebens, is here presenting the Governor with their housing program.

DEWEY SAYS NO ON VETS' HOUSING

By S. CLINTON STERN
President, N. Y. Veterans' Senate

I was one of 75 ex-GIs who went to see Gov. Thomas Dewey about getting some veterans' housing. On Saturday afternoon, October 19, we peacefully walked into the New York State Capital building in Albany and organized ourselves into a Veterans' Senate.

Governor Dewey had been notified long in advance that thousands of people were coming to see him, but he refused to meet with this large delegation. (Ed. Note: The Greater N. Y. CIO Council at the same time sponsored a demonstration by teachers and state employes seeking salary increases, but they did not participate in the Veterans' Senate.)

We spoke in the name of millions of veterans who are suffering from the housing shortage. After our entry the state police surrounded the Capitol and clamped a tight food embargo on the building.

After setting up a committee and electing officers we began a debate on veterans housing. Saturday night, after hours of debate we unanimously agreed on a series of demands. These demands were submitted to the Governor's secretary who rejected them and refused to let us see the Governor. We stayed there all night.

When Dewey finally consented to see us Sunday our spokesmen presented him with our program. The Governor refused to call a special emergency session on housing, said he had done all he could and blamed the housing shortage on the New Deal and the Administration. We feel these charges were unjustified and were purely political since the Administration-sponsored housing program had been killed by opposition in Congress.

New Vote Record

A permanent voting record, printed on heavy paper and listing the action of Senators and Congressmen on 32 issues during both sessions of the 79th Congress, has just been issued by the CIO Legislative and Education & Research Depts.

In the section on the Senate it lists 18 votes from the first session of the 79th Congress, ranging from the consideration of Henry Wallace's appointment as secretary of commerce to the May-Bailey Manpower Bill. Issues recorded for the second session include the Hobbs Amendment to the Case Bill, the final passage of the Case Bill, two votes on the Truman anti-union bill, two votes on the Patman housing bill, the cloture rule on FEPC, the 65c Minimum Wage, the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Bill, the McFarland Amendment to the British Loan and four amendments to the price control bill.

The record of the House votes includes such issues as the May-Bailey manpower bill; the May-Arends, Hobbs and Case anti-union proposals; the Dirksen amendment to the USES bill; the school lunch bill; the Patman housing bill, the Elliott Rider to the NLRB appropriaion, 7 amendments to the price control bill, and the atomic energy bill.

IN introduction to the record, Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, writes:

"Here in the U. S. the right of most people to vote has been held as commonplace for so long that comparatively few seem to recognize its importance. America is in no danger at the moment of losing its liberties to a foreign power.

"Yet we are in grave danger of losing our liberties through reactionary and other undemocratic internal pressures, popular indifference toward elections, and through our failure to realize that the more people go to the polls and the greater the interest they display in the outcome—even in off-year elections—the more alert our elective officers will be and the better our government."

No Outside Influence

BRASSHAT SMEAR HIT AS COVERUP

CHARGING that GOP brasshats are attemping to ride into power on false issues and smear campaigns, CIO Political Action Director Jack Kroll this week rejected "any foreign influence or interference in our domestic election contests."

Kroll called for a large vote as a basis for fighting the Republican leadership which is trying to "avoid the responsibility for depressing the living standards of the American people, of cutting deep into their pay envelopes by forcing prices upwards and instituting a drive to lift all rent controls."

He charged that the GOP is seeking to ride to victory on false issues, knowing that it has no real program to offer to the American people.

The full text of Kroll's statement follows:

"ON OCT. 21 the American press reported an English language broadcast on the Moscow radio presuming to commend candidates for the United States Congress supported by the CIO-PAC.

"While the world press and radio are free to commend all elected candidates in all countries as has been the practice for generations, the CIO-PAC regards as completely unwarranted and thoroughly disavows any foreign influence or interference in our domestic election contests I cannot state this too emphatically on behalf of our committee.

"We repudiate and reject all efforts by our political enemies to tar us with an alien brush.

"THE leadership of the Republican Party, knowing that they have no real program to offer the American people, are seeking to ride to victory on false issues. Their efforts to confuse American voters will not succeed. The American people still remember the shocking statement of Sen. Robert Taft protesting the just verdicts at Nuremberg.

"The American people remember the recent endorsement of John Bricker by Gerald L. K. Smith and the failure of Bricker to repudiate the support of Smith's rabble-rousing crowd.

"The Republican Party, by its attempts to smear the PAC, is trying to avoid the responsibility which is its for depressing the living standards of the American people, of cutting deep into their pay envelopes by forcing prices upwards and instituting a drive to lift all rent controls.

"OUR Republican friends are frightened. Newspaper editorials and polls are not sufficient to hide their vicious record of obstruction in the last Congress. And now the results of their handiwork, Republican prices, soaring prices, are coming home to roost.

"The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards echoing the Republican line—has loudly demanded an immediate 15% rent increase. They want Republican rents as well as Republican prices.

"No matter how hard the Republican Party brass hats led by Dewey and Taft seeks to fool the people with the cry of Communism, Confusion and Chaos—those three false campaign bugaboos—it cannot hide its own obstructionist record, it cannot hide the boom and bust philosophy it promotes, it will not prevent millions of Americans from going to the polls on November 5th to vote for progressive candidates who will work for the enactment of the Roosevelt program.

"The record of CIO-PAC since its inception in July 1943 has been absolutely clear. It is an official Committee of the CIO representing over six million American workers with their families. CIO and CIO-PAC are the voice of over 14 million Americans, loyal to America and American institutions. Both in war and in peace this has been amply demonstrated beyond a doubt."

My, My, Look Who's Under Whose Bed!

The Republicans who are today yelling "Communist!" as a smokescreen should remember that in their early days they were red-baited.

From J. G. Randall's book, Lincoln the President, comes the following commentary, which quotes the N. Y. Herald of Sept. 19, 1860:

"The dread word 'socialism' was hurled into the arena of words as devasting characterization of Republican policy. 'Socialism in its worst form', it was said 'including . . . women's rights, the division of land, free love, and the exaltation of the desires of the individual over the . . . family, and the forced equality of all men in phalansteries . . . are a part of the logical chain of ideas that flow from . . . the soul of black republicanism'."

It's an odd world!

Washington—Kept City

KLANSMAN 'MAYOR' OF NATION'S CAPITAL

By FRED d'AVILA

IT was August 9, 1946. The American people, who had just helped win a bloody war to crush fascism, heard a scratchy, nasal whine over a national radio hookup, declaring that, "I am a member of the Ku Klux Klan No. 40, called the Bilbo Klan No. 40, of Mississippi."

Theodore Gilmore Bilbo, 69-year-old thrice-elected Senator from Mississippi, was brazen but not rash. Admission of membership in the rope, terror and bedsheet club was part of his race-baiting strategy that has made him a successful politician in his polltax "paradise."

But—and it concerns the whole nation—the flat-headed hate-monger is also "mayor" of the United States Capital. As ranking member of the District Committee because of his Senate seniority, Bilbo calls the shots for a city of nearly a million people.

That city for more than 70 years had the right to elect its own government. Congress, riding a wave of reaction following the Civil War, took away that right in 1878.

This November 5, while the rest of the nation is exercising its democratic right to choose national and local representatives, Washington will stage a mock election, designed to register the protest of its residents against a Bilbo government.

WASHINGTON residents are concerned about many problems. They cannot vote for the President of the U. S. They pay taxes but they have no voice in levying them. They are saddled with a cumbersome municipal government that in the final analysis consists of a "city council" composed of 435 Representatives and 96 Senators. And—high on the list of grievances—they have Bilbo as "Mayor."

Who is this "mayor" elected by a polltax minority in a state more than a thousand miles away from the people he governs? Does he perform his sworn duty to uphold the Constitution, which among other provisions, says that "the right of the citizens of the U. S. to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the U. S. or by any state on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude"? Let's look at the record.

It is July 2, 1946. A steaming, gaping audience, ridden with all the race prejudices common in Mississippi, breaks into cheers. Their man has spoken.

"I call upon every red-blooded Anglo-Saxon in Mississippi to resort to any means to keep Negroes from the polls. If you don't know what this means, you are just not up on your persuasive measures."

The speaker was Bilbo.

While thousands of Dombrowskis and Johnsons, Cohens and Kellys, Massettis and Hansens were giving their lives for victory, Bilbo contributed to national unity by referring to millions of Italian citizens as "dagoes," by reviling Jews as "kikes," and by calling Negroes "niggers."

In 1929, a Mississippi lynch mob burned a Negro at the stake. There was a widespread demand that the murderers be brought to justice. Bilbo, then governor and presumably a member of the KKK, declared that he had "neither time nor the money" to conduct an investigation.

This is the first of two articles on the right to vote in the District of Columbia, amplifying a CIO Convention resolution calling for D. C. suffrage and pointing out that "free and democratic elections . . . are the greatest guarantee for the preservation of democracy and our basic freedoms."

BILBO'S Senate record rivals his words. On issues of interest to the people, listed in The CIO NEWS voting supplement, his score is seven zeros and five minuses. He voted against housing, against fair employment, against a 65c minimum wage, against price control and against polltax repeal.

On May 10, 1946, he raved against the "vicious, inequitable, unfair, unrighteous, almost criminal social security and old age pension law."

BILBO'S viciousness has been equalled by his political durability. He survived a clouded scandal as supervisor of a girl's school to win election in 1908 as a state senator. At a grand jury hearing, he admitted taking a bribe to swing an election, but claimed he had accepted it to expose the bribe givers. He avoided expulsion from the state senate by just one vote, after the senate had passed a resolution asking him to resign and declaring him "unfit to sit with honest, upright men in a respectable legislative body. . ."

He was twice elected governor. In 1934 he was elected to the U. S. Senate, and has sat there ever since.

Campaigns to unseat him have been started by the Civil Rights Congress in N. Y. City and by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare in Washington. Both groups are circulating petitions. That of the Southern Conference says:

"If we must be ruled as a colony with taxation without representation, we implore our rulers to assign to the committee (Senate District Committee) only senators who believe in democracy, the Constitution and the equal rights of all citizens."

THE Washington problem, however, is more than Bilbo. And it is acute enough so that nearly 300 civic organizations, from the CIO Council to the Board of Trade, have come out unequivocally for:

1. The Capper-Summers bill providing for a constitutional amendment empowering Congress to grant representation in the Congress and the right to vote for President and Vice-President of the U. S.

2. The McCarran bill, providing for an elected council-manager plan for home rule in District government.

There's good precedent for the abolition of supervision by three commissioners appointed by the President. From 1802 to 1871 Washington had a mayor and council type of government elected by the people. And from 1871 to 1878 the capital had a territorial form of government, with residents electing members of one branch of a two-branch legislature. In 1878, Congress became Washington's "city council" with the President appointing the commissioners to supervise the job. Washington is a "kept city."

SEN. THEO. G. BILBO, "MAYOR" OF WASHINGTON

"I am a member of the Ku Klux Klan No. 40, called the Bilbo Klan No. 40, of Mississippi"

Under the present government, cumbersome and unresponsive to the people, the administration of schools, jails, hospitals and other public institutions has resulted in scandal after scandal. Wretched slums sprawl unhealthily among million-dollar government buildings. Negroes are segragated from whites, not only in residence, but in schools and on playgrounds.

Congressmen, busy with affairs important to their own constituents, are not inclined to work on District problems. As "city council," Congress literally has to pass on items as unimportant as the naming of streets and the location of sewers. Those Congressmen who are sincerely interested in the District must take time that belongs to the nation and to the people that elected them to deal with a host of petty problems that a home rule government could handle much more efficiently.

NATIONALLY, most Washington residents are just as impotent as they are locally. Only one in three has legal voting residence elsewhere—and more than half of these would prefer to vote in the District, according to an opinion poll by the Washington Post.

Thousands of them can't vote even by absentee ballot, because more than one-fourth the states deny the right either to register, or to vote in the primaries or general elections, by mail.

Washington, with nearly a million residents, has more population than any one of 14 states. Yet these states have a total of 53 Representatives and Senators in Congress! Washington has none.

D. C. residents eight years ago rolled up a 7-1 majority in favor of home rule and a 12-1 majority for national representation.

In the referendum scheduled for November 5, it is expected that majorities will be even more overwhelming. After all, no self-respecting capital could long tolerate a Bilbo as "mayor."

Hovels like this Negro woman's home are in brutal contrast to the gleaming marble of Washington's government buildings. A 1940 survey revealed that 40% of the Negro population and 12% of the white lived in dwellings either in need of major structural repairs or without inside water supply or toilet facilities, or having two or all of these deficiencies.

TO WIN OUR ECONOM

This is the program of Franklin Roosevelt. It is also the program of the CIO.

The last Congress virtually ignored this program of human welfare.

It is vital that the Eightieth Congress take action for security, for full employment, for health, for decent living standards.

Reaction, spearheaded by GOP Tories, is dead opposed to this program.

Candidates endorsed by the CIO - PAC stand 100% behind President Roosevelt's Economic Bill of Rights.

You can help win FDR's program for the American people on November 5 — Vote!

Vote for CIO-PAC-endorsed candidates for Federal and State offices.

Third CMU Victory

MARINE ENGINEERS WIN

FOR the third time in five months unity among maritime unions paid off this week when the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. won a victory by winning a contract with the East and Gulf Coast ship owners yielding to the union's demands.

The ship owners who forced the MEBA to strike for 21 days finally signed an agreement which gave preferential hiring for union members, maintenance of membership and 15% general wage increase.

The contract also boosted the pay for overtime work from $1.20 to $1.60 an hour, and jumped the night relief rates from $1.15 to $1.60 an hour.

MEBA immediately submitted the proposals to its members for ratification, but was withholding the results until the U. S. Maritime Commission, which owns a good portion of the merchant vessels, issues a directive.

The directive was delayed because the AFL Master, Mates and Pilots who struck with the MEBA had not settled their differences with the operators, although they were expected to do so shortly as the CIO NEWS went to press.

CMU co-chairmen Joseph Curran and Harry Bridges and General CIO Counsel Lee Pressman participated in the final discussions between the ship owners and the MEBA. The CMU—Committee for Maritime Unity—includes seven unions, six of them CIO and one unaffiliated.

This was the third time that the CMU whose members respected the MEBA and the MMP picket lines and participated in demonstrations proved the value of maritime unions' unity.

In June the CMU unions obtained in negotiations with the ship owners and the Maritime Commission $17.50 monthly increases, a reduction of working hours, and increased payments for overtime work for all unlicensed personnel.

In September the CMU again demonstrated the value of maritime unity when a strike was called to obtain wage equity with the AFL seamen who had been granted a greater increase than CIO unlicensed personnel had obtained.

For the CIO Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. this donkey used in a demonstration this week in front of the American Merchant Marine Institute characterized the adamant stand of the ship owners. Following the mass picketing, the East and Gulf Coast operators decided to get down to brass tacks and gave the MEBA what it wanted. Eight thousand members of unions of the CIO Committee for Maritime Unity took part in the demonstration.

PAY US ENOUGH TO LIVE—UAW

THE CIO Auto Workers will demand susbstantial wage increases from all employers whose union contracts have wage reopening clauses, the UAW executive board voted at its Cleveland meeting this week.

The board did not name a specific figure it would demand but said in a wage policy agreement:

"It is the intention of the union to make every effort across the bargaining table with management to arrive at an agreement on a wage increase adequate to meet the needs of the workers and the nation.

"The unholy alliance between big business and its political henchmen in Congress has finally achieved its purpose in the complete destruction of effective control of the cost of living. Under these circumstances we have but one clear course—to demand a wage increase that will provide the workers and their families with a decent standard of living."

The board also called for immediate steps by the government to stop hoarding and speculation in scarce materials and, if necessary, operate idle plants to break bottlenecks and relieve shortages so that industry will operate on production schedules that assure full employment and a full workweek.

The union statement emphasized that "even at the present low level of production" substantial wage increases can be paid without any increase in the prices of cars or replacement parts.

The board cited cost of living figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics to support its wage increase demand.

"Total increase in the cost of living from Jan., 1941, to Sept., 1946, has been 50%," the statement said. "An 18½% wage increase paid to most workers in our industry early in 1946 brought hourly wage rates fairly close to the cost of living increase that had occurred up to Jan., 1946, but left workers' take-home pay far below wartime levels. However, the wrecking of price controls by Congress has again left wage rates far behind living costs, and the disparity existing is greater than at any time since 1941.

"Already the cost of living, as measured by the government index, is 12½% higher than in Jan., 1946 . . . . Authoritative sources predict that by December of this year the cost of living will have risen 20 to 25% or more above last January. Any forecast at this time is necessarily tentative and will be subject to revision as negotiations proceed."

ASK 25c AN HOUR MORE

IT'S two bits more for the CIO Oil Workers.

That was the hourly wage increase which the Oil Workers Intl. Union policy committee voted this week to place before industry in immediate negotiations.

Meeting in Galveston, Texas, the 24-man policy committee created by the union's convention authorized local unions to begin negotiations Nov. 1 for the $2 a day increase. Wage conference with oil companies will also be arranged on the district basis and the major companies will be asked to meet the union on the national level.

The committee pointed out that the Oil Workers made possible full production in the industry at the time when certain segments of management were throttling production as in the meat industry.

Sabotage of full production was labelled as conspiracy of the management of certain industries and reactionary leaders in Congress to throttle price control and attack the living the standards of American workers. The committee declared that as a result the real wages of oil workers have declined $8.44 a week in recent months.

Oil industry profits, the committee pointed out, stand at the all-time high, 172% above the prewar period, while prices are 44% above the same period and hourly earnings have increased only 31%.

"We regard the 25-cent an hour increase as a modest effort to achieve balance between the Oil Workers' income and skyrocketing prices," OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight said.

NON-STOP ORGANIZER

Sam Nadelman, international representative of the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers, "may at times be out but he is never down," reports Virginia CIO Director Ernest B, Pugh.

Nadelman, while organizing the J. P. Taylor Tobacco Co. workers at South Boston, Va., was stricken with appendicitis and hospitalized at Danville.

"Before leaving the hospital he organized all the orderlies and attendants and turned the applications over to a representative of the CIO Public Workers, which has set up a local union," Pugh reported.

Incidentally, the Taylor Tobacco election was won by the CIO, 385 to 10.

HAWAII TALKS RESUMED

The CIO Longshoremen who represent 25,000 Hawaii sugar workers on strike since Sept. 1 were scheduled to resume negotiations with the plantation owners as the CIO NEWS went to press.

Management had sabotaged negotiations, but were forced to resume discussions after Federal Conciliator Stanley V. White had charged, in a letter to the Hawaii Employers Council, that failure to resume negotiations would indicate that the sugar industry's goal was "extermination of unionism on the island."

Warns Texas CIO Of:

PLOT TO KILL UNIONS

Plans for combatting the plot of Texas business interests to liquidate the labor movement, stepping up the organizing campaign and enacting state legislation favorable to labor were made by the Texas State Industrial Union Council at its tenth annual convention at Austin last weekend.

Executive Sec. Morris Akin of the Texas Council urged greater contributions to PAC in future campaigns as he revealed that only about $3500 had been collected in comparison with the $3,400,000 raised by the Texas Manufactuing Assn. which he said will be used to buy anti-union legislation.

The convention adopted a state legislative program which called for a more secret ballot, abolition of the polltax, aiding bona fide veterans organizations in passing legislation beneficial to ex-GIs and expansion of legislative informational service for CIO locals.

The delegates also urged reelection of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, support of the Texas Council of the Brewery Workers whose industry is under attack from prohibitionists and ending the $200 monthly ceiling on salaries of veterans taking on-the-job training.

Encouraging results were reported by Robert Oliver, state director of the CIO Organizing Committee, who said that 36 plants with 7,500 workers had been organized in Texas since the campaign opened in mid-May and that only four NLRB elections had been lost.

He said that his staff of 17 organizers would get to 200 plants where organization has been requested as fast as possible.

Natl. CIO-IUC director John Brophy said that the first battle against inflation had been lost and urged that labor demand that the President call a national conference representing labor, management and agriculture to discuss the relation of wages to prices.

Brophy declared that the CIO wants "contructive economic collaboration among the nations, universal disarmament, and the extension of democratic political and economic institutions."

James E. Ward, Steelworker, and L. J. Forman were elected president and vice-president of the council respectively, and Akin was re-elected executive secretary.

ANTI-BIAS PACT

For the second time in a year the CIO Transport Service Employes has signed a contract giving Negro and white railroad station employes in the deep South equal protection and equal opportunity for advancement.

LEAVE OPEN WAGE DEMANDS

A special meeting of the CIO Farm Equipment Workers' Natl. Harvester Council, held at Chicago this week, established the union's new wage demands for Intl. Harvester workers.

The union will immediately reopen wage negotiations on a national scale for its 30,000 Harvester members in ten production plants throughout the nation.

Gerald Fielde, director of the Harvester Council and FE Secretary-Treasurer, announced the following six point wage policy. The union's present contracts with IHC, negotiated after an 80-day strike last spring, contain wage reopening clauses. The six demands include:

A general wage increase, with the precise demand left open due to "fluctuating wage, price, rent and other control policies."

An increase in minimum wages to at least one dollar per hour.

Special additional increases to skilled workers, including tool and die, and allied day-rated workers, maintenance and others.

Guaranteed annual wages, assuring a minimum of 40 hours pay for each of 52 weeks per annum.

Canadian CIO Wins

$55 MILLION IN PAY GAINS

By L. J. ROGERS

CANADA'S counterpart of CIO, the Canadian Congress of Labor, is currently winding up its first national wage drive with what is conceded to be the greatest victory ever scored by organized labor in the dominion.

Launched in April in face of united opposition from the Dominion Government and Canadian business, Canada's wage drive fought to victory through a bitterly contested six-month long battle during which 100,000 CIO members were on the picket lines at various times in virtually every major Canadian industry.

Strikers won increases averaging 15c an hour in such industries as lumber, metal mining, steel, automobile, chemical, rubber, electrical, machinery and brass after strikes ranging from six weeks to 22 weeks in length marked by company and government strike-breaking attempts in most cases.

Unlike 18½c pattern won in CIO's U. S. drive, Canadian strikes were settled at various levels ranging from 16.1c gained by the rubber workers down to 12c accepted by the UAW Chrysler strikers. First big victory was scored by CIO Woodworkers in British Columbia who won 15c increases for 37,000 west coast loggers after five-week strike ending late in June.

When eastern industry backed by Dominion Government refused to grant similar increases, 15,000 Steelworkers in Canada's three basic steel plants pulled out in early July followed shortly by 25,000 auto, electric and rubber-workers. After three months on picket lines Steelworkers won 13½c which will amount to approximately 15c when negotiations are completed.

Other eastern strikes followed steel settlement pattern—built around 13c increases with "fringe" clauses worth up to 3c an hour more in such strikes as rubber.

While final gains of the Canadian wage drive were below original aims of 20-25c an hour plus the 40-hour week (an objective largely abandoned), union leaders are well satisfied with final outcome.

Besides establishing CCL as Canada's top labor organization and handing big business its first big licking, the wage drive triumph means pay check boosts for all CCL unions this year without need for further strike action.

Since April 185,000 CCL members have received annual wage gains totalling $55 million—and further settlements before the year end made possible by the wage drive victory will bring the grand total to some $90 million in annual wage gains for some 300,000 CCL members.

The 15c gain pattern compares well with the U. S. 18c pattern when it is considered that Canada's price control system has held cost of living down to a 25% rise since 1939 compared with a 45% U. S. rise. The price decontrol process which produced a six-point rise in Canadian index in 1946 seems to have been almost stopped with the index for September actually showing a fractional decrease.

The balloon bearing the word "steak" is the highest of all in this demonstration by the CIO Office & Professional Workers at the Bankers Trust Co., N. Y. City, to show the need for wage increases adequate to meet soaring living costs.

SUE FOR $6 MILLION A WEEK

The steel companies are fleecing the 800,000 members of the Steelworkers weekly out of approximately six million dollars due them under the Wage-Hour Law.

The Steelworkers will seek to establish this through a suit brought this week in the U. S. Court for the Southern district of West Virginia against the Intl. Nickel Co., Huntington.

The union is bringing suit to recover portal-to-portal pay, which was found collectable for factory workers by the U. S. Supreme Court in its decision against the Mt. Clemens Pottery Co., Mt. Clemens, Mich., in June, this year. The action was started in that case by the CIO United Pottery Workers CIO Pres. Philip Murray recently announced that the Steelworkers, which he also heads, would seek to collect portal-to-portal pay.

Steelworkers are paid now for the time they are actually on the job, management disregarding the time that elapses from when they go into the gate until they actually are at work, the CIO Legal Dept. points out. That plus the time the workers must spend in the plant from leaving their tasks until passing the gate on the way home is estimated at about 30 minutes.

Going to work Steelworkers must change clothes, collect tools, put on safety devices and punch a time clock before taking up their tasks. The process is reversed when they leave the plant.

The Steelworkers contend that under the Wage-hour Law and the Supreme Court decision they are entitled to time and a half for these two periods and estimate that they would be entitled to about $7.40 per week per worker.

TO PUT IT BRIEFLY

Charged with resisting police who attacked a picketline during the recent Piedmont Leaf Co. strike here, a CIO organizer and two Negroes were sentenced to terms on the chain gang.

The organizer, Phil Koritz, intl. representative of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers was sentenced for one year, while the other two defendants, Cal Robertson Jones and Margaret Degraffenreid, were sent up for 10 and eight months, respectively. A fourth defendant was found innocent.

An appeal will be made challenging the North Carolina law which prohibits jury service to non-owners of property and pointing out that Negores are systematically excluded from jury sercvice.

At a general executive board meeting here Oct. 14-15, the CIO Shoe Workers set Dec. 1 as deadline for nominations for the vacant union presidency to be submitted to the board.

The board will have a special meeting in mid-December to elect a president from among the nominees. In the meantime, the union will be run by Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell and three vice presidents.

CIO Vice-Pres. and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood will sit with the executive board until the election in an advisory capacity, the group decided unanimously. Former Pres. Frank McGrath was ousted by the union executive board early in October for failure to carry out his duties, after which McGrath sent in his resignation.

OIL WORKERS RENAME KNIGHT

O. A. Knight was reelected to his seventh term as president of the Oil Workers in the referendum just concluded. A. R. Kinstley was reelected to his sixth term as vice president. Both first assumed office in 1940. T. M. McCormick was elected secretary-treasurer.

Elected to the executive council were Courtland P. Myers, Long Beach, Calif.; W. A. Urban, Parco, Wyo.; Forrest Tillman, Wichita Falls, Tex.; L. L. Crane, Port Neches, Tex., W. W. Watson of Kansas City, Kansas; George Carlson of Hammond, Ind., and Leo F. Brady of Carteret, N. J., Local 397.

WORKERS TO GET 11% OF PROFITS

The Natl. Pressure Cooker Co., Eau Claire, Wis., has just signed a contract guaranteeing each of the 1000 CIO Steelworkers employed at the plant 5% of the firm's total earnings.

For the current year, however, the bonus will amount to 11%.

Another unusual clause deals with sick and death benefits, hospitalization and pensions. The death benefit amounts to $1,000. The sick benefit is $15 a week plus 30 days' hospitalization, $20 for penicillin and $20 for X-ray or other laboratory charges.

Other features are maintenance of membership, dues checkoff, shift differentials, a 7c hourly increase and paid vacations.

BEFORE YOU BUY A WINTER COAT

By HANNA SHERMAN

ARE you planning to buy a winter coat this season? My candid advice would be to ask yourself seriously, "Do I really need one this year or not?" The coat you have now can often be adapated to the present season's fashion and very easily too. This will give you as much of a psychological lift as buying a new one!

This is the first of a series of articles written exclusively for The CIO News by a woman who has taught literally thousands of women how to dress. At present she is an instructor at N. Y. University, where she teaches a course for women on Personality Development.

Leave us face it. This year you will pay too much for your coat. And the fabric and workmanship may leave plenty to be desired. You can make last winter's coat do and make yourself look prettier as well.

Here's how. Remove that old fur collar. Take it to your milliner. Have her use it for a brimmed hat trimmed with the fur. Be sure she leaves enough to band a pair of good looking hand stitched gloves, matching in color, of course. Finish the collar neatly.

While you're about it, pretty scarfs are coming back on the market. Buy one and tuck it in at the throat. You'll look like a page out of Vogue. Cost? Trifling.

Give that princess-line coat a 1947 look with a stunning leather belt. Wear with shoes of matching leather, maybe a jaunty over-the-shoulder bag. The slimmer your waistline and the taller you are, the wider that belt and the larger that bag can be!

You Navy girls and Wacs converting back to a civilian winter can have the tailor do a beautiful dye job on your service coats. (Navy girls, you can leave them blue!) Change the buttons, again add a bright scarf and wear the prettiest hat you can find. Cost? A few shekels.

Remember one luxurious fur accent is often enough to make a costume. Fur muffs, hats, scarfs, belts, all give a touch of wonderful elegance to a simple coat. Best of all they can be worn these lazy fall days with your suits and dresses.

IF YOU have looked closely into your conscience and find that you cannot live without a new winter coat, here are some suggestions that you might remember while shopping.

First, the style. Many of the new season's styles have been designed for the tall slim girl. It's probably the result of the fashion influence from Paris, where the girls are very thin and for a very good reason. If you are under five feet four and inclined to be at all overweight, beware of the coats with too much bulk, too much fullness and those wide belts. They're not for you.

One of the new features in the coats being shown this season is the wide arm hole and fairly loose fit. This is wonderful over suits, which have become practically a twelve month standby in our wardrobes.

Here again you short girls with a figure problem—don't wear a coat over a suit as a regular costume. It's warm and comfortable, but it adds pounds to your appearance. For you, the fitted coat and the tuxedo type coat with flat instead of fluffy fur trim are best. Again I advise—wear these with a dress (woolen if you like) instead of a suit.

COLORS to choose this year are not necessarily the old black and brown standbys. There are interesting new dark greens and new coppery tones. And be sure to look for navy blue. It has stepped out of the strictly Spring picture and is now being shown the year round. It's new, fresh looking and still one of the most flattering colors a woman can wear.

Don't be afraid of black accessories—gloves, bag, shoes. They go with your winter navy. The Waves made it all right and I've always liked it.

Brown is becoming to most women and is back in the fashion picture. This year a beautiful new brown is being shown that is stunning with black and other colors. But don't overlook black if it flatters you.

The quickest way to achieve a well-put-together look this winter is to have your hat, coat, bag, shoes and gloves all in a matching color. And remember, one bright accent!

No matter when you buy, in figuring the cost of your winter coat, remember that although it's a big dent in your budget now, it should be good for three winters of wear. (Divide the cost by three.) Remember too, that most lavishly fur trimmed coats are subject to Federal tax.

Y. City.

New NCPAC Manual Issued

The famous "PAC techniques" of building a political organization and conducting a political campaign are explained in detail in a 9 by 12 in. illustrated Manual of Practical Political Action published this week by the Natl. Citizens Political Action Committee.

The 200-page loose-leaf which applies for the first time a "scientific" approach to professional politics, contains articles on subjects ranging from building a register-and-vote campaign to campaigning for a congressman.

The book is co-edited by Lewis C. Frank, Jr., and Ralph E. Shikes and is written by political specialists who were on the faculty of the NCPAC's School of Political Action Techniques in Washington.

The manual "is designed to help make democracy work," state the editors. "It is intended for the use of the 'political conscious' American who would encourage similar consciousness in his fellow citizens."

Price of the manual, sold at cost, is $3. At no additional cost a series of six supplements for insertion as new political techniques are developed throughout the country will be sent to those ordering the manual, which may be obtained from the NCPAC, 205 E. 42nd St., New York 17, N. Y.

NAACP APPOINTMENTS

Three CIO officials have been appointed to the newly-created national labor committee of the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Representing CIO are Pres. Willard Townsend, Transport Service Employees; Pres. Walter Reuther, Auto Workers, and Sec. George Weaver, CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

Anger's Not Enough

IT'S A BIG VOTE THAT COUNTS

LOADS of Americans are pretty sore today. They're sore about the rising cost of living; about the difficulty of finding a place to live; about the new crop of millionaires produced by the war; about discrimination against Negroes, Jews and the foreign-born; about the threat of another war.

These and other injustices have badly undermined their sense of security. They want to know who's to blame and what can be done about it.

And that's just what the CIO Political Action Committee's new pamphlet-of-the-month by Joseph Gaer, "Remember in November," tells them.

The 79th Congress, elected to serve the people, failed us, it states. If the 80th Congress about to be elected is to do better, American voters must turn out in record numbers and help elect good Congressmen.

"It is up to us, the voters, to re-elect those Congressmen who tried hard to help the people; and to defeat those who bowed to the profiteers and the realestate boards and the NAM lobbyists and did everything in their power to Taft-up, to Bilbo-up, to Rankin-up every piece of good legislation that came up before Congress."

HERE are some of the things the pamphlet urges voters to remember:

- The difference between a small vote and a big vote is the difference between a bad Congress and a good Congress.
- "Many close elections have been won by the election district workers bringing in four, five, six or more additional votes to the polls during the closing hours," states a former Chairman of the Natl. Democratic Committee.
- A candidate should be judged by his record, not by his party label. Find out what the important issues are as given in "The People's Program for 1946" (CIO-PAC Pamphlet-of-the-Month No. 11) and vote for the men who support these issues.
- The best PAC work can be done in your union, in your place of work and in your neighborhood. The pamphlet gives detailed suggestions how to go about the job in these three ways: How to take care of such things as distribution of printed or mimeographed lists of candidates; check-up of eligible voters in plants; arrangements for pooling cars for transportation to take sick, old and disabled voters to the polls are some of the suggestions made.

THE "tools for action" needed to carry out successful campaigns are listed:

Meetings to plan the necessary work and report results.

Distribution of literature in both shops and neighborhoods.

Use of both free and paid-for time on the radio, as outlined in the CIO-PAC's "1946 Radio Handbook."

Use of sound trucks on Election Day, with both speakers and the PAC's album of Songs for Action available.

The albums, which may be obtained from the PAC at $4 a set, include the following songs: A Dollar for Pac; No-No-Discrimination; Talking PAC; Congressmen, Mr. Congressman; The Union Gang; Round and My Congressman; A Dollar Ain't a Dollar Any More; and others.

Also listed are CIO-PAC pamphlets and leaflets available for distribution.

Altogether, "Remember in November" is an invaluable political action aid for CIO and PAC groups and members. It and other CIO-PAC material may be ordered from the CIO Political Action Committee, 205 E. 42nd St., N. Y. 17, N. Y.

Education NOTES

Eby To Attend UNESCO Meet

CIO Education & Research Director Kermit Eby will represent the CIO as a member of the UNESCO American Commission at the first meeting of the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization which will be held in Paris in November. He will leave Paris after the CIO Convention, to be held in Atlantic City the week of Nov. 18.

Eby, who has been elected as a member of the American Commission's executive board, will act as a technical consultant for the American delegation of 10.

SVEND GODFREDSEN, editor and educational director for the CIO United Packinghouse Workers, has accepted an appointment as a member of the board of directors of Roosevelt College, announces Edwin R. Embree, board chairman.

The board of this liberal college, noted for its policy of no racial discrimination, is considered unusual for the reason that one-third of it is composed of faculty members, in addition to representatives of labor, management, the judiciary, press, education and cooperatives.

Four institutes on Labor and Politics are being held this month at Roosevelt sponsored by the College's Division of Labor Education and Dept. of Economics in cooperation with the American Labor Education Service.

Last of the series, to be held Oct. 31, is on the subject of "International Issues for Labor in 1946." Pres. Willard S. Townsend, CIO Transport Service Employes, will be chairman.

A SCHOLARSHIP fund in honor of two young CIO leaders killed in World War II, Bill Lamson and Jack McElhone, has been set up at Wayne University, Detroit. The fund will be used each year for ten years to assist a Wayne student who shows promise of making contribution toward the ideals for which the two CIO men died.

TWO ATTRACTIVE leaflets, "Is Milk Beyond the Reach of Your Child?" and "Jim Crow Schools for Ohio?" are being distributed by the thousands by the Ohio CIO-PAC, 218 E. State St., Columbus 15, Ohio. Each carries a vital message to help stir interest in the November elections.

MRS. ERNEST CALLOWAY, wife of the education director of the CIO United Transport Service Employes, died Oct. 5, in Cook County hospital, Chicago, after a long illness. Shortly after her marriage in 1942, Mrs. Calloway conducted a woman's page for "Bags and Baggage," UTSEA official organ, but was forced to retire later that year because of ill health.

A SERIES of weekly radio programs over station WBT, Charlotte, N. C., is being presented Saturdays, from 5:15-5:30 p.m., by the CIO Organizing Committee. Exec. Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi of the Textile Workers Union spoke on the significance of the CIO's southern drive at the first broadcast.

THE IMPORTANCE of the ballot box in winning needed legislation and defeating dangerous bills is the subject of discussion on a series of eight broadcasts being sponsored by the CIO Textile Workers Union in Lawrence, Mass.

HUMAN INTEREST STORIES FROM THE LABOR PRESS

A CERTAIN factory was owned by three men of very different religious faiths. One was Catholic, another Portestant and the third a Jew.

One day three workers in this factory were eating their lunches together in the factory yard. Before long they were involved in a heated argument on religion. Just then a fourth worker came along. He listened for a few minutes, then pointed to the office windows across the street and said:

"Boys do you ever hear the three owners of this place quarreling about their religious differences?" They admitted they hadn't.

"Do you know why?" he asked. The men shook their heads. "Because there is no profit in it."

IF YOU should hear a song called "Little Old Shack on the Plains" listen to it carefully. It was written by Jimmie Busler, UAW member in Memphis, Tenn., who won a national song-writing contest sponsored by Republic Pictures and Song Hits Magazine with it.

His latest song, says the United Auto Workers paper, is about the housing shortage, and is called "If I Had a House."

Here's an amusing incident told to an organizer by a worker at the Rutter-Rex cotton garment plant in New Orleans about how she slyly spoofed a boss who tried to get her to vote against the union. It's from ADVANCE, Amalgamated Clothing Workers paper.

"This morning the boss came up to me and said, 'You ain't going to vote for the union, are you?'

"Why whatever made you think that?" replied the girl. "I know who started this factory and who paid us wages all these years. You can count on me. I know where to put that X."

Telling the organizer about it later, the girl said: "And I do know where to put that X. Right under 'Yes' for the union. Don't I know what kind of wages those bosses have been paying me and all the rest of the girls!"

Then with a big smile, she added: "The joke of it is that ever since the boss has been patting me on the back, coming around to tell me how good my work is and what a nice girl I am. He should know!" (The Amalgamated won the election 270 to 126.)

Larry Parks impersonates famous Jolson rendition of "Mammy" with eye-filling chorus in background. Jolson's actual voice is synchronized with Park's acting in Columbia's excellent technicolor production of "The Jolson Story."

Flicker Front

THOSE GOOD OLD DAYS

By GEORGE WEISSMAN

NOSTALGIA seems to have gripped the movie capital as the recent releases bring back the "good old days"—at least in the musical sense. The tuneful, pleasant songs of yesteryear have an edge for a change over the current flood of psychological violent murder pictures.

"The Jolson Story" leads off the parade with a rousing musical hit that ranks tops among the enjoyable pictures of these times. The flicker is 99 and 44/100% pure music and entertainment as Jolson reels off one hit song after another.

Larry Parks plays the role of Asa Yolson, son of a Washington, D. C. cantor, who breaks into vaudeville by accident. From there on in with a minimum of plot and a maximum of colorful stage numbers, the picture depicts Jolson's rise in the musical world.

Parks does the acting and goes through all of Jolson's traditional gestures, while an off-stage Jolson does the singing. Aided also by a tasteful, technicolor production, "The Jolson Story" is tops on the family list.

"Blue Skies" follows closely on the heels of "The Jolson Story" for honors in the calvacade of the show business. Although lush with the talents of Bing Crosby, Fred Astaire and Joan Caulfield, the picture makes the unfortunate mistake of trying to have a story. And, it is the usual one of a divorced couple being reunited by the haunting refrains of their favorite songs.

In this case it is something special since the songs are the nation's favorites among 42 of Irving Berlin's hits. Crosby, Astaire and Olga San Juan are excellent in the musical and dancing numbers while Billy De Wolfe contributes his comic talents.

Following "Blue Skies," it is pleasant to report that "Margie" concentrates more on story than music to bring back the sentimentalism of the late twenties. There is nothing pretentious about this picture which surrounds the hit song "Margie" with the atmosphere of high school hero-worship, flappers, flagpole sitters. "Three Little Girls in Blue" is another picture that doesn't have any earth-shaking qualities about it. It is just a musical and honest enough to admit same. In a fresh, gay manner, it is a fairly pleasant one at that.

RECENTLY, a picket line of 8,000 union seamen forced the N. Y. Times to eat the words of its naval "expert," Midshipman Hanson Baldwin, who called for a return to the rule of the sea by the harsh, old "bucko mates." He also said the Merchant Marine was degenerating under the influence of unionism.

Evidently he didn't follow the movie pages of his own paper which told of two excellent sea films currently showing in the neighborhood of his own office. The first was the English picture, "The Raiders," made during the war and finally released to the public.

The story concerns a group of survivors in a lifeboat and how they are used to bait a rescue ship into torpedo firing range of a U-boat. The actors are all merchant seamen with nary a professional to be seen. The picture was shot at sea, not in a Hollywood pool. And, it all added up to one of the finest, most exciting tales to reach the screen in tribute to the seamen of the Allied nations.

"Two Years Before The Mast" is another for Mr. Baldwin's and every movie-goer's recommended list. Based on the novel by Richard Dana, Jr., the picture spares no punches or floggings.

Barry Fitzgerald, Howard DeSilva and William Bendix are superb as old "salts" while Alan Ladd and Brian Donlevy neatly play their roles of "boots."

IN the finest traditions of "Don't Be A Sucker" and "Teamwork," the new 16-mm two-reeler, "Of These Our People," is one of the best labor films to meet the threat of anti-semitism and hate-mongering.

With dignity and clarity, it presents moving evidence that the history of the "children of Israel" in our country is inseparable from the history of America itself. Starting with the landing of the Jews in New Amsterdam in 1654, "Of These Our People" traces their contributions to the growth of America through the nation's growth. There was Haym Solomon, who gave his fortune to Washington to fight the revolution and Meyer Levin, Colin Kelly's flying mate.

Names like Einstein, Gompers, Hank Greenberg, Dr. Bela Schick, Leonard Bernstein, Howard Fast, Miss America (Bess Myerson) and others are constant reminders of the Jew's role in American life and culture.

Jewish farmers, machinists, garment workers and others are portrayed to destroy the pet theories of the Bilbos and Rankins. The picture is a powerful labor weapon in answering the anti-semitic slanders of the KKK'ers and their Nazi-minded followers.

And unless, the labor movement does answer the attacks on its Jewish, Catholic, Negro and other minority members, it will suffer through division. "Of These Our People" is available from Horizon Films, 232 W. 14th St., NY 11 NY.

Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire go through a hilarious song and dance routine in a rendition of one of Irving Berlin's top hits of the last twenty years. Scene is from "Blue Skies," also starring Joan Caulfield.

Jewish farmers till the soil in scene from "Of These Our People," latest 16-mm two-reeler by Horizon Films. The flicker which depicts the history of the Jews in America is a powerful weapon against the hate-mongers.

Aimed at Labor Too

BIG BUSINESS DRIVE HITS SMALL FARMERS

FARM advisers of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce this week were accused of fostering a policy which would drive several million small farmers off their land, and would use them as competition in the industrial labor market to drive down wage rates.

The accusation was made by Facts for Farmers, publication of Farm Research, in N. Y. City. The monthly paper, edited by Charles J. Coe, said:

"Despite the fact that the independent, family-size farm has long been regarded as one to be cherished and safeguarded, the NAM and the Chamber of Commerce experts are calling for its speedy elimination.

"They see in this farm displacement an opportunity to slash wage rates as millions of farm people are thrown onto the labor market."

FACTS for Farmers cited government statistics showing that farm mechanization has sharply increased, that productivity per worker has risen largely as a result of this, and that farms are larger but are fewer in number.

Census reports show that there has been a 55% increase in tractors on farms, from 1940 to 1945, yet the number of farms with tractors increased only 42%.

Two-thirds of all farms, nearly four million, have no tractors, and of these one and a half million have neither horses nor mules!

In 1945, 219,799 fewer farms existed than in 1940—a drop from 6,096,799 to 5,877,000, nearly half of which took place in the South. The average size farm increased from 174 acres in 1940 to 195 acres in 1945.

Noting that large numbers of farmers cannot benefit from increased mechanization because they lack the capital to buy equipment, Facts for Farmers points out:

"The story of farm mechanization should warn the farmers against the campaign which seeks to spread anti-labor poison about the countryside.

"With two out of every three farmers only a jump or so ahead of displacement from the land, they cannot afford to join with the NAM in a campaign to hit labor over the head.

"Labor is the one group which has a direct interest in helping the working farmers to hold onto their farms. The displacement of these four million or more farm families would lead to sharp slashes in wages and thus bring economic hardship upon the workers as well as upon the farmers."

NOTING that election of a progressive Congress is the key to the problem, Facts for Farmers stated that the tenure of small farmers on the land should be protected.

"Low-cost credit and government-financed tractor and machinery coops should be made available to the small and middle farmers.

"Effective measures should be taken to improve dietary standards and increase the consumption of farm products.

"The promise of farm support prices at not less than 90% of parity should be kept, with a guarantee of full farm production and no forced reduction on the smaller farmers."

Facts for Farmers added, "It would not be unreasonable to ask that the government should guarantee every farm family and farm worker family a minimum annual income of not less than $2,500 a year."

Economic Outlook Says

BIG U. S. SPENDING CAN AVOID CRASH

BIG scale government spending can help the U. S. keep its economy on an even keel and avoid the evils of serious depression, the CIO Economic Outlook, published by the Dept. of Research & Education, declared in its October issue.

In a long discussion of government fiscal policy and its relation to full employment, the Outlook posed the question, "How can we keep the national income at a high level and keep increasing it?"

By all odds the best bet, the Outlook said, "is to keep American workers fully employed at decent wages."

But there may be times, it added, when idle savings develop into huge amounts, spending falls, and men face unemployment.

"When it becomes clear that private demand will not underwrite full production and full employment, the government must be brought into the picture with public works, federal aid to low-cost housing, downward tax adjustments, increased social security payments, and other payments to see that demand for goods and services is kept at high enough levels to preserve full employment," the CIO publication said.

HOW will government spending do that job?

Taking as an example a $10 billion expenditure by government, the Outlook notes that the money passes into the hands of steel manufacturers and others, all of whom, in turn, spend a good part of what they receive. Such "chain-spending" can easily lead to an increase of $30 billion in the national income, the publication said. It might be enough to spell the difference between widespread lay-offs and full employment.

Government spending on a big scale can produce increases in the national wealth, the Outlook emphasized.

"Debt arising from the construction of new libraries and schools, or from improved health facilities such as free clinics for young children," it said, "involves no direct gain but is clearly worthwhile as a contribution toward a better life for the nation's people . . .

"Money invested by the government in irrigation, public power projects recreation facilities, and the like, is a kind of community capital, a capital investment which helps to increase the wealth and income of all the people."

ASKS HALT TO PROSECUTION OF FISHERMEN

Chmn. Schuyler O. Bland (D. Va.) of the House merchant marine and fisheries committee this week asked Atty. Genl. Clark to hold off on antitrust criminal action against CIO fishermen until the committee can "determine the advisability of additional legislation."

CIO Local 36, Fishermen & Allied Workers had been indicted by a federal grand jury last August of Justice Dept. charges of conspiracy to fix minimum prices. The charge said the fishermen were not workers, but "independent businessmen," and as such not exempt from the Sherman antitrust Act.

The union pointed out that fishermen's demand for minimum prices for fish could be compared to farmers' demand for minimum prices for farm produce.

During the war, the union said, a national policy that guaranteed minimum prices in order to achieve full production was developed, and embraced the fish industry. Bland wrote Clark that was the intent of the Fishermen's Marketing Act of 1934, and said his committee would clarify the law at the next session if necessary. Fear of antitrust prosecution might make buyers hesitate to renew present agreements and thus bring on a stoppage, he said.

Bare Lewis Tie To Nazi Pal

HERMAN GOERING, who bet his life on the theory that the Nazis would conquer the democratic world, toyed with the idea of betting $5,000,000 that John L. Lewis could prevent the re-election of Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1940.

The disclosure of Goering's interest in "stopping Roosevelt at any price" during the first 15 months of World War II came to light last week in a speech by O. John Rogge, special assistant to Atty. General Tom Clark. Rogge was assigned last spring to determine connections between big shot Nazis and their American friends. He spent several months in Germany interviewing Goering and other leading figures in the economic, political and diplomatic life of Hitler's Germany.

THERE is no indication, according to Rogge's speech and other memoranda on the subject which have been circulating in Washington, that the money was paid over to Lewis or that the mine workers' chief was aware of the Nazis' keen interest in his isolationist, anti-Roosevelt activities.

But the record is more explicit in indicating the close personal relationship between Lewis and the late William Rhodes Davis, a shadowy figure of the international world of oil whose principal interest during 1939-40 was to provide petroleum for the surging German army, navy and air forces.

Davis also fancied himself as a peacemaker, and used Lewis's influence to obtain a conference with FDR in September, 1939. It was then that Davis proposed that the President arbitrate a proposed German peace settlement—a proposal that Davis made clear had come to him from Goering.

LAST summer, at Nuremberg—a few months before he robbed the gallows by swallowing potassium cyanide—Goering told the Dept. of Justice official that Davis had "presented himself as a very good friend of John L. Lewis." Davis, Goering added, "told me that by the use of his influence on Lewis he could influence the elections in such a manner that the re-election of Roosevelt . . . could be prevented."

Davis saw Goering in the late summer of 1939, just as the Nazis were launching their attack on Poland. Davis' passport, which permitted him to travel to Italy, had been secured with the help of the mine workers' leader. Davis journeyed up the Axis from Rome to Berlin to discuss American politics with the No. 2 Nazi.

Goering appears from Rogge's speech to have been a little skeptical that only $5,000,000 could beat Roosevelt in the 1940 elections—though he indicated to Rogge during the 1946 interview that Roosevelt's defeat would have been worth at least a hundred million dollars to the Nazi war machine.

ROGGE indicated that Lewis helped pave the way for German purchases of Mexican oil during the summer of 1939. Early in that last peacetime year, Davis is alleged to have brought Lewis together with Joachin Hertslet, a high official in the German economics ministry, who was visiting the U. S.

The Nazis were anxious to buy oil from Mexico, which was facing a boycott by big American and British firms as a result of the nationalization of its own oil resources. Lewis arranged with Mexican labor leaders for an appointment between Davis and Cardenas, then head of the Mexican Republic.

With Hertslet in attendance, conferences were held in Mexico City in July of 1939 and the deal was settled by which Germany received Mexican oil in exchange for industrial products.

On Sept. 19, 1939, Lewis wrote to President Roosevelt transmitting a cable from Hertslet to Davis in which the Nazi leader urged American neutrality in the war and promised that the German government would behave itself after it had finished swallowing Poland.

Throughout 1939 and 1940 Lewis was reported as writing or talking on frequent occasions to FDR and Asst. Sec. of State Adolph Berle.

In Sept. 1939, as one example, Lewis called personally at the home of Berle to plead again that "the time had come for a general peace" and that oil-man Davis, just returned to the U. S. from Germany, had a message from a Nazi leader indicating a way to settle the war. Roosevelt constantly maintained that any such proposition must come officially from the Nazi government.

PRODUCTION AND PROFITS

"...The stock market took another big dip. Everywhere people were wondering and arguing the cause. Those expecting the worst at every turn were prompt to ask—is this It? Does the stock market break signal the approach of a postwar depression?" . . . .

"As a matter of fact the current stock market decline is a healthy thing. It is healthy for two reasons. First because it is taking some air out of stock market inflation. Prices of almost everything have been steadily rising all along. But stock-market prices, unbridled and unchecked, have been boosted out of all proportion. The current adjustment will bring stock prices in closer relation to their real worth."

"Another reason why the decline is healthy is that it will sober up the speculators." . . . .

"We are in the midst of a price boom which is close to the danger point. If it goes much farther, there will be a blow-out which will leave us flat. A number of current developments are producing added inflationary pressures. The worst of these is that a lot of goods now produced in large volume does not reach the public. It is kept in warehouses, waiting for still higher prices."

"According to the Dept. of Commerce, at the end of July eighteen billion dollars' worth of goods were stored in the manufacturers' warehouses, four and a half billion dollars in the hands of wholesalers, and seven and a half billion in retail inventories. A large part of this is just plain hoarding. These goods are badly needed by the public and should move out to markets in a steady stream. If instead they're all suddenly dumped in one fell swoop, the resulting log-jam may wreck our whole economy." . . . . . .

"The CIO predicted nine months ago that corporation profits of 1946 would be exorbitant and that necessary wage increases could be paid and absorbed without increasing prices. Positive proof of this thesis is now becoming available.
"...Corporate profits by the fourth quarter of 1946 will be running at an annual rate of 25 to 50% above the war years. Total corporate profits for the years 1942-45, after taxes, averaged $9.5 billion. The best estimates available indicate that corporate profits, after taxes, will be at the fantastic level of almost $14 billion by the fourth quarter of 1946."
"Profits in the war years 1942-45 and estimated profits for 1946 make profits for the pre-war years, 1936-39, of $3.9 billion look mighty small. In other words, by the fourth quarter of 1946, corporate profits, after taxes, will be 250% above 1936-39 profits and almost 50% above the war years 1942-45. [Figures for all corporations.]" [Cites also Federal Reserve data for 629 industrial corporations. Also data for particular industries: iron and steel; non-durable goods; food and beverages.]
"It is clear that the CIO's position, that wage increases could be paid out of increased profits, was valid. These figures prove beyond any reasonable doubt that corporations could have absorbed increased wage costs without increasing prices."

(CIO News, 10-16-46. By Stanley Ruttenberg)

"Production Will Decrease Prices"

. . . . "We can still avoid the kind of inflation which caused the disastrous 1921 depression, but we must take every possible step to minimize further price increases. When we have increased production enough to meet demand, a gradual price decline can benefit everyone; but further sharp price increases now [this was published prior to recent meat, etc. de-controls], followed by a price collapse as in 1921, could disrupt industry as it did then."
"...In the prosperous period from 1923 to 1929, and again from 1937 to 1940, consumer prices remained relatively stable, even declining in some years. In these same periods wages were rising. From 1923 to 1929, average hourly earnings of factory workers rose 8 per cent; from 1937 to 1940, 6 per cent. Wholesale prices of the goods made by the workers who got these increases actually declined 12 per cent and 3 per cent, respectively, in these two periods."
"This is clear proof that wages can rise without increasing prices. It means that workers need not forego wage increases now if, through collective bargaining, they can adjust wages upward in proportion as rising production cuts overhead costs and rising production per manhour cuts labor costs."
"We suggest the following guides to union policy in the months ahead. They continue the same constructive policies pursued by AFL unions since V-J Day, and are especially important in the critical months before us while the inflation danger still looms."
"1. Continue to increase production and improve efficiency. This is the only way to get a wage increase without raising prices and living costs. Production has made excellent progress in the last three months, but is not yet meeting demand."
"2. Use the strike weapon only as a last resort. Build up sound relations between your union and the employer, based on bargaining in good faith, square dealing and presentation of facts. When the employer deals fairly with you, show your readiness to cooperate in solving plant problems. If disputes arise and cannot be settled, call in the U. S. Conciliation Service or use other means of settlement, making every effort to avoid strikes."

"Negotiate wage increases within price ceilings or within existing prices if there are no ceilings." . . . . . .
(The International Teamster, AFL, Oct. '46. From AFL Monthly Survey)

"Shortages No Fault of Labor"
"...CIO Pres. Philip Murray declared this week that strikes and slow-downs were in no way responsible for present shortages of goods."...
"Murray cited official figures to prove that labor's productivity is now higher than ever before."
"In the steel industry the present per capita production of steel workers is the highest in the nation's history. . . The war record—460,000 steel workers produced 89,000,000 tons of steel in an average work week of 46.6 hours—was compared with the present when 462,000 workers are producing 84,000,000 tons in a work-week of 36.5 hours."
"And you pick up your papers and find that there are no cars, no refrigerators and the other things...and this scarcity is attributed to lack of interest on the part of labor"...
"Murray charged that huge inventories of both durable and consumers' goods constituted a much more real threat to the security and welfare of the nation than strikes." [Inventories at the unprecedented high of $37 billion]
"If we were asked where those inventories were, Murray said he could not answer. 'There isn't anybody in Washington who can answer it.. .I've tried for the last few weeks to find out..!"
(CIO News 10-21-46)

Pres. Harry C. Bates, Bricklayers, and head, AFL Housing Committee.
Stated in interview [that the home building program is far behind schedule and that when the snow flies there will be an awful lot of houses incomplete and a lot of GI Joe's and other plain people terribly disappointed.]
[It is not the fault of unions.]
"Today...we are prepared to supply the men to build houses, but there are certain terrifying bottlenecks. Many manufacturers of the things needed to complete houses are on what the newspapers would call sit-down or slow-down strikes if a labor union indulged in such tactics."
"They are demanding big prices and insisting on low wages...[this does not apply to all but to] "a very formidable minority."
"Not to make too much money now is actually profitable for them—at public expense...[explaining that those concerns which held war contracts are entitled to tax refunds if they experience "reconversion" losses.]"
"Then there is the landowner...he has shoved prices out of sight. On top of that, the realtors and others have been making exorbitant profits."
"Most of the permanent houses completed are priced at figures only a few can afford. For example, in May the average was over $9,000 per house. Obviously the average veteran or other workingman cannot pay that kind of money."
[The AFL building trades workers are sticking to their jobs despite the wage injustices resulting from the stabilization program.]

WAGE PROBLEMS

Portal-to-Portal Pay in Industry

"The United Steel Workers of America and the CIO are planning a campaign to establish 'portal-to-portal' pay throughout American industry."

[This announced by Pres. Philip Murray in Chicago at a meeting of USA-CIO, District 31.]

Said Mr. Murray, "We intend to find out why this accepted principle in the labor law of our country has not been extended to all industries."

"He disclosed that the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan had only recently validated a CIO claim for portal-to-portal pay."

Murray stated, "The CIO want to know why American employers in major industries have, for the past eight years, refused to recognize the plain legality of portal-to-portal pay for all workers in all industries."

(Steel Labor, Oct. 1946)

Lee Pressman, USA-CIO General Counsel:

"The CIO, in several cases, has obtained some very interesting decisions from the United States Supreme Court describing 'work time' under the Wage and Hour Law."

"Where this extra time is over and above the 40 hours of work for which pay has been given, the extra pay must be computed at time and one-half since it would be overtime with double indemnity."

"The first milestone was marked in the case of the iron ore miners in Alabama. A suit involving a CIO union and its members brought a decision from the United States Supreme Court that all time spent underground traveling to and from the work place constitutes work-time for which compensation must be paid by the employer. Where the travel time exceeded the 40-hour workweek, the extra time had to be computed at the rate of time and one-half."

"A recent case of the Supreme Court gives even greater meaning to the concept of 'hours worked' under the Wage and Hour law. In the latter case, it was shown that after the employes passed the timeclock, located at the plant gate, there was a period of time before they actually began productive work."

"This included (a) time spent walking from the timeclock to the place where the productive work was to be performed, and (b) time spent in make-ready activities prior to the commencement of productive work."

"The so-called make-ready activities included such things as 'putting on aprons and overalls, removing shirts, taping or greasing arms, putting on finger cots, preparing the equipment for productive work, turning on the switches for light and machinery, opening windows, and assembling and sharpening tools.'"

"The Court held that all such time was work-time for which the employer had to pay compensation to the employe."

"With the walking time, the Court held that it was work-time since it was 'under the complete control of the employer, being dependent solely upon the physical arrangements which the employer made in the factory...without such walking on the part of the employes the productive aims of the employer could not have been achieved.'"

[Thus, Court distinguishes between travel between the employe's home and the factory, and travel time on company premises for which compensation must be paid.]

"For the preliminary activity or make-ready time, the Court stated 'they involve exertion of a physical nature, controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the employer's benefit.'"

[The sole limitation to this doctrine is that where the amount of time is negligible--few seconds or moments--no payment can be claimed.]

"...The Court held that the employe has proven his case if he shows that there has been time spent on travel and preliminary work. It is then up to the employer to show the precise amount of time involved. If he fails to do so the Court may award damages to the employe even though the result be only approximate."
"Clearly enough, these decisions of the Supreme Court make it necessary to review what has been occurring in the plants in terms of time spent for which no compensation has been paid by the employers. For such time, the employes are entitled to recover back compensation."
(Steel Labor. Oct. 1946)

On Wage Policies of Unions

United Mine Workers-Convention Resolution
"Whereas, the United Mine Workers of America has had many experiences with tribunals created for the purpose of regulating prices, wages and distribution...
"The War Labor Board attempted to strike from our contract the requirement that all men who are employed in the mines be members of the United Mine Workers....
"...They refused to approve an agreement entered into with the coal operators providing for portal to portal pay, with the result that the mines were seized by the Government, and we were compelled to agree to portal to portal pay after 40 hours at a two-thirds rate...
"...Prices for every commodity were supposed to be controlled under the [OPA], they were being increased by leaps and bounds, and every responsible labor organization and citizen in this country knew that the increased cost of living published by the Government was substantially below the actual increased cost the people were required to pay...
"...We believe these agencies are created for the purpose of shackling or retarding the onward march of organized labor and the United Mine Workers... in particular, and the sooner all of these administrative tribunals are abolished, the better it will be for our country...
"...We want to be free to exercise our rights as free workmen to market our labor and purchase our requirements under a free system without interference or regulation by any appointed or created tribunal; therefore be it
'Resolved, That this Convention go on record as opposed to any regulation that interferes with the freedom and the rights of our members.'"
(UMW Journal, Oct. 15, '46)

United Auto Workers-CIO, Wage-Price Policy, adopted by Int'l Exec. Board. (Excerpts): "The UAW-CIO fully supports the program on price and wage stabilization adopted by the CIO, Thursday, Aug. 15, 1946. We will work closely with Pres. Philip Murray to gear our activities with the other CIO affiliated international unions in order to assure maximum coordination among all sections of the CIO. In accordance with the CIO program and in order to implement it most effectively in the industries under our jurisdiction, the UAW-CIO International Executive Board adopts the following program of action:
[Following most rapid increase in cost of living ever recorded by official index, we are faced with further increases in prices of all the necessities of life.] "The fight against inflation has become the major front in our struggle to protect the living standards of our membership."

[Congress has wrecked the price control law...we must put our chief reliance upon our power as consumers...Shall seek the aid and cooperation of farmers against the packers, profiteers and middlemen...Expose the record of government agencies which yield to the demands of profiteering industries.]
"Consumer action and political action must be linked together in the fight against inflation...
"We must make it clear to the people that inflation is here because Congress voted for inflation..."
"While pressing our fight against inflation on the price front, we must nevertheless take preliminary steps in preparation for action on the wage front. The continued failure of government to roll prices back and hold them down compels us to exercise our option to reopen our wage contracts in order to protect our living standards."
[Since the contract with the Chrysler Corp. provides for re-opening of wages upon 60 days' notice, the UAW-CIO Int'l Exec. Bd. authorizes immediate filing of notification of our desire to open wage negotiations with the Chrysler Corp. and with other companies where contract provisions permit.] . . . . . .
"If we are to achieve and maintain an economy of abundance, we must continue to press for acceptance of the basic economic fact that mass productive power must be matched by mass purchasing power. Accordingly our task is to increase real wages by insisting that wage increases be paid out of the higher profits of industry made possible by the economies of full production and improved technology and not passed on to the consumer in higher prices."
(Un. Auto Worker, Sep. '46)

United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, CIO, Convention Wage Policy.
"The union's wage policy statement declared that since its inception the UE had achieved major wage gains in cooperation with the Steelworkers and the Auto Workers, 'the major metal-working CIO unions.'"
"Today more so than ever before [said the resolution] for maximum effectiveness, a program for wage increases must likewise be based on unity of program and action of the UE, Steelworkers, Auto Workers, and other CIO unions." ....
"...Significant first steps have already been taken in this direction by the CIO" [through joint meetings of the major unions and a joint wage research committee.] Said the UE, its "entire strength will be exerted in support of this joint effort." . . .
(CIO News, Sep. 23, '46)

United Rubber Workers, CIO.
"Wage demands and the procedure to be followed in getting them will be formulated at a meeting of the interim International Policy Committee which will meet in South Bend, Ind., Oct. 27-28..." [The conference called in accordance with a resolution at the Union's Convention held in San Francisco.]
(Un. Rubber Worker, Oct. '46)

Amalgamated Clothing Workers, CIO.
"Negotiations on the union's demand for a wage increase are now in progress between representatives of the Amalgamated and the employers in the men's and boy's clothing industry, the shirt and cotton garment industry and allied trades...The union's demand for the wage increase is based on the policy enunciated by the Genl. Executive Bd. at its Aug. meeting, when it stated that the breakdown of price control might make it imperative to reopen the question of wages, a step permissible under the collective bargaining agreement between the union and the employers." . . . . .
(Advance, Oct. 1, '46)

AFL Pres. William Green on Elimination of Wage and Price Controls.
Keynote address to 65th Annual Convention of AFL: Called for elimination of government controls on prices and wages. "He excepted only 'rent and some comparable items.'" . . . . "...What is needed is not so much price control as the centering upon full production by the workers of the nation and by cooperation of management making it possible for us to apply the law of economics and bring about production so it will balance with the law of supply and demand. Everyone knows that. Any article that is short will call for more prices and create black markets, but full production means a solution of the problem of inflation." .....
(Colo. Lab. Advo. 10-10-46)

GOVERNMENT AND LABOR

Pres. John P. Frey, Metal Trades Convention, AFL.
"As there must be Federal agencies wielding authority, it strikes the average man that Trade Unionists cannot be protected unless there is action by Congress which would prevent such conditions as those against which we have found cause to complain."
"As the situation stands today, our welfare, our rights and our opportunities rest largely in the hands of men given great authority, over whom we have no voice, for they do not hold elective office. It is our well-measured conviction that the existence of a bureaucracy is a definite menace to free institutions, and as they increase in number, the menage is increased." . . .
"Government by law, which regulates and defines the authority of public officials, has been superseded by control over our every-day activities by the bureaus, commissions, boards and other Federal regulation bodies which are controlled, at least in part, by their partisan views, the theories to which they are wedded, obvious prejudices and political objectives. Perhaps no greater problem faces our trade union movement today than this issue of bureaucratic controls."
(E. Bay Labor Journal, AFL, 10-11-46)

Federal Workers and Anti-Strike Affidavits
Several labor journals discuss affidavits which government workers now are required to sign under the Ball-Russell appropriation bill anti-strike riders. (Cf. Painter & Decorator (AFL), Oct. '46; Raleigh Union Herald (AFL) 10-10-46; Railroad Trainman, Sep. '46; and others.) See Painter & Decorator for article by Joseph Padway, General Counsel of AFL, "Is the Government Adopting the 'Yellow Dog' Contract?"

United Nations Move Toward Disarmament

AFTER Russia proposed and the United States seconded the idea of a general reduction of armaments, the General Assembly of the United Nations moved with commendable speed to place the matter high on the agenda of the important meeting now in progress in New York. This wise decision did more to create confidence that something constructive might actually be accomplished than anything else that has occurred. Of the more than fifty questions which have been docketed for discussion by the Assembly, none is more important or more pressing. So long as the principal powers devote their major energies and the larger share of their budgets to the arms race, as they now are doing, they cannot and will not undertake the great responsibilities that await their common action. Furthermore, they cannot hope to succeed in writing peace treaties worthy of the name or to set into effective motion the organizations of the world community which can restore international trade, communications and finance. Peace treaties written by nations which are preparing to fight each other are nothing more than diplomatic agreements to determine where the battles of the new war shall begin. But treaties written by nations which are disarming will be designed in the interest of the people whose future is under discussion and with the purpose of providing a durable settlement.

Russia Asks Assembly To Ban Atomic Arms

ON THE DAY before Foreign Minister Molotov presented Russia's arms reduction proposal to the Assembly, Prime Minister Stalin issued the most conciliatory statement he had yet made. Replying to 31 questions raised by the United Press, he denied that Russia has an atomic bomb, affirmed that tension between Russia and ourselves is not increasing and expressed hope that peace negotiations would be successful. Then Molotov spoke, and the world gasped at the contrast in tone. The foreign minister's speech bristled with criticism of the United States and the Western allies. The explanation is not that Molotov was contradicting or defying his superior, but that both were attempting to repair the damage done Russian prestige at Paris. Molotov played his trump card by making his proposal for the reduction of armaments. This set Russia forth as a nation which desires peace. Significantly, he threw the whole problem into the Assembly, rather than leaving it to be solved by bilateral or multilateral agreements. He asked the Assembly to issue a declaration that a reduction of armaments is necessary, to ban the manufacture and use of atomic energy for military purposes, to tell the Security Council how to schedule reductions, and to call upon all governments to render every possible assistance to that body. Although his proposal did not assume the breadth of the historic disarmament proposal made by Litvinov to the League of Nations many years before, the fact that it was made following Stalin's pacific gesture gave rise to the first glimmer of optimism to be seen in international diplomacy since the Paris conference began.

United States Endorses Soviet Proposal

AFTER the First World War, it was our secretary of state, Charles Evans Hughes, who electrified the Washington arms conference with a proposal for sweeping limitation of arms. This time, the head of our delegation to the U. N. Assembly, former Senator Warren R. Austin, contented himself with seconding the similar but less sweeping proposal made by the Russians. He attempted to justify the appropriateness of this secondary position by saying that it was right for Russia to speak first, since she retains a military establishment larger than that of the rest of the world combined. Besides, he noted, we had previously taken the lead in proposing a scheme for the abolition of atomic armaments. In endorsing the Molotov proposition, Mr. Austin reaffirmed the position of our government that international inspection must become an integral part of any plan which hopes for the agreement of the United States. Molotov denounced this point as "atomic diplomacy." But there is no escaping the fact that the crux of the disarmament issue lies in the achievement of international control of atomic development and international inspection of everything necessary to it, from raw materials to the use of the finished product. Atomic bombs are related to all preceding armaments as gunpowder was related to the bow and arrow. In spite of those who would depreciate them, they are the decisive weapon, for there is no defense which can stand against them. In this crucial issue therefore lies the test of Russian good faith and the hope of the world for real disarmament. It is a hopeful augury that representatives of the United States, while insisting on this point, have refused to exchange recriminations with the Russian foreign minister. Mr. Baruch's statement that we are ready to outlaw the atom bomb, as Russia urges, and to destroy our present stock of bombs providing the nations agree to inspection, indicates that the deadlock on this issue may not be quite as complete as it has seemed to be.

What Has Happened To CARE Packages?

IN RECENT WEEKS The Christian Century has received several letters, like one which appears in our correspondence section in this issue, asking what has happened to packages sent overseas through CARE. Because this paper has commended the agency, which was set up by more than a dozen of the leading relief groups in this country, we have attempted to learn the facts. It will be recalled that CARE undertook to deliver to designated persons in Europe food packages containing 40,000 calories of army surplus rations. For an original price of $15, now reduced to $10, the packages were to be delivered and a receipt, signed by the addressee, returned to the sender. Because receipts for packages sent early in the summer were slow in reaching the donors, many persons have begun to ask: "What has happened to CARE?" The answer seems to be that CARE has encountered an unexpected array of obstacles, but that it is overcoming these and will be able to carry out its commitments. Handling more than 2,000,000 orders, it became entangled in a complex of administrative difficulties in this country. These have been tackled with resolution, and are now well on the road to solution. Overseas, extreme complications were encountered in getting warehouse and transportation facilities in war-shattered countries. Persons to whom packages were addressed were often very hard to find in the chaotic situation in many nations, particularly in Germany. But there has been a reorganization of staff which is now getting this problem under control. As to the receipts, they are held overseas until several thousand accumulate to be sent to the United States by air. With the grounding of Constellation planes, this schedule went awry. Also, thousands of receipts were lost in tragic crashes of transatlantic planes. All these receipts are being replaced from duplicates, but this takes time and personnel. CARE realizes the great importance of the return of these evidences that it has done its work. It is attempting to work its way out of the situation and is doing so. Its sponsoring organizations continue to have faith in it. It has recently been able to make advantageous purchases of surpluses, so that it can offer to send packages for $10. Its address is 50 Broad street, New York. The need for food is as great as ever.

Quakers Heal Old Breach

AFTER more than a century of separation, the two main branches of the Society of Friends in Philadelphia have united to form the "Philadelphia General Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends." News of this reunion will come as something of a shock to most Protestants, for the differences between members of this honored body of Christians have been almost completely submerged beneath the multitude of their services to reconciliation and the relief of suffering. But it was not always so. Early in the last century Elias Hicks, a Long Island farmer, began to fear that a spirit of doctrinal intolerance was growing up in the society. He traveled widely, Elbert Russell tells us, contending "for the ancient Quaker freedom to follow the Inward Light and to believe only what Truth reveals." In an earlier or later age, Hicks' preaching might have caused no commotion, but the evangelical revival was under way throughout the country and it did not leave the Society of Friends untouched. Other members of the society, chief of whom was Thomas Shillitoe, suspected that Hicks was not sufficiently orthodox. Protracted discussions began, which led in 1827 to the withdrawal of the "Hicksites" from the yearly meeting, a fissure which it required more than a century to heal. An important factor in the rapprochement was the participation of both groups in the work of the American Friends Service Committee, the Friends Council on Education and the Friends World Committee for Consultation. But much still remains to be done to bring all the members of this body together. In addition to the Philadelphia General Meeting, the Yearbook of American Churches lists seven other Quaker bodies, the most numerous of which are the Five Years Meeting, Richmond, Indiana, which has 508 churches and 58,258 members, and the Ohio Yearly Meeting, which has 62 churches and 4,120 members. But a beginning toward reconciliation has been made in the City of Brotherly Love which we hope will prove even more contagious than was the division that began there in 1827.

Admit Relief Workers To Germany!

GENERAL Lucius D. Clay, commander of the American zone in Germany, refuses to admit American relief workers to that zone. They are welcome in the British and French zones, and in the American zone in Austria. They could render in the American zone of Germany the enormous extra aid that they are rendering elsewhere. But the general, whose power seems to be absolute, says No. For example, he has refused to permit the American Friends Service Committee, which is spending $200,000 a month on supplemental relief supplies for his zone, to send 25 highly trained representatives to check up on its administration and to give the remarkable services they are giving elsewhere. Why? What does the general fear from these men of peace? Is he afraid to permit the American people to learn what conditions are in the American zone? That can hardly be, for General Clay himself in a radio broadcast to this country on November 3 stated that a major objective of his administration is quickly to raise the standard of living in Germany. Keeping out men who could aid in this process is therefore an extremely shortsighted policy, even from the standpoint of the army. The army asked the last Congress for $214,000,000 for relief in our zone and got only $96,000,000. The matter must come before the next Congress in January for a deficiency appropriation, if even the starvation ration of 1,500 calories now in force is to be maintained. (At Nuremberg we hanged a German for the "crime against humanity" of keeping the Poles on a ration of 1,700 calories.) How can the army hope to get what it needs from Congress unless the American people are informed? In Austria, relief workers representing the Friends and other voluntary organizations are doubling the effectiveness of relief supplies by helping the people to help themselves. They have assisted persons who are receiving relief to start a glass factory, a paper factory and other instrumentalities of self-support. This sort of thing ought to be going on in Germany. It can go on if Americans who care will tell the President and the department of state what they think before General Clay arrives in this country, as he is expected to do on November 10.

Lilienthal Heads New Atomic Authority

IN APPOINTING David Lilienthal to head the new Atomic Development Commission, President Truman has made an excellent choice for the most important position in the world of technology. Its wisdom is underscored by Senator McKellar's opposition, which grows out of the fact that the former chairman of the TVA refused to open this government agency to political patronage. Mr. Lilienthal is not unknown to readers of The Christian Century, which in recent years has presented a number of articles from his pen. The commission he now heads will have operating control over all phases of atomic development, in accordance with the action authorized by Congress earlier in the year. Thus it will take over from the war department the vast concerns of the "Manhattan District," on which over $2,000,000,000 was spent during the war. That project still employs 130,000 persons and has an annual budget of $375,000,000. It includes the cities of Oak Ridge, Tennessee, Hanford, Washington, and Los Alamos, New Mexico, and a ground area half as large as Rhode Island. All this personnel and apparatus will henceforth be administered by the civilian commission headed by Mr. Lilienthal. The composition of the commission indicates that it will increasingly be devoted to the creation of an industry for the peacetime development of atomic power. Among its members are a leading scientist, a publicist and two men whose experience has been in the field of finance. The ideals motivating the new chairman may be understood from a paragraph in the Lilienthal-Acheson report, which provides the basis for American foreign policy in this field: "To be genuinely effective for security, the plan [for atomic control] must be one that is not wholly negative, suppressive, and police-like. We are not dealing simply with a military or scientific problem but with a problem in statecraft and the ways of the human spirit. Therefore the plan must be one that will tend to develop the beneficial possibilities of atomic energy and encourage the growth of fundamental knowledge, stirring the constructive and imaginative impulses of men rather than merely concentrating on the defensive and negative. It should, in short, be a plan that looks to the promise of man's future well-being as well as to his security."

Central Issue in The Election

BY THE TIME these lines are read, the American people will have registered a major decision concerning their political future. That decision is whether the strong trend toward centralization of authority in Washington shall continue or be reversed. During the last decade and a half, all branches of government have moved toward the conception of a unitary state. The executive has overborne, by one means and another, the legislative and judicial branches which the Constitution made coordinate. The national power has overridden the powers reserved to the states. The states have invaded the realm of local government. All branches of government have taken over the functions formerly left to voluntary associations and enterprises. This has happened in spite of the long training of our people in democratic tradition and procedure and generally without the people's being aware of the significance of what was under way. We moved from one crisis to another without realizing what direction we were taking. The twin calamities of depression and war have driven this nation toward a goal which few acknowledged and fewer desired. With the war ended, thoughtful citizens became gravely concerned when they observed how difficult it was to make effective once more the checks against executive usurpation of power provided by the Constitution. They were dismayed when they saw how weak and compliant Congress had become, and how far the judiciary had departed from the rugged independence which characterized it in the days of Holmes and Brandeis. In this election they will register their decision concerning the continuance of this trend. Every kind of motive, good and bad, prompts the voting. But the number must be large of those who realize that democracy here cannot depend any longer on luck or on endless resources of time and substance. For good or ill, we are at last a part of a world which must have economic stability and peace if freedom is to live.

Why Not Admit What Everybody Knows?

RUSSIA'S renewal of her demand that the other great powers publish their troop assignments in foreign lands, and Senator Austin's concurrence in the demand providing the totals are complete, bring into the forefront a situation which very much needs airing. According to Hanson Baldwin, military expert of the New York Times, the U.S.S.R., Great Britain, France and the United States have more than 3,000,000 troops occupying territories outside their borders. Russia leads with more than 1,500,000 men outside her borders. They are chiefly concentrated in eastern Germany, Poland and Austria, but nearly 300,000 are assigned to Korea and Manchuria. Britain has nearly 500,000 troops in Europe, over 200,000 in the Near East, 38,000 in Japan and 20,000 in Indonesia. The United States has 329,000 in Europe, 140,000 in Japan, 50,000 in Korea, 50,000 in the Philippines, 29,000 in China and others elsewhere, making a total of more than 700,000 abroad. The assignments reflect the military situation which existed at the end of the war. These troops hold their present positions as a result of military conquest. In each case they remain where they are through the decisions of the governments which placed them. In no sense do they represent the United Nations. Reports by these governments to the United Nations of where their troops are and corollary data concerning them should be regarded as the first step toward assumption of responsibility by the world organization of the right to review and if necessary to change all such assignments. In this connection, President Truman's announcement that the United States will seek United Nations approval of our claim to trusteeship over the former Japanese mandated islands in the Pacific is a step in the right direction. It represents a defeat for the military, which seeks outright annexation. In the meantime, why not admit what everybody knows concerning troop assignments?

Christianity in a Free India

[EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

Calcutta, October 16

MY BRIEF VISIT to India has coincided with two events of far-reaching importance. The first was the decision of the Moslem League to enter the new nationalist government. The second was the approval of the South India church union by the United Church of South India. The Moslem decision means that there is to be no division of independent India along the lines of the Pakistan demands. That is to say, it means that unless Mr. Jinnah and his followers have entered the government to wreck it from the inside, as some Congress party extremists suspect and charge. If this is real cooperation, it may well have an immense bearing on the future of the Far East, and indeed on all world politics. But the decision in favor of the church union plan, even though it has passed almost unnoticed in the press, may have as wide and more lasting world repercussions. It may point the way for Christian reunion far beyond the borders of India.

The United Church of South India was the last to vote on the union plan. Previously the Methodists and the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon (the Anglicans) had approved it. But such an opposition had developed in the United Church—a previous union of Presbyterians and Congregationalists—that there were grave fears lest that body vote against it. However, at the showdown the opposition could muster only 10 votes out of more than 150. The only catch in the vote was the proviso that the plan was approved "on the basis of the interpretation of 1935." This had to do with the principle of intercommunion to be observed in the new body during the interim period while it will be moving toward complete adoption—or rather absorption—of the episcopal form of government. If the Anglicans accept this proviso, the South India union may come into existence as early as next January. If they do not, the scheme will be hung up again for a while. But there now seems little doubt of its ultimate adoption. I have even been told—with what basis of reliability I am unable to judge—that there are four Anglican bishops in south India who are ready to lead their dioceses into the union no matter what Lambeth or other Anglican bodies may do or say.

One thing which has surprised me is the apparent indifference of missionaries in north India to the importance of this development in the church life of the south. In a group of more than a dozen missionaries here in Calcutta, where I brought the subject up last Sunday evening, I found that several were totally ignorant of the whole matter. They did not know the terms of the South India union plan; they did not know what missions and churches are involved; naturally they had not the slightest inkling of the importance of the project for the cause of Christian union. The truth is that this merger of episcopal and presbyterial bodies, when it is finally accomplished, will represent an achievement by Indian Christians rather than by missionaries. In saying this I do not mean to minimize the great contributions which a number of missionaries have made to its realization. If the missionaries in south India had fought against it, it would never have gone through. And some of them have fought for it with a devotion that deserves recognition from the whole Christian world. But it is the Indian Christians, determined that their church should not be forever afflicted by the sectarian divisions of the West, who have furnished the driving force that is putting this union scheme over. It was Bishop Azariah of Dornakal, the first Indian consecrated to the Anglican episcopate, who gave the project its real start, and it is Indian demand which has brought it this close to consummation.

The uncertainty that attends the approach of the day when action by the Anglicans will decide whether the South India United Church is to come into being at once, or is to be thrown back into the arena of debate for another term of years, is symptomatic of the present state of affairs throughout the Christian enterprise in India. Like everything else Indian, the Christian churches and missions have entered a period of transition. Important things, and a lot of them, are going to happen within the next few years. But no one can be sure what these will be, and accordingly there is a general atmosphere of uncertainty, and in some quarters of anxiety. Everything seems to be "on the verge"—but what is beyond the verge, who can tell?

One thing seems clear. The Christian community in India is under attack as it has not been for years past. Sometimes this attack takes such forms as the restrictions recently placed on Christian churches and schools in the native state of Travancore. Far more important for the future, however, is the growing tendency in nationalist quarters to hold the Christians disloyal to the nationalist cause. The students, who are noisy about everything, tend to be noisiest in spreading this assertion of the ineradicably "foreign" character of Christianity. But it is also coming from Congress leaders who are prominent in the Constituent Assembly and from influential individuals who might be expected to have a more tolerant outlook. One of these is Gandhi.

Not long ago a delegation of eminent Indian Christians visited Gandhi at his Warda settlement. Knowing his views on the importance of Hindustani as a national language to bind the new India together, they were careful to carry on their side of the conversation in that language. Gandhi, however, persistently replied to their questions in English. Finally one of them commented on that fact and asked him why he was doing so. "I always," replied Gandhi, "talk to foreigners in English." That reply has sunk deeply into the consciousness of the Indian Christian leaders. Its implications appall them, and they know India too well to dismiss Gandhi's influence. They set his attitude down as sure indication of trouble to come, and I have found impatience among them at what they regard as missionary blindness or indifference to this coming trouble.

To be sure, when you take up this matter with Congress leaders they immediately point to Nehru's promises of complete religious liberty in the coming independent nation as sufficient to allay all Christian apprehensions. But there are many kinds of religious liberty in the world today. Searle Bates made that clear in his monumental volume, and if there were any doubts left as to the ambiguity of the term it should be enough to remember that both Spain and Russia claim to have religious freedom. Already, long before the assembling of the first legislature of an independent India, public agitation is under way for numbers of laws governing the conduct of missions and churches which, if enacted, would certainly produce a revolutionary change in the character of the Christian movement in this land.

Nor does all this agitation come from non-Christian sources. A convention of Indian Christians which met in the Punjab last week petitioned the Christian members of the Punjab delegation to the Constituent Assembly to work for a constitutional prohibition against the entrance of any more missionaries into India. Other Christian members of the Constituent Assembly have declared that they favor prohibition of all missionaries except those engaged in certain specialized forms of social service. There is considerable agitation in favor of prohibiting the use of foreign funds to support religious work, or at any rate evangelistic work. Among Indian Christians who would not go this far there is a rising sentiment in favor of laws or regulations which would require that all such foreign funds shall be under the control of Indians after they reach India. There is also agitation to require that all colleges, schools and other institutions supported by the Christian enterprise shall be Indian administered. And there is widespread discussion in favor of legal prohibition of conversions to Christianity, or at least of prohibition of mass conversions.

None of these proposals may be enacted. But the point is that all of them are being seriously and even powerfully agitated, and in a situation such as this you simply cannot tell what is coming. India is yeasty with the ferment of its approaching freedom. At a time when the patriotic dreams of years are on the point of realization it is natural that the general mood of the articulate population should be, "Behold, I make all things new." And as a minority movement, closely tied in the past to the foreign imperial power, Christianity must expect to be faced by all sorts of proposals for a new ordering of its life. At least one mission has already advised its home board not to make any new appropriations for capital plant or for sending out new missionaries until the situation has become more stabilized.

It is almost painful to see the distress of many missionaries at this turn of events. One of the best, a firm friend of Indian freedom, who has just returned from several years in the States, said to me, "I have come back to an India totally different from the one I have known; I am finding it very hard to discover my place in it." Most of the missionaries who are here now regard themselves as sympathetic to nationalist aspirations, but as this agitation for restrictions on missionary activities mounts they seem to be asking in a bewildered and resentful state of mind, "What have we ever done to deserve such treatment?" Naturally, they feel that the faithful service they have rendered toward the uplift of the Indian masses during the years past deserves more recognition. This recognition they get from the individuals with whom they are in personal contact. But they are not getting it from the newly independent nation as a whole. And the evidence of this popular distrust embitters them.

Yet it must be admitted that the missions must accept much of the blame for this anti-missionary agitation. Acknowledging the many exceptions, it is still not unfair to say that the missions in general have largely failed to give any convincing evidence of genuine enthusiasm for the nationalist cause. They have done little or nothing to register their opposition to the British imperialistic policy which found expression in the notorious Memorandums A, B and C—the so-called "missionary pledge." They have given little evidence of concern over the implications of their receiving tax support from the British administration, and a good many missionaries are still suspected of believing that British rule has been a providential way of opening the path for the advance of the gospel. I asked one Indian Christian leader—probably the outstanding Indian Christian leader in the country at present—whether Indian public opinion in general still regards the missionaries as British stooges, and he answered without qualification or hesitation, "Yes."

This failure to dissociate the missionary enterprise from the interests of the imperial power must not be held against the missions or the missionaries alone. Their boards, and the International Missionary Council, have given them no determined lead in the direction of dissociation. When the I.M.C. adjourned its Geneva meeting a few months ago without taking a clear-cut stand against the missionary pledge it tossed away the last chance to convince India that Christian missions are per se anti-imperialist. Anything which the I.M.C. or other missionary bodies may now do to repudiate the implications of that pledge—which is a dead letter from the moment of the realization of Indian independence—will be just another case of "too little and too late." But it will be the devoted men and women who are working here on the spot who will catch the brunt of the nationalist indignation.

As I have said, in a situation like this there is just no telling, at this transitional juncture, what is going to happen to the missions and missionaries. My own guess is that, when the newly freed Indians have blown off enough steam, they will settle down to enacting very few legal restrictions. They may easily enact none at all. Independent India may turn out to be as free a field for Christian missionary effort as any in the world. Present radical talk may produce little more than talk. But even this talk has great importance for the Christian future.

Certainly no one, whether Indian Christian or missionary, doubts that great changes must come and are coming in the Indian church. The process of Indianization will speed up from this point on. Either that, or the church will rapidly lose what prestige and influence it now has. Apparently the Roman Catholics see this more clearly than the Protestants, for they are pushing Indianization at a much more rapid pace. Only last month they consecrated an Indian as the auxiliary bishop of Bombay, with the announcement that he will become the archbishop of that vital area next year. The Roman Catholic hierarchy is now almost entirely made up of Indians, and their institutions are almost entirely under Indian direction. Protestant churches have begun to move in the same direction, but compared with Catholic progress they give the impression of hesitation and delay. This land is no place these days for either of those qualities.

And now let me add a footnote on a subject which I know is of great interest to many American supporters of the missionary cause. What about the mass movements? Are these great shiftings of whole communities of outcastes and underprivileged into the Christian community continuing? Except in a few small regions in south India, the answer is No. But one of the most interesting facts I have uncovered while here is that Dr. Ambedkar, the leader of the untouchables whose influence is strong in the west and central portions of the country, is now talking about the possibility of an untouchable mass movement to Islam. "Why take a short step into a Christian community where social distinctions persist?" he is reported to have asked. "Why not go all the way into a Moslem community where there is real equality for all?" This suggestion may or may not develop into a movement of real importance; there are reports from the south that it is beginning to get under way there. But the very fact that the proposal is "in the air" here gives one something to think about.

Prayer for the Nations

NOW, in the doorway standing;
Now, with strange light of new sun on our faces:
The old path lost in dust; the corner sharply turned;
Standing now, timid, with loud voices,
Timid, in long words:
Lord, we beseech thee — a sign.
Grant in this day of our need
The Christ before us, shining still
As when we set our backs and came this way.

MARJORIE FARMER.

I Lost an Alarm Clock

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

SIR: I have been compelled to answer the question, "Why do people, you among them, lose things?" Yesterday, or the greater part of it, I spent and all the people in the hotel spent looking for my spectacles; and a gloom gathered on the hostelry where I was staying. All rallied to the search. It was generally understood that the old gentleman was dependent on his glasses, and there was no oculist near, and his own was far away, and he was a man of letters. What a blow! But at last they were found in the telephone box—the first place in which I should have looked—and a sigh of relief swept over the friendly hotel.

Then I asked myself why I ever lose things; and after considering profoundly many of the other reasons I lighted on one, which can be illustrated from the incredible but true fact that I once lost an alarm clock, one of the kind which waken you in the early morning, a little loved but real friend of mankind.

I had bought a new clock with an alarm strong and brazen. I put it above me in the train. A little unexpectedly the train pulled up at my station. Eager for the next move in my busy life I clutched my coat and umbrella and jumped out upon the platform on half-speed. The train started, and with it went the clock.

It was little good sending word along the line. That clock was in the hands of some man or woman who regarded it no doubt as treasure waiting, something of which it could be said, "The very thing our household needs!"

I was angry at the perfidy of my kind. I wished I had wound the clock up and set the alarm. Then perhaps as the villain walked down his Main Street it might have gone off, and a subtle cop might have explored the mystery. Then would the larcenous being have been detected, arrested, and fined. But I had not had the forethought to wind it up, and the thief got off with my clock of which my family were in serious need; and his children no doubt still wake to its strains.

But why did I lose it? Clearly because of my failure to finish the present enterprise before beginning the next. I should have looked around before leaving the train and starting a new action. I would not in that case have left the railway journey unfinished. Undue haste to get on with the next thing makes us lose very many things, not least of them umbrellas. The wise man takes his time about his doings. He finishes one scene before he begins another.

Tidy men I imagine who have an ordered life seldom if ever lose things. Those of us who praise tidiness and practice it not know all about this wisdom. But the same haste to get at the next thing which makes their rooms filled with books not put back or ties sprinkled here and there or clothes left in shocking confusion, is what also causes them to leave things behind them everywhere, to the despair of their families and the comfort of such as manufacture umbrellas, spectacles and even lowly alarm clocks.

Ever yours regretfully,

QUINTUS QUIZ.

Labor Unions and Churches

By Broadus Mitchell

CHURCH members in the United States number 60,000,000, of whom 50,000,000 are adults. Labor union members total 15,000,000, of whom practically all are adults. The proportion of union members who are church members is not known, but it is large. I venture to say that clergymen and other church leaders have not sufficiently utilized the strength of their union members for good in the labor movement, just as labor leaders have not employed the influence of their church members to advance the highest objects of organized religion.

Let me remark in passing that I have never seen anything in one criticism of preachers which unions sometimes make—that when pastors champion the cause of organized labor they are trying to fill their pews. Filling the pews is a legitimate first step in the common progress which men of good will want. To the extent that a labor union does not draw in dues-paying members from its constituency it is weak and may be positively dangerous because its policies are not molded by a representative membership. There must be members before there can be a movement, whether of organized religion or of organized workers. The beginning of unionism is in securing members, and the same must be true of the church.

Their Common Aims

Unions and churches not only have members in common; they also have professions and, I hope, aims in common. Both unions and churches nourish social idealism. They offer their organizations as means toward human happiness and justice. The appeal in both cases is ethical. In labor movement and church alike the ethical purpose is forwarded by a mystical element—call it emotional loyalty or uncalculating self-forgetfulness. Each attachment, to religion or to labor—if I may separate them—when at its best engenders a deep and stirring belief which is capable of making martyrs.

Churches and unions have an abundance of other similarities. Both must plead for members, must be constantly organizing. Both are predominantly voluntary associations. Neither, however, is without an element of coercion. I readily agree that in the unions, once they are formed and grown to strength, coercion of the individual to join and maintain membership is sharper than with the churches. A closed shop with a closed union avoids coercion only by practicing discrimination against non-members. There are reasons which can be offered for this practice, but the fact is as stated. A union shop as distinguished from a closed shop removes coercion a distance and delays it. In this instance a worker may enter on employment without difficulty, but once settled in the job he must join the union. Here again there are good reasons for the compulsion, though I do not stop to spell them out.

In churches the coercion is vaguer, but it is present in several forms. The non-member may be threatened with spiritual disinheritance, sometimes by episcopal authority. If the church membership is relatively large in a community which is more or less isolated or self-contained, the non-member may be made to feel uncomfortable because peculiar. This may go farther in situations where church membership, like union membership, is not unconnected with economic opportunity. Be it remembered that the pressures which unions bring to bear on non-members are not all of the intensely practical sort related to jobs. The unions often try to make the indifferent ones feel like "spiritual scabs."

Both Need Good Management

Besides these similarities in the realm of aim and method, unions and churches have the same purely institutional problems of financial support, provision and maintenance of meeting places, upkeep of publications, educational, medical, and relief work, and choice and training of leaders and staff assistants. All these facilities are necessary to the purposes of both churches and unions, but in their management often lies the difference between wisdom and the reverse. And contrary to frequent supposition unions are no less in need of good business management than are churches.

The labor unions lack unity. Their division into rival factions, while beneficial in some respects, is on the whole harmful. We are familiar with jurisdictional disputes, which sometimes have no better cause than contests between vested interests. There are wider splits between great branches of the labor movement, each claiming the right to a control which the other exercises. Each party in this division accumulates an arsenal of defense and offense, material and ideological. Each claims to be the true allegiance—one on the basis of history and power, another by right of dissent. Each has its officialdom which, in unmistakable ways, uses discipline and makes appeals with the purpose of preserving its selfish authority. American labor's present division into Congress of Industrial Organizations and American Federation of Labor—to leave aside railroad brotherhoods and other independents—does more harm than good.

Alike in Disunion

Some of the original reasons for disunion, once pertinent, are no longer present, or not to the same degree. The rivals have grown alike in all but rivalry, and rivalry has been intensified by the very process of growth. The struggle between A.F. of L. and C.I.O. causes social waste, and not only weakens unions nationally but threatens to thwart international labor cooperation. The A.F. of L. was a member of the International Federation of Trade Unions, now dissolved in the formation of the World Federation of Trade Unions. The C.I.O. is a leading force in the W.F.T.U., but the A.F. of L. stands aloof and, at a time when labor hopes to share in world decisions, has no international affiliation. One cannot bemoan too loudly the jealousies in the labor movement and their disruptive effects.

In the same way, nothing is more familiar than sectarianism in religion and the loss of power through friction. As in the case of unions, there are certain credits on the side of sectarianism, but they are minor compared with the injuries. The contests between churches, denominations and faiths—whether local, regional, national or on a world scale—become invested with irrelevant features which play a persistent part in preventing combined effort. Dogma is substituted for belief; moral purpose is watered down to a form of words; a campaign against the forces of evil degenerates into a mere tactical maneuver in a civil war. A particularly unworthy element in these church struggles is official claims. Fear of loss of position and power disguises itself as generous solicitude. Pride which has its uses moves over into prejudice which has no excuse. There is no need to enlarge on this theme. In organized religion as in organized labor some men, mighty in their meekness, move between the factions. They are willing to preserve differences which contribute to the common aim, but they plead for the dropping of rivalries which prevent religion and labor from playing their creative parts.

The Factor of Communism

Doctrinal and sacramentarian distinctions between churches are not my field, and I do not presume to say how they may be reconciled or even if they ought to be. But on current doctrinal differences in the labor movement I do have an opinion. The chief of these differences cluster, at this time, about communism as variously interpreted—communism sometimes genuine and sometimes fictional. Many men for whose intelligence and sincerity I have regard act on the principle of smiting communism, or whatever is called communism, hip and thigh, to the forgetfulness of pretty much all else. My notion is that this behavior is mistaken.

The issue is real enough. Communism, accurately understood, offers a different solution for poverty and war from that put forward by most other economic faiths. It has its own political and cultural implications. At many points it is in collision with majority American beliefs. Communism is no passing social malaise. It claims the loyalty of the populous Russian nation. With changing complexion it has persisted through remarkable trials of misgovernment, ignorance, civil strife, isolation, starvation, and supreme effort in world conflict. It is dynamic, modern; it calls science to the aid of social design. It extends itself politically, territorially, economically. Disdain for communism as a faith and a practice is out of the question. Lofty reproach gets no different result. Blind antagonism is ignorant and invites a new world war. The only course for reasoning men on both sides is earnest and open-eyed effort to acknowledge the vital forces and determine that each shall yield enough to permit a partnership. This is easier said than done. But the penalty of not doing it is a great deal of human misery, and soon.

We need to check the hatred which calls an antagonistic movement heresy. We must hold judgment in suspension long enough for calm examination and unremitting effort at mutual understanding. The A.F. of L. damns the Soviets and will not sit down with representatives of their workers. In the relatively minor instance of the rising C.I.O., the A.F. of L. adopted the same tactic of scornful summary rejection. The C.I.O. was not the product of the reckless ambition of one man; it was not an accidental abomination to be stamped under foot. It had reasons for existence running back into history. It was recommended by serious neglects in the old labor movement, and was invited by the needs and hopes of millions of workers which remained unfulfilled. The career of the C.I.O. has shown that it is something vastly different from a mere manifestation of wickedness. One ventures to think that the progress of the Soviet Union, on an incomparably greater scale, is similarly grounded in sense instead of sin. The C.I.O., if I may judge, perceives this and follows a policy seeking intelligent accommodation.

How Achieve Democracy?

It is complained that the labor unions suffer from bureaucracy. The charge has much validity. In all large organizations there is the problem of combining democracy and authority. The executive has to take decisions, and these do not always interpret the intentions of the membership, if indeed those intentions are clearly defined. Some labor unions do not hold conventions regularly or frequently enough, and their chief officers manage to give themselves a permanence of control which is not justifiable. Government, business and professional associations are similarly plagued. The church, I dare say, is not immune.

Both churches and unions have the duty of training leaders. In organized religion training methods are better perfected than in organized labor. The union with which I am connected has courses for members who want to offer for elective office. They must be acquainted with labor history, the record and constitution of this union, the elements of union accounting and the orderly conduct of a union meeting. Of course creation of a "priesthood," in the bad sense, ought to be avoided whether in church or labor union. The evangel who cries out in a wilderness may be destined to call many. He should not be excluded by any system of leadership training, however good it may be for the average aspirant. Hedgerow preacher and curbstone unionist may bring fresh ardor to old tasks. The problem in church and in union is to incorporate the vigor of the volunteer with the responsibility of the regular.

Relation to Politics

Both labor and religion are confronted with the question of participation in politics. One school in the unions protests that once the field of economic action is overstepped there is a weakening of legitimate effort. In the churches also many deplore the departure of ministers and their congregations from the altar to give lessons to the market place. The advice that politics be shunned is in both instances sometimes disingenuous, being offered by persons who have their own motives for confining both labor and religious awareness and action. The fact is that through radio and stratoplane, war, trade and credit our world has shrunk from a large globe to the circumference of a marble. By the same sign, social efforts cannot be partitioned as they once were. One aspect of public conduct crowds upon another, demanding simultaneous treatment. I will not say in what directions organizations devoted to fundamentals like labor and religious welfare should extend themselves, but extend they must unless they want to become contracted and artificial.

Some people in the churches say that the unions are too much concerned with material gain for themselves and neglect obligations which are important to society at large. In its crudest form this becomes a criticism of labor leaders, particularly organizers, as worldly, unmoral or immoral persons who live loosely on the hard earnings of their followers. Similarly, some people in the labor movement say that the church promises "pie in the sky" and is too little employed in bringing justice on earth. Clergymen have not escaped the charge of being parasites. The truth is that most union leaders believe that what they are doing contributes indispensably to social benefit and to spiritual vitality, and most churchmen are eager to apply morality to the relations of workers and employers. Church and labor union alike embody the tensions of the times. As each tries to lessen these tensions, each will discover that it has a great deal to contribute to the efforts of the other.

Dry Up Liquor Profits!

By Charles R. Bell, Jr.

IF THE PRESENT trend continues, we may expect national prohibition to become an issue again within the next ten or fifteen years. Already approximately one-third of the counties in the United States are dry and in many states strong dry organizations are again at work. In a recent referendum in Alabama, for example, two of the most populous counties voted dry. Most of the political campaigns in the near future in that state will have the question of prohibition brought in and there is an excellent chance for Alabama to enter the dry column soon. In many other states, the same trend is evident.

This, of course, is a development similar to that which preceded enactment of national prohibition a generation ago. The fight in those days centered around local option campaigns, church crusades and state elections until sufficient sentiment had been created for an amendment on a national scale. The eighteenth amendment was passed state by state until the necessary thirty-six states had ratified it. Ratification came through that gradual process and not, as opponents of prohibition contended, as a trick hastily put across while the American soldiers were in France. Prohibition was a grass roots movement. It represented at the time of its passage the overwhelming majority in the United States.

I

That same kind of movement is now gathering force again. The same kind of people are behind it. The same bitter experience with alcohol, the tavern keeper and crime are prompting the church people and other temperance minded folk to attack liquor and the evils which inevitably attend it. And the attack is succeeding because the people of the country are again being given a cruel lesson by the liquor interests themselves. So clearly the time has come for the church to examine these developments now assuming such large proportions and to decide whether it should make prohibition its cause once again or whether it should seek some new policy as an answer to national intemperance.

The church must begin its search for a more workable temperance policy with the fact that its former effort, namely national prohibition, failed. Why it failed is a debatable question, but that it did fail none can deny. Of course a great social experiment need not stop because of one failure. It is possible that national prohibition could be made to work a second time where it was not successful on the first try. But even the staunchest prohibitionist would be forced to admit that the same forces which destroyed the eighteenth amendment would be just as likely a second time to undo another amendment embodying the same principle. Also the dry forces are not united this time concerning the wisdom of a second attempt at prohibition. These considerations lead us to ask if there is not another and better temperance policy, which would give more adequate expression to the genius of the church in social reform, and which would at the same time bring about the ends desired.

II

Whatever else was wrong with the prohibition laws, they had two fundamental defects which ultimately contributed to their repeal. So far as the church was concerned, prohibition placed Christian social righteousness in a role of doubtful character. It gave the church the character of an enforcer rather than a teacher of morality. But it is certainly safe to say that the church eventually found the role of a moral policeman a distasteful one. At times it was obviously corrupting. Further attempts, therefore, to frame temperance laws should be made in such a way as to place the church in its highest and right relationship with the issue.

In the second place, prohibition treated the problem of alcohol as a simple one, a position no longer supported by scientist or moralist. Alcohol was defined as an evil. It should, therefore, be treated as a pariah and be outlawed. That was exactly what the eighteenth amendment did. On the other hand prohibition did not eliminate satisfactorily perhaps the most important support for intemperance, namely the profit motive. Most of the opposition to the amendment began around that point. Bootleggers broke the law and found it profitable. The campaign against prohibition was financed by large financial interests anticipating huge revenues after repeal. They used as bait the claim that the public would profit through reduction of taxes, a claim that has not been fulfilled. Much was said in these campaigns about abridgment of personal liberty but, as everyone knows, the people who did most of the talking along this line suffered the least. The deeper motive was money. In charting a new course for temperance this should be kept in mind. Some means must be devised to take the profit out of the manufacture and sale of all beverage alcohol.

III

How can this be done? My opinion is that it must be attempted through public competition with the profit-making liquor business. As a first step in this direction church and temperance leaders should work for federal manufacture and sale at cost of alcoholic beverages. It should be noted carefully, I have not said government monopoly. Government monopoly would invite much the same criticism that destroyed prohibition. There would be the same ridicule of enforcement and the same violations. Government monopoly would end in defeat as did national prohibition. But government entrance into the field without benefit of monopoly would be an entirely different proposition.

An excellent case in point is the TVA where this technique has been used with marked success. When the United States government established the TVA it made no attempts to monopolize. The power companies operating in that region were allowed to go on with business as usual. No laws were passed outlawing private power companies. All of this, too, in a region where private monopoly was strong and well intrenched and in states where social controls and public ownership were weak. The government merely set up its plants and began delivering a better product at a better price. The power companies attempted by every means to discredit the new experiment. It seemed that the rural southerner, with his regional suspicion of all isms, should have been receptive to such propaganda. But the campaign against TVA never took root. The government did an efficient job. There was no corruption or bribery because there were no laws to break, hence no reason for corrupting officers. The opposition of the utility companies, which was bitter and vitriolic, fell on unsympathetic ears because the public was satisfied. Today the TVA is firmly established.

Were the national government to enter the field of manufacture and sale of beverage alcohol, much the same procedure should be followed. No attempts to regulate distilling and brewing by law should be made, beyond the laws now in force. The tax rates which now exist on liquor and other luxury commodities could be maintained, thus undercutting the tax argument for repeal. The government would not find it necessary to employ large numbers of officers to enforce the new law. The only legal sanctions against consumption of liquor would be related to conduct. Drunken driving, for example, would be against the law, as it is today.

Under such a system an increase of drinking might occur for a limited time. But consumption would soon decline and go far below present high levels. In the first place, alcohol's chief ally would have been conquered. It would now be no longer profitable for private industry to make alcoholic beverages. The brewer and distiller would find the consumer market gravitating naturally toward the better and cheaper product, as the power companies found it doing in the south. One important point of difference exists here which should be emphasized. Though the financial interests instigating the opposition to prohibition were motivated by their desire to make money, they aroused public support by making people believe prohibition had failed and by securing the help of the man who wanted to drink. Their motive was from one direction; their public support from another. Under the plan outlined it would not be possible, I believe, to create such disaffection on the public's part. If I am right in this assumption, then the main support for intemperance on the scale we now know it would be permanently broken.

A second great ally of intemperance would be eliminated. The tempting advertisements and radio programs endorsing whiskey or wine or beer would cease. It would not be necessary to pass laws regulating liquor advertising. The matter would adjust itself, because it would no longer be profitable to advertise. This would remove a source of pressure and allurement which can hardly be overestimated. One reason temperance education does not go further is because it faces an endless counter-propaganda. Also newspapers and magazines which might speak out more fearlessly dare not do so when profitable advertising is at stake.

IV

A third gain would be achieved by such a program. Those of us who want a dry nation may not have believed there was much to be gained by securing the support of those who differed with us about the use of alcohol. But the time has now come when the whole question of temperance laws must be worked out with those who differ. The nation is too evenly divided for either group to attempt settlement of the problem without consideration of the other. Within the framework of such a policy no real grounds for opposition exist on the part of the man who does use alcohol but uses it moderately and who wishes to have a law-abiding community. This is not a plea for "moderate drinking," in which I do not believe. But it is to recognize that a considerable body of people whom the churches do not take into account have a very valuable role to play in laying the foundation for some agreement that will lead to lasting temperance.

With these three things accomplished the temperance forces, especially those within the church, would be ready to face the evil of alcohol for what it really is, namely a disease, a bad habit, an escape mechanism and a sin. Public health education could be carried on regarding alcohol's damage without the constant reminder that certain hostesses serve this beverage or that social prestige requires a certain liquor. Pressure on school boards and motion picture producers would cease. Modern textbooks could treat the matter objectively. The temperance campaigns would not be mixed with lobbying activities which often placed the church in a wrong light.

This approach would not bring temperance, as I have pointed out, at once. But it would provide the legal framework within which the spirit and genius of the church could function most effectively and by which the nation could eventually be led to lasting temperance.

We Grew Up Overseas

By Burton Moore

SIX MONTHS is time enough to train a combat division—a good division. We trained in six months and we were good. Our chaplains were good, too. Father Kelly was a sort of religious common denominator during the terrible days of early 1945 in Germany, and his Protestant counterpart, Chaplain Adcock, dispensed hope and courage along with the Red Cross bags.

Easter morning on the Rhine saw cannoneers, cooks and observers stacking their arms in the anteroom of a shell-smashed chapel and entering to pay tribute to a faith triumphant in the very midst of war. It was that way throughout our two months of action. To Catholic and Protestant alike, the faith that we all had known since childhood became new and vivid. We needed a central loyalty and the Christian ideal satisfied that need. "Patriotism" to most of us was only the residue of half-digested Fourth of July speeches, and the "war against fascism" an intellectual ideal held by a small minority.

Apathy after Battle

In Bavaria we had our first taste of occupational duty. There was little to do during after-duty hours, and practically nothing on Sundays. We were living as a complete unit for the first time in months, but the same men who had walked or driven miles over shell-torn roads seemed unable to walk two blocks to Protestant or Catholic meeting-places. The chaplains once again had time to prepare sermons, but their words echoed in empty halls. The short inspirational sentences spoken to us during a convoy halt seemed of more value than a carefully prepared sermon preached to the same men in garrison. Somewhere between V-E Day and Bavaria we had lost something. The Christian faith was real and indispensable during combat, but it seemed too ethereal, too abstract, for a kind of life that held no extraordinary dangers. Something priceless in battle was too weak to live by.

Months later, when we returned home to everyday life, we found that the same subtle alchemy had taken place. The churches at home seemed to have nothing to offer us, nothing to help us recapture the sublime faith that had been our solace and strength when the battle roared around us and death seemed suddenly certain.

Is Faith Only for Crises?

Does the Christian ideal of brotherhood have validity only in peril? Generally a creed is found satisfactory in everyday life and wanting in moments of crisis. But surely the faith that has great appeal during battle, when men's bodies and souls are strained to the utmost, possesses workable tenets. Surely these principles must be fundamental in human life.

Of course, it is very hard to define one's faith, and harder still to point out how an institution is failing to aid and strengthen it. But there are certain respects in which the shortcomings of the church at home are so obvious that we feel it is not even trying to help.

Those of us who lived in daily expectation of the worst were impressed with the idea that faith in God is something workable and positive. Back home we find that religion is a matter of "thou shalt not," an everlasting attempt to discipline our lives into patterns of moral behavior. However badly we may need guidance in this respect, it is not a positive central loyalty capable of picking up all the loose ends and giving direction and meaning to our lives. We want a clear definition of the ends, of objectives. When the church gives us these, the means will be of secondary difficulty. We are not afraid of ultimates. Overseas we dealt daily in ultimates. Few of us have patience with sermons which assume that first principles of faith and living are beyond our understanding.

We are tired of being regarded as misfits in the organizational scheme of the church. Many of us are in that fluid world between early college and a definite vocation. We cannot fit into the church's youth groups; they are high-schoolish and preoccupied with such third-rate concretions of the Christian spirit as missionary endeavor, "how to develop a Christian personality and still be popular," or the care and feeding of adolescents at church picnics. Not through any fault of their own, few of these youngsters have been introduced to the basic problems of remaining alive and keeping hope when there is no hope. A first-rate artillery duel soon reduces a man's faith to first principles.

Younger married groups interest us more, but too often their meetings and conversation merely reflect sermons delivered earlier in the week by a pastor whose main wartime problem was lack of attendance or the difficulty of getting enough roofing material to cover the main chapel. We veterans represent a church minority, and the average minister's tendency is to regard us as problem children whose big trouble is getting into line with the rest of the congregation. Getting into line will take a long time for most of us, and meanwhile we will become even more of a minority.

We grew up overseas. We have graduated from the college-group problems. Some of us are old men in experience. It is more than annoying to be talked down to like the boys we were three or four years ago. So far as most elders and ministers are concerned, we are still names on the service plaque in the foyer, to be buried in the Sunday evening discussions on "Christianity and the happy marriage."

A minister at my neighborhood church observed recently that the individual members of his congregation found comfort in Christ whenever a basic issue is involved. As a rule, a basic issue is something to be alluded to only lightly among young people. Apparently the youth groups, to which it is taken for granted we belong, are organized according to this principle. We are not expected to think seriously. "Practical illustrations" and "Christianity in action" are stressed to the almost total exclusion of Christianity's foundations. The questioner is regarded with amused tolerance.

The same minister apparently reserves the basic issues for discussion in his study. At any rate, he presents them on Sunday morning only in highly rarefied form. His sermons are merely expanded parables vaguely illustrating an idea and spiced with amusing anecdotes—as though the congregation were unable to deal with the points unless they are diluted by funny stories. That is the kind of thing we are up against.

The current revival of fundamentalism should be no puzzle to American church leaders. All too often the veteran is faced with a clear three-way choice between fundamentalism, complete negativism, and the half-hearted trivialities of a youth group. As he sees it, fundamentalism at least tries to answer some of the basic questions.

We have learned the hard way that the ideals of the Christian religion are eminently workable. We have seen them working under the most impossible circumstances. But we prefer to believe that it is not necessary for young men to slaughter and be slaughtered on a large scale in order to discover a living Christianity. It is said that the church embodies these principles of faith and hope and fellowship, and presumably the minister is the man best qualified to point them out. If he and his spiritual assistant, the congregation, cannot do this the only conclusion we veterans can draw is that faith, hope and fellowship are the fruit of large-scale death. Can the church supply the vital impulse for fellowship in everyday life?

BOOKS

A Behavioristic Theology

THE SOURCE OF HUMAN GOOD. By Henry Nelson Wieman. University of Chicago Press, $3.50.

THIS BOOK presents a theory of value and offers itself as a contribution to religion in general and to the Christian faith in particular. I shall confine this review to a consideration of its bearing upon the Christian faith. My conclusion may be stated at the outset. The effect of Professor Wieman's thesis is to drain off the substance of Christianity and leave it a hollow unreality. The governing idea upon which the book is constructed is, in my judgment, wrong and, if accepted, would devitalize the Christian faith.

The source of all human good, says Mr. Wieman, is a process—a creative process which is everywhere and always going on in nature. This process has its own "structure," and can therefore be cognitively apprehended as any other structure of reality can be known. That is to say, knowledge of the creative process does not rest upon faith or upon speculative reflection, but upon empirical evidence, the same kind of evidence which yields all scientific knowledge and the knowledge of common sense. Upon this process man depends for all the goods and values of life. It is, therefore, neither necessary nor reasonable to look beyond this process for God—the process itself is God.

Mr. Wieman rejects the fundamental Christian conception of God as the Creator of the world and of man. In place of the Creator—a word for which he has no use—he puts "creativity," an abstract idea which refers to the creative process. Creativity is God. The creative process, however, must be distinguished from all the goods which it has created. These created goods—family, friendship, school, an ordered society, the nation, the United Nations, peace, art, knowledge—name any good thing you will—all must be held subject to change by the creative process which alone should command man's highest devotion.

Man, Mr. Wieman rightly holds, does not create these or any other goods. His function is not creative but cooperative with the creative process. He cooperates by removing obstacles from its path and by setting up conditions favorable for its operation. In this interaction of man with his environing world of nature, of history, of economic order, of political and cultural institutions, and particularly with other persons, new values emerge which enrich and deepen and expand the meaning of man's life. Also the opposite occurs—man's life may be shrunk and debased in this interaction with his environing world. Whether it shall be one or the other, Mr. Wieman continues, depends upon whether or not man cooperates with the creative process or obstructs it. He can obstruct it by giving to any particular created good the devotion which belongs alone to the creative process. When this happens, the created good becomes demonic.

The author applies his thesis in two directions. First, to the philosophy of pragmatistic naturalism which has attained wide vogue in modern culture; and second, to the Christian faith. In the first of these applications he is indisputably effective. In the second, his procedure, if followed, would be disastrous. Mr. Wieman challenges the prevailing naturalism at the point where this philosophy maintains that man himself is the creator of values, that all the goods of his world are really the constructs of human intelligence and effort in the pursuit of human ideals. According to this anti-theistic philosophy, nature presents man with only the raw materials, so to speak, out of which the goods of life are brought into existence by human effort, without the aid of any power in nature. This view goes, generally, by the name of "humanism."

Wieman's thesis challenges this doctrine and, I believe, effectively exposes its absurdity. This he does in the name of naturalism, for he, too, calls his philosophy by that name. But he finds in nature an other-than-human factor, the creative process, upon which man depends for the realization of all true values. Wieman's naturalism is thus sharply distinguished from the prevailing humanistic naturalism that stems chiefly from the teachings of John Dewey.

When, however, Mr. Wieman turns to apply his form of naturalism to the Christian faith, its utter inadequacy appears. He refuses to look beyond man's immediate experience of the creative process for any explanation of the presence of this process in nature. He takes the creative process as the ultimate and absolute reality with which man has to do, and contends that, so taken, it supports all the values belonging to true religion. On this ground, he calls this process God. Man is not only to cooperate with it and serve it, but to worship it! Thus his thesis comes into direct conflict with the most fundamental conviction of the Christian faith.

Mr. Wieman adopts a cushioning procedure designed to break the shock with which the Christian mind will react to his claim that in the creative process the essential reality of the Christian God is fully represented. But the conflict cannot be concealed in the cushion. It may be concealed from those who are blinded with gratitude to him for their release from the subjectivism of humanistic naturalism. But when the implications of his thesis as applied to religion are fairly understood, it will be regarded by the Christian believer as nothing short of a new form of idolatry.

The cushion used in Mr. Wieman's procedure is to cast the whole Christian ideology into the category of myth and to take this mythology over into his system, not as truth, but as a kind of substitute for truth or a poetic supplementation of truth. The only truth relevant to religion, he claims, is the existence of the creative process, together with the practical means for cooperating with it. But Wieman concedes that religion needs a mythology with which to clothe this naked activity with the warmth and beauty that will evoke man's ardent devotion. And the creative process itself provides such a mythology. In Christianity, this mythology is the story of the events centering in Jesus Christ, including the ideology with which these events are understood by the Christian community. But the community mistakenly believes that its mythology is true; it must therefore be taught to distinguish its mythology from the real truth which is the existence and functioning of the creative process.

In this mythology, Mr. Wieman includes the Christian belief in God as the Creator who transcends all his works and deals with man at the level of a mutual personal relationship. As personal and transcendent, Christian faith holds that God is the ultimate Source of all human good and the supreme Object of adoration, love and worship. Mr. Wieman rejects this belief as truth, while holding it as myth. He has tried, he says, "to show the mythical nature of two deep-laid Christian teachings—the transcendental status and the personal character of God." He then proceeds to "demonstrate that the creative event [another term for "creative process"] is the actual reality doing the work in history which has been mythically attributed in the Christian tradition to a transcendental person, even though the real source of human good is neither transcendental nor a person."

The method of reasoning which has issued in this thesis is not new, though its application to theology is, so far as I know, original with Mr. Wieman. The method itself represents a pit into which human thinking tends to fall from time to time. One such instance occurred at the close of the last century, in connection with the emergence of the scientific doctrine of evolution. This doctrine was seized upon by many representatives of science as the final emancipation of the human mind from the delusion of a divine Creator. Evolution was put forward to take the place of God, as Mr. Wieman now brings forward "creativity" for the same purpose.

Evolution, it was said, is the real creator of the world, and God is not only not necessary, he is a myth and a nuisance. Man was, in effect, asked to worship Evolution, just as, now, Mr. Wieman explicitly asks him to worship Creativity. The Christian mind was profoundly shocked by this suggestion. It saw at first no way out but blindly to deny evolution and the facts which the scienists had gathered in support of it. In less than a generation, however, evolution found its true place as nothing more than a description of the way, the method, in which God, the Creator, carries on his creative work. It will require far less time for Mr. Wieman's "creativity" to take its place beside "evolution" as nothing more than an abstraction of God's activity from the creative Agent whose activity this creative process is.

Another instance of falling into the same pit, and one more closely related to Mr. Wieman's case, is found in the now pretty well discredited but still widely current behavioristic psychology. We shall understand the thesis of this book if we see it as the same fallacious reasoning applied to God which the behaviorists apply to man. Despite the author's rejection of humanistic naturalism, his so-called "theistic" naturalism is only an extension into another field of the psychologism which gave us the preposterous doctrine that man is only a behavior process. Mr. Wieman does to God what behaviorist psychology does to man. This is the true setting in which to see the thesis of this book.

The behaviorists refuse to take man as an entity, a being, a person, but reduce him to his functions, his activities, his behavior. Man, for them, is a process. His being, his person, is dissolved in this process. This understanding of man has had a wide vogue and still persists. A witty comment upon it said that "psychology first lost its soul; then it lost its mind; now it has lost consciousness."

Professor Wieman's "theology" is of a piece with this behavioristic psychology. He deals with God precisely as the behaviorists deal with man. He discovers in nature a certain form of behavior which is creative in its operation, and erects this behavior process into a metaphysic in total rejection of any being or entity whose activity this is. Wieman's theology is thus a behavioristic theology. It is to be judged in the same court in which the foolish claim on behalf of evolution has already been judged and in which the psychologism of the behaviorists is being widely held guilty as one of the major causes of the intellectual and moral bankruptcy of modern culture.

I venture with some literary misgiving to state the matter in a very crude way. Behavioristic psychology cuts off man's head—his manhood—and leaves him only a truncated body of behavior activities. Mr. Wieman cuts off God's head—his Godhead—and gives us a truncated God which is only a behavior process of creative activity. The discredit which Christian faith attaches to the behaviorist treatment of man must apply also to Mr. Wieman's treatment of God. As the behaviorist mistakes the behavior of man for man himself, so Wieman mistakes the behavior of God for God. Sound reflection as well as Christian faith can hardly disclaim the Godhead of God while retaining the manhood of man.

Mr. Wieman affirms the oft-repeated but slippery cliché that his God, the creative process, is "more than personal." This, however, is a sheer verbalism. It means nothing at all. The problem of God's transcendence and of personality when applied to God may, indeed, be argued endlessly. But the issue can be defined more simply. It comes down to this: Does God know what he is doing? If he does, he transcends all his works. At least this one attribute of personality God must have if the creator of man and the source of all human good is to be worthy of man's worship. Mr. Wieman attributes to his God no such awareness. For man to worship a God who does not know what he (or in this case, it) is doing is to worship something less than man himself, which is idolatry.

The practical implications of Mr. Wieman's behavioristic theology come out in his chapter on "Morals." In certain respects, this chapter is the most disquieting expression that I have ever read from a recognized teacher of the Christian faith. One gets the impression that devotion to the creative process is so vastly more important than loyalty to any existent good that such loyalty is really unimportant. Whether this impression is the logical effect of the author's theory or only of his unbalanced emphasis, I cannot say. But the author's infatuation with his theory seems to have led him into an extremely dangerous position with respect to the common loyalties which the already created goods lay upon us. Mr. Wieman too easily translates his sympathy with communism into terms of devotion to the creative process. He leaves one with the impression that a powerful movement involving revolutionary change in the social order is ipso facto a movement of creativity and that one who would cooperate with the creative process must give oneself to the movement with utter abandon. This I believe is dangerous doctrine.

The same impression is made by the section dealing with sex morality. The pages devoted to this subject make the impression that the author is trying to disclose and at the same time to conceal a view of sex relations which is, to say it mildly, decidedly unconventional. The sex relationship is described with rapturous language and invested with a preposterously exaggerated importance in normal human life. The author writes like one so obsessed with the procreative process that he takes it as the supreme manifestation of the "creative process." The theme of his treatment is not the family nor the marriage relation, but sexuality as such, and his treatment is distinctly slanted in the direction of sensuality. The effect of his cryptic expressions is undoubtedly to loosen the bonds of loyalty in the marriage relation. The existing social conventions must not be ignored, he concedes. Presumably this means the monogamous family. But these conventions must be "changed slowly. . . . It should be possible in time to develop standards and a religion and social practices more hospitable to love's fulfilment. Perhaps the world of sexual love is in the making." The reader may make of this what he will. But any sophisticated person will discern between the lines of this cryptic and fuzzy section of the book an apologetic for something little short of free love.

I believe this book is the last thrust of the fashionable psychologism that has been at work for more than a generation undermining and dissolving the standards and stabilities of our culture, and throwing all the goods of modern life into the drifting flux of intellectual and moral relativism. It is the last thrust, because it has entered the last area which, until now, has gone uninvaded. This area is Christianity itself. By the introduction of the method of behavioristic psychology into the field of theology and Christian faith, the sweep of this devastating movement has been completed. Its appearance in the form of a behavioristic theology should open the eyes of Christian teachers and leaders to discern where the true enemy, not only of Christian faith, but of Western culture itself, is located.

'Majestic Justice'

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

SIR: I wish to express my unqualified appreciation of your great editorial, "Majestic Justice," in a recent Christian Century. Without any question it is a masterpiece of constructive insight, logic and statesmanship. It cannot be answered, much less refuted, and is actually a classic statement of the case. It could well be considered the expressed judgment of the civilized mind and conscience of the modern world.

Is This Zion's God?

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

SIR: I want to record the satisfaction and delight with which I read Dr. Hutchinson's report on Palestine, and his enthusiasm over the wonderful work of the Jewish settlers in that holy land. Perhaps this means that The Christian Century is at last going to understand the great Zionist adventure and give it sympathy and support. In any case, it proves what I have always contended—namely, that one has only to go to Palestine and see for one's self the marvelous spectacle of the Jewish settlers on the ancient soil to become converted forthwith to the Zionist cause.

One aspect of Dr. Hutchinson's report, however, troubled me, as it seems also to have troubled him. I refer to his apparent discovery that "Zionism here is anti-religious." He feels that the Jews in Palestine are losing their ancient faith, and are no longer hearing or speaking the word "God." This generalization applies not to the whole Zionist movement, as Dr. Hutchinson points out, for "the aggressive secularist outlook" to which he refers is true only of the communal villages. But I doubt if it is really true that these communal villages are accurately to be described as "anti-religious."

It is true that the settlers in the Kvutzoth do not have synagogues nor practice synagogue worship, do not recognize the Sabbath nor read the Scriptures. But they do have a religion which runs deeper than all forms and ceremonies, doctrines and dogmas, and brings strangely to mind the words of the ancient prophets when they contrasted justice and righteousness with incense and oblations. I met this situation when I was in Palestine years ago, and was challenged by it. "How are you restoring Zion," I said to these settlers, "if you leave out the religion of your fathers?" And they answered me something like this:

"Our interpretation of religion," they said, "is the interpretation laid down by the prophets. We have come here to this inhospitable land to give our lives to the restoration of Israel. We are living here in utter poverty and laboring day and night to the limit of our strength. We shall never live to see the fruits of our toil. We simply trust that what we are doing will, on some day when we are gone, fulfil the dreams we dream, the visions we see. This, to our way of thinking, is religion. The life we live and the work we do is the practice of our faith."

I found this plea, which was made to me on various occasions, exceedingly impressive. But I agree with Dr. Hutchinson that the inner life must and should find a fitting outer expression. The prophets themselves identified their social idealism with Israel's God and constantly called God to the remembrance of his people. But this will come in time, for the Jewish heart in Palestine beats to the rhythm of the spirit. What Dr. Hutchinson found was no bare secularism, least of all any crass and crude materialism, but the true religion of the Kingdom. If the ancient synagogue is not restored, then will a new synagogue be created out of the labor and sacrifice of the new day.

The Community Church, New York, N. Y. JOHN HAYNES HOLMES.

[Dr. Hutchinson will speak for himself when he returns, but meanwhile we suggest that Dr. Holmes read his article again before he sets Dr. Hutchinson down as "converted forthwith to the Zionist cause."—THE EDITORS.]

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

SIR: Paul Hutchinson has done it again. To follow up his masterful report on the death of Europe with an equally great article on Zion is to place him among the top ranking social investigators of our time. His rhetorical question as to how religious Jews will react when they learn that their money has gone to finance organized atheism might have been addressed also to those Christians who have been storming the country in the interests of Zionism, storming it with full expenses paid and sometimes a good retainer in addition from the funds of Zionists.

Mustard Seed Growing in Europe

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

SIR: I have been extremely interested in Paul Hutchinson's correspondence from Europe. I was in England and in Belgium this summer. Unfortunately I had no access to the important officials Dr. Hutchinson met, but I had one opportunity which he apparently missed. I spent almost two weeks in the home of Philippe Vernier, the French Protestant pastor of two mining villages near Mons. After this experience I hesitate to consign Europe quite so emphatically to the grave as Dr. Hutchinson does.

Protestantism is a rather new phenomenon in Belgium, and it seems to have the self-consciousness of most minority movements. It reminds one of oldtime Puritanism in its moral strictness, biblical orthodoxy and deep earnestness. The first man I met in the village was Edouard, a 52-year-old miner stricken with the fatal silicosis. The doctor has ordered him out of the mine, but he insists on going down for the sake of protecting the German prisoners whom another foreman might abuse. I heard of Belgian miners taking extra lunches down into the mine to share with their German fellow workers. On Easter Day a choir composed of German prisoners sang in Vernier's church and was much appreciated. At the social hour following, minister and people were able to put across some of their pacifist ideas. Efficient denazification! Vernier told me how some of his parishioners work all night in the mine, and attend church on Sunday morning instead of going to bed. I called to mind some of our American Christians who have all Saturday night to sleep in, but still can't get up in time for church on Sunday morning.

A tent had been erected in the near-by village of Hornu. It made the rounds of the various villages, one week in each. Every evening evangelistic meetings were held beneath it, drawing crowds from among the miners and their families. I had the great privilege of addressing one such group in French! Men, women and children sat for two hours or more, attentive to the preaching and witnessing, joining in the hymns or listening to the male choir composed of miners, some of whom are probably destined to cough up their lungs in the agony of silicosis. Two choir directors had been lost in this way. But Belgium desperately needs the coal, the seams are narrow, and some of the workers go down 1,300 meters. I was never able to ascertain whether all was being done that could possibly be done under the circumstances to protect the men. The emphasis was definitely otherworldly, almost medieval.

Vernier himself makes one think of a Franciscan saint. In worn second-hand clothes, on a rattletrap old bicycle, he rides for miles visiting the sick and the needy—all day and into the night. He took me to see the summer camp in Flanders which he runs for destitute children. At one moment he is singing with the little ones, leading them in games or telling them Bible stories. At another moment he is opening a clogged drain, working over the draft of the kitchen stove, or begging butter for his charges from the surrounding farms.

While I was at his home in Quaregnon, the first camp in Belgium of the International Voluntary Service for Peace was opened under his sponsorship. In the near-by town of St. Ghislain, which had known obliteration bombing, a group of young people from different countries were donating their labor, having paid their own expenses to get there. The municipality housed them in the Home for Children of Canal Bargemen, and they swung a pick for eight hours a day on a demolition job among the ruins. Food was contributed by those willing to donate a bag of potatoes or other produce. Packages from America helped out. There was laughter and song among the group. Though one or two of the workers were no longer young, the total impression one got was one of youthfulness. I thought of the motto I saw written up somewhere: "Christianity is the eternal youth of the world."

Philippe Vernier has refused offers of positions in Brussels, preferring to remain among the poor, eating and dressing like them, living in one of their primitive houses in a drab, soot-covered village. A magnificent preacher, he has no worldly ambition, seldom reads a newspaper, and from what I could see, worries very little about the political state of the world. His parishioners, who are devoted to him, told of his deeds of heroism and self-sacrifice during the war. Having known imprisonment and solitary confinement for his refusal to take part in war or military service, he can still say: "It is more important to be peaceful than to be a pacifist."

Maybe Europe is dead. I wouldn't deny it. Maybe she's near a resurrection. I only know I sensed an intensity of life in that lost corner of Belgium that I cannot find here in America. Dr. Hutchinson mentions such centers of new life and says they are "so small, so pitifully small." I suppose if one has traveled all over Europe, instead of through just one fraction of it, they do seem utterly inadequate. But the mustard seed is small—and it grows. There was another small group of people in first century times that grew across the face of the world.

Does CARE Deliver?

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

SIR: Though I appreciate H. D. Bollinger's excellent article, "This Is Mass Starvation," I regret that I must take exception to his statement: "Perhaps the quickest and safest way to save lives is to send ten dollars to CARE . . . This amount of money will release at once from some warehouse in Europe 40,000 calories of food . . . These packages seem to get through . . . "

Alas, this has not been my experience, nor has it been that of many other people who have sent packages through CARE. On July 8, we sent two CARE packages to the American zone. We have sent several others since then. Up to the middle of September none of them had reached the people to whom they had been sent. I wrote to CARE after two and a half months had elapsed and my German relatives had already acknowledged the receipt of eleven-pound packages sent through the medium of international parcel post to inquire why there had been so long a delay, but I have received no answer to my inquiry.

I do not wish to imply that CARE is not making the attempt to deliver packages, but I cannot understand why international parcel post does a quicker job, since the CARE packages are supposed to be already overseas and ready for immediate delivery. I merely wish to point out that the article might lead eager donors of food to German civilians to expect prompt delivery. In talking to many who have sent CARE packages and parcel post packages, I have failed to find one whose CARE packages have been acknowledged, but many have received letters telling of the arrival of those packages sent by parcel post. There must be some bottleneck in the CARE system.

Churches Speak On Sugar Strike

Honolulu Committee's Report Calls for Reopening Negotiations in Dispute Now Paralyzing the Islands

HONOLULU, Oct. 21.—The joint fact-finding committee appointed by the Honolulu ministerial union and the social action committee of the local council of churches to study the territory-wide sugar strike has made its report. It discusses the major issues in the strike, and calls for the following steps to improve the situation: (1) speedy reopening of negotiations by the two groups; (2) an end to the vicious and misleading propaganda issued by both parties and a "climate of clear, wise thinking" in its place; (3) dissemination of actual facts, uncolored by emotional bias, among the entire population; and (4) repentance by the churches for their failure to instill truly Christian principles in all areas of life. The two sponsoring bodies approved the report without a dissenting vote, and it was published in full by one of the two local English language newspapers. It is being well received as a clear statement of the Christian point of view on the present situation.

No Progress in Negotiations

The strike is now in its eighth week, and there is as yet no sign of any significant meeting of minds on the part of the two contesting groups. The sugar industry still refuses to give in on the demand of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (C.I.O.) for a union shop, which seems to be the most fundamental of the basic issues. The union is also asking for a 65 cent an hour minimum wage, a 40-hour week, and joint accounting of perquisites (housing, fuel, water and medical service), money for which is now deducted from workers' wages.

Honolulu Has Its First Ecumenical Service

Attending the first such service in Honolulu's history, 1,500 persons crowded historic Kawaiahao Church on the evening of World Communion Sunday for a service of ecumenical worship sponsored by the local council of churches. It brought together people of all racial and denominational backgrounds, and was conducted by clergymen of the Methodist, Lutheran, Episcopal, Congregational and Presbyterian churches representing Japanese, Chinese, Hawaiian and Caucasian ancestry. A feature of the service was the repetition of the Lord's Prayer in the eight languages used in the islands—Japanese, Chinese, Hawaiian, Korean, Filipino, Portuguese, Samoan and English. Some of the prayers and litanies used were from ancient liturgies of the church. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr., of St. Andrew's Cathedral spoke on the background, history and purposes of the World Council of Churches, and called for increased cooperation and unity of Christian people, whatever their denomination or racial background, in our local situation. All who attended were enthusiastic about the value of the service in helping to unite the Christian people of the city, and expressed the hope that such a service might be made an annual affair.

Weekday Religious Schools at Peak

With the largest enrollment in its history, the weekday religious education program of the Honolulu council of churches is now reaching a total of 5,600 children weekly. This is an increase of about 1,200 over last year, and includes for the first time children in the third grade. The council maintains a staff of 7 full-time teachers, directed by Etta M. Peoples. In addition, 23 part-time teachers, many of them ministers, assist in the work. The total program involves a schedule of 186 classes per week in 29 Honolulu schools, an increase of 50 classes over last year. More than half of the city's children are not reached by any Protestant church and have no other religious influence in their lives. Besides the Protestant classes conducted by the local council of churches, there are religious classes carried on separately by the Roman Catholics, the Latter-day Saints and the Missionary Baptists.

And So Forth

Honolulu has recently played host to several Christian leaders passing through the city. Dr. and Mrs. Henry Sloane Coffin of New York, en route to the Orient and Africa where Dr. Coffin will deliver the Joseph Cook lectures in many cities, spoke to the ministerial union concerning the state of the church on the mainland. Carl Heath Kopf of the Mount Vernon Congregational Church of Boston stopped here several days on his way home from the Philippines. He addressed the ministerial union on his observations in the new Pacific republic, reporting that great confusion still exists in the political, economic and religious realms.

The Methodist mission in the islands has recently purchased a former navy officers' club on the windward side of Oahu for use as a young people's conference site. The two-acre property has eight buildings providing accommodations for 200 young people. Several conferences and institutes were held there this summer.

Race News: Some Good, Some Bad

Method of Handling Tensions Varies throughout South—Parallel Labor Organizing Drives Successful

NASHVILLE, TENN., Oct. 31.—The jury's verdict in the Columbia, Tenn., race conflict has been hailed as a reversal of the rule that in such cases "crime is black." It must be remembered that not a single eyewitness to the actual firing of a gun was produced, that the two men convicted were adjudged guilty on a girl's testimony that they had told her they had shot some policemen (a story she later denied), and that Negro witnesses for the prosecution were reportedly frightened into appearing by threats, testifying in cross-examination to beatings by the commissioner of public safety's road patrol. The jury found guilty the only defendants against whom there was the smallest shred of evidence.

The Southern Baptist Convention has offered a $5,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the murderers of two Negro men and their wives who were lynched this summer at Monroe, Ga. This brings the total of rewards offered up to $30,000. However, no arrests have been made. The FBI is still investigating, but state officials have withdrawn in despair, one of them advocating a federal law to deal with such cases. The Negro press asks for a more intensive inquiry into the case, believing that the names of some of the lynchers are known.

Signs of Progress in Race Relations

On the other side of the picture it can be recorded that in Florida the state supreme court freed a Negro who killed a sheriff who attacked him while searching his home. A Georgia planter, owner of a 1,000-acre plantation, has been arrested by the FBI on charges of holding five Negroes in peonage through an old custom of securing their release from jail. Peonage is a federal offense. Jackson, Miss., has allotted $300,000 from a fund for the improvement of parks and playgrounds for its colored citizens. This action came after the community chest withdrew support of Bethlehem Center, a Methodist institution for Negroes, because the white director insisted on addressing his clients as Mr. and Mrs. The churches of Jackson answered by subscribing more than $4,000 for support of the center. Florida has made a grant of $1,000,000 to the state college for Negroes.

Oppose Effort to Bar Negroes from Polls

The white junior chamber of commerce in Montgomery, Ala., went on record as opposed to an amendment empowering election officials to subject voters to a quiz designed to protect the white primary against Negro voting when the poll tax is repealed. They circulated their protest to all other junior chambers of commerce in the state. In Athens, Ala., whites who attacked colored citizens on the streets are proclaims a message for these very times in his first book of sermons

On Final Ground

In twenty-one pointed sermons, Dr. Bosley suggests ways in which the great assurances of vital Christianity may come to grips with the grave problems of personal and social living today. He examines realistically the tragedy of the war and its equally tragic aftermath of mounting anxiety, particularly the loss of faith in the possibility of achieving the good life. In this situation, he considers the historic themes of God, Christ, the Bible, the Church and Prayer, deriving from them their utmost resources of assurance and enlightenment.

Unionizing Drives Report Success

Both the C.I.O. and the A.F. of L. report gratifying progress in the drive to organize the south. The C.I.O. reports winning eight plant elections and losing only one out of several score elections held under NLRB supervision. The A.F. of L. reports more than 180,000 new members. Both bodies are organizing on an interracial basis. The Religion and Labor Foundation will establish an office in Atlanta to promote understanding of labor's aims, collective bargaining and the use of peaceful methods in the settlement of disputes. The greatest gains to date are those of the workers in the great tobacco plants of North Carolina and Virginia. These employees are chiefly colored women, hitherto the most exploited of southern workers.

Industrial Council Smears C.I.O.

The Southern Industrial Council is opposing the union drives vigorously. It centers its attack upon the C.I.O., just as it did on the A.F. of L. in former days. It calls the congress communistic, attacking its interracial program. It warns against P.A.C. as subversive because it opposes fascism in Spain and Argentina and supports the OPA, and because it advocates national health insurance, increased workers' compensation, more social security and the FEPC. The council's warnings seem to have little effect. Union officials report hundreds of improved new contracts negotiated peacefully, many of them granting a minimum wage of 75 cents an hour. The C.I.O. organizing committee reports a score of assaults on organizers, like the violence met by A.F. of L. organizers a few years ago. The Wool and Cotton Journal advocated outright violation of the Wagner Act, but neither the better class of employers nor the larger city newspapers are conducting any vigorous fight against unionization.

Machine Absorbing Veterans' Unrest

The wave of insurrection by veterans in this area has quieted down, largely because the veterans won their case with the public. At Sand Mountain, near Scottsboro, Ala., they have returned to official jurisdiction road machinery they had seized, but are continuing their road building. All is quiet in Athens, Tenn., with a clear-cut victory for the vets. In a number of other places in "Crump's kingdom" uprisings and public meetings were held by veterans, but the machine quickly commended the young men and is, it seems, seeking to take them over, just as it took over the "young Democratic" movement of some years ago.

Take Action on Issues of Today

Conclaves of New York State Church Bodies Speak on C.O.'s, Atomic Bombing, World Government

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 31.—Strong resolutions calling for forward-looking action on social issues were adopted by several state and area church bodies at conventions held in October. Methodist ministers of the Syracuse area at a stewardship gathering in Syracuse requested President Truman to release the conscientious objectors who are serving in Civilian Public Service camps and to pardon those who are in prison "for conscience' sake." The President was reminded that he has already given a full pardon to several thousand ex-convicts who served in the armed forces. The clergymen pointed out that amnesty has been granted to political prisoners in Greece, Spain, Brazil, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria and India, and that General MacArthur has granted amnesty to political prisoners of the past 15 years in Japan. Universalists and Baptists, at their state meetings, also petitioned the President on behalf of the conscientious objectors.

Universalists Condemn Atomic Bomb

One of the best statements on atomic energy to be issued by any state body was adopted by the Universalists, who met in Rochester. They said: "We penitently recognize the immorality involved in the use of atomic bombs and record our profound revulsion to the past and possible future use of such weapons as inhuman. We favor measures leading to the swift destruction of all such atomic energy weapons in the possession of any nation; and complete civilian control of all atomic energy developments on a shared international level, with proper safeguards, so that future developments in atomic energy research will present no opportunity for the destruction of present civilization, but on the contrary may be used in the direction of peaceful humanitarian concerns in which all mankind shall benefit." At the meeting of the Presbyterian synod in Auburn, a resolution commending the postponement, and calling for the cancellation, of the proposed third atomic bomb test was deleted from the report of the social education and action committee on the motion of a former army chaplain. The Presbyterian report pressed for the development of a world government in which sovereignty will be vested in the people of the world and not in any one nation. This was held to be the political corollary of the cardinal Presbyterian doctrine of the sovereignty of God.

Baptists Score Catholic Marriage Rule

The Baptist missionary convention went on record as condemning the Catholic marriage contract which requires persons of other communions to promise to rear their children as Catholics and to agree not to try to change the faith of the Catholic partner. Such a procedure was labeled as being neither Christian nor American.

A JOINT STATEMENT ABOUT THE BOOKS

"THE Interseminary Series affords a unique opportunity for ministers and laymen to come abreast of contemporary Christian thinking in America. These four volumes which view the task, the message and the nature of the Church in the modern world have been written by 34 outstanding leaders of American church life, representing 10 of the major churches. The forthright and comprehensive presentation of subject matter which the Series affords provides valuable help in facing as Christians our common task in these postwar years."

VOLUME I

THE CHALLENGE OF OUR CULTURE

Edited by Clarence Tucker Craig. An analysis of the parts of our culture which most seriously challenge the Church and its gospel, including technology, tensions of the "higher culture," personal tensions, power rivalries, racism and Christian moral conflicts.

VOLUME II

THE CHURCH AND ORGANIZED MOVEMENTS

Edited by Randolph Crump Miller. An appraisal of organized movements which serve definite classes or interests in our contemporary society. What resistance and what resource do these groups present to the Church?

VOLUME III

THE GOSPEL, THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD

Edited by Kenneth Scott Latourette. A discussion of the relation of God in Jesus Christ, the nature of the Church, the hope of a transfigured world, the historical Christian movement, the responsibility of the Church for society, obstacles before the Church, and the vocation of the Christian today.

VOLUME IV

TOWARD WORLD-WIDE CHRISTIANITY

Edited by O. Frederick Nolde. The story of the developing world Christian movement, its ideals and their increasingly dominant influence on Church life and thought today; and a discussion of the problem and opportunities which face this emerging world Christian fellowship.

Mrs. Dean Sees Russia As Declining

Vera Micheles Dean of the Foreign Policy Association, speaking in Syracuse, surprised her audience by expressing the opinion that Russia has reached the peak of her influence and has already begun to decline. She said Russian influence was at its zenith on V-E day. "Those of us who knew Russia knew that she was a backward country, and now it is apparent," she declared. She said that anyone who talks about the inevitability of war with Russia is criminally irresponsible, for what Russia most wants is to regain her composure and be left free for her work of reconstruction.

Vote More Funds for Migrant Work

The New York state committee on migrant work, representing the Home Missions Council and the state council of churches, held a recent meeting to appraise the activities of the past summer and to consider plans for next year. Since the state government took over the responsibility for the child care centers, the church committee has concentrated on a religious and recreational program. Projects in 33 centers were carried on by members of the staff. The budget adopted for the migrant program for 1947 is three times the amount spent during the past summer.

Weekday Religious Program Is Growing

The state department of education has recently announced that 269,000 children in the state are being released from public schools for religious instruction one hour a week. This is over five times the number enrolled in weekday religious classes 10 years ago, an indication of the growing importance of this aspect of the Christian education program. In several cities buses are now being used to transport Protestant children from the schools to the churches. Catholic nuns in Syracuse have been provided with an automobile to use in traveling to surrounding villages to give weekday religious instruction.

And So Forth

Community chest campaigns throughout the state have lagged, and in many cities have failed to meet their full quotas. Workers have not responded with the enthusiasm shown during war years, and contributors have not manifested the previous spirit of generosity.

Glenn O. Canfield, formerly of Clinton, Mass., has been installed as pastor of May Memorial Unitarian Church in Syracuse.

Eli W. Pittman, prominently identified with the Methodist church in this state for 50 years as a pastor or denominational official, died recently in Elmira.

Alfred Rapp, pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church and president of the Syracuse council of churches, has accepted a call to the Congregational Church of Flushing. WALTER D. CAVERT.

Iowa Council in New Enterprises

Interchurch Body Expands Function of Sunday School Association, Will Promote Further Cooperation

MOUNT VERNON, IOWA, Oct. 31.—The traditional county Sunday school convention in Iowa has been revitalized this year through the work of the Iowa interchurch council, under the direction of H. H. Kalas. In recent years the denominational agencies have taken over most of the training functions of the old Sunday school associations. The program of the interchurch council is to utilize this machinery for the exploration of new areas of cooperative activity among the churches on a community level. They are tackling the difficult problem of correlation among the rural youth organizations, the school and the church. The council is interested in several experiments with weekday plans of religious education being carried on in the state. In the Leeds school at Sioux City, religious instruction is conducted in school buildings. In Page county, the same type of program is carried on in the churches. By agreement with all the churches in Des Moines, the schools sponsor no activities after the dismissal hour on Wednesday afternoons, when the church programs are scheduled. In other schools, ministers teach classes in religion for credit in the 10th and 11th grades.

Conduct Teaching Mission

Under the chairmanship of Harry C. Munro of the Federal Council and the auspices of the interchurch council, a National Christian Teaching Mission was carried on in Cedar Rapids. Eleven hundred people from 39 churches cooperated in the seminars. A complete census of the city was made and a program of year-round evangelism outlined. The council is carrying on a cooperative project with the Iowa council of Catholic charities for the improvement of the religious ministry to institutionalized people in the state.

Notes Racial, Religious Tension

A showing of "Porgy and Bess" planned for Cedar Rapids had to be canceled because neither hotels nor private homes could be found in the city to accommodate the Negro cast. A Negro teacher has been employed by the public schools of Des Moines this year. The plan is not without opposition, but seems to have been accepted by the majority. The chief point of religious tension in this section continues to be anti-Catholic feeling. Protestant objections to the transporting of Catholic students to parochial schools in state-operated buses and a ruling of the Iowa supreme court making such transportation illegal have generated a great deal of bitterness among rural Catholics.

EVANGELISTIC SERMONS ON THE GREAT FUNDAMENTALS

What New Doctrine Is This?

BOB SHULER

Written with sincerity, power, and force, these twelve sermons speak vigorously and fearlessly against the evils of our present-day civilization. Ready Nov. 25.

They set forth the doctrine of universal sin versus the new doctrine of universal hope as created by Jesus at Capernaum. They point persuasively to the abundant life open to man in Christ—"for whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF FAITH

The author believes in aggressive preaching of the gospel and the winning of others to Christ through personal example. In these sermons, which are radiant testimony of great faith, he holds firmly to the fundamental doctrines of the Church and urges that failure to live positively for Christ equals sins of commission.

science over the way in which they have withheld livestock from the market and stimulated opposition to the OPA. Sumner Welles On Russia

On Oct. 16 Sumner Welles was invested with the ceremonial robes of honorary rector of the University of Dubuque. His address was a discussion of the conflict with Russia. He said: "The problem should legitimately involve a fair agreement upon an effective international means of control over the use of atomic energy; the subjection of all air or naval bases which can offer a threat to the security of any major power to an equally effective international control; and an agreement between both powers as to what constitutes Russia's legitimate requirements in order to insure her future safety against acts of aggression similar to those which she has suffered in recent generations."

River Traffic Boosts Talk of MVA

A towboat and its barge recently arrived at Omaha after a trip from Chicago down the canal and the rivers to St. Louis and up the Missouri with the first load of packet freight to reach that city in 50 years. The cargo consisted of 30 carloads of structural steel and 90 tons of beer, twin harbingers of the industrial age to come. The event gave a boost to public interest in the idea of a Missouri Valley Authority, which is meeting plenty of opposition here. The National Reclamation Association, meeting in Omaha, took a decided stand against an MVA, but opposed President Truman's reduction of reclamation projects in the budget of the fiscal year, a reduction which will stop many projects planned in the valley.

Dom Eugene Martin is the fifth abbot to be installed since the founding of the abbey. Want Catholics on Land

National Rural Life Conference Urges Admission of Refugee Farmers

More than 10,000 farmers, 1,000 Roman Catholic priests and nuns and 20 bishops attended the 24th annual convention of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, held Oct. 11-15 in Green Bay, Wis., Religious News Service reports. Present also were a number of Protestant farmers and church leaders.

They heard Bishop William T. Mulloy of Covington, Ky., who later was elected president of the conference, outline the following program as representing the purpose of the Catholic farm movement: (1) to care for underprivileged Catholic farmers by providing retreats and religious exercises, by developing community recreation, and by encouraging credit unions and consumers' and producers' cooperatives; (2) to keep Catholics on the land; (3) to increase the number of Catholics on the land (only 15 per cent of the 24,000,000 members of the church in the United States live on farms); and (4) to convert non-Catholic farmers, particularly those who profess no religious beliefs.

Scores Urbanization of Schools

Coadjutor Bishop Peter W. Bartholome of St. Cloud, Minn., declared that Catholic pulpits in rural areas must "interpret the life of the farmer in terms of the life of Christ and point out that God's plan for the social existence of man can best be worked out on the land." He called upon the conference to work to obtain Catholic rural teachers and to strive to have the "Christian rural viewpoint" expressed in curriculums and textbooks. "The dignity of the farmer must be re-established in the souls of the children," he said. "Centralization and urbanization of the school is the trend of secular education in this country. Educators are attempting to legislate the rural school out of existence on the plea of its inability to educate and its abnormally high cost."

The conference recommended that America's postwar immigration policy should have as a prime objective the resettlement of homeless European refugee farmers on the land in this country. It urged that national agricultural policy be directed toward preserving and encouraging the family-type farm. It expressed approval of the principle of a world trade organization committed to the progressive outlawing of restrictive trade agreements.

Msgr. Luigi G. Ligutti of Des Moines, Iowa, was re-elected executive secretary of the conference.

Urges U.N. Be Made to Work

Briton Tells Chicago Student Institute Nations Should Act without Russia if Necessary to Get Results

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Mundelein College, Roman Catholic girls' school here, was host last week to delegates from 12 colleges and universities in the area at an institute for the study of the United Nations. John Eppstein, editor of the British Survey and founder of the British Society for International Understanding, told the delegates that if Russia will not abide by the terms of the charter, the other nations should go ahead anyway, even if that means cutting the Soviets off from secondary U.N. activities such as international food control. Cardinal Stritch of the Chicago Roman Catholic diocese said that the success of any international organization depends on good will among those participating and allegiance to the jurisdiction of justice based upon moral law. As presently constituted, he pointed out, U.N. is not such an organization, but rather an alliance of four powerful nations. He noted, however, that the charter provides means of amendment to improve itself. Roosevelt College and the National Broadcasting Company joined the institute in conducting a model U.N. assembly, part of which was broadcast over a national hook-up.

Says Unemployment Would Increase State Control

In an address to the City club last week, Roger Baldwin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union, declared that free enterprise is a luxury which a country can afford only if it keeps people employed. Existence of 15,000,000 unemployed in a nation, he said, would mean that government control of economic processes would be demanded. Civil liberties, Mr. Baldwin noted, are thwarted as communism advances, but communism is thwarted when civil liberties and democracy are not curtailed. The speaker urged that treaties negotiated with other countries contain guarantees of freedom of the press, radio and speech, and called for a liberalization of the American attitude toward refugees.

Promises U. N. Radio Free From Commercialism

Speaking to the Chicago radio management club last week, Benjamin Cohen, an assistant secretary general of the United Nations, promised that if U. N. develops the world-wide broadcasting service it is now considering, that service will have no commercial features. William Paley, chairman of the Columbia Broadcasting System, admitted that broadcasters are guilty of "advertising excesses," but declared that the Federal Communications Commission's recent directive on the subject to broadcasters represents an interference with programming. Fulton Lewis, Jr., Mutual network commentator, told the club that commentators "operating under orders from Moscow should be so listed." Mr. Paley told the meeting of the National Association of Broadcasters held here last week that the Paul A. Schilpp, Methodist minister and professor of philosophy at Northwestern University, was awarded an honorary degree of LL. D. at the centennial celebration of his alma mater, Baldwin-Wallace College, Berea, Ohio. In awarding the degree, President Louis C. Wright of Baldwin-Wallace paid particular tribute to Dr. Schilpp's work as founder and editor of the "Library of Living Philosophy" series.

When Alonzo Stagg, 84-year-old dean of American football coaches, brought his College of the Pacific team here to play Northwestern University, local sports writers devoted columns of space to hailing him as the inventor of many football plays which have become famous and as the only survivor of the group which founded the "Big 10" conference. They paid little attention to an even more notable service rendered by Stagg—the Christian influence he has exerted over members of his teams. His own enthusiasm for the Christian life came about from his contacts with Dwight L. Moody and Henry Drummond during his student days at Yale.

Russians Ask World Council for Aid

When a relief crisis threatened the lives of 60,000 children in an area of Russian-occupied Europe, the authorities appealed to the World Council of Churches for aid, S. C. Michelfelder, council relief executive, told a recent conference of Church World Service directors in New York. "They accepted our stipulation that an agency of our choosing be given the responsibility of distribution," he said. "Regardless of the criticism of the Soviet Union's attitude in domestic and international affairs, the fact remains that individual Russians are concerned to see that no children starve." The story of World Council help, he pointed out, was headlined in the press of the occupied zone.

Canada Has 53 Church Publications

A recent survey of Canadian religious publications reveals, according to Religious News Service, that the dominion has 53 religious newspapers, magazines and other periodicals with a total circulation of 704,342. There are 25 Protestant, 23 Catholic and 5 Jewish publications. Catholic papers have the largest circulation—422,118, compared with 250,824 for the Protestant and 31,400 for the Jewish papers. L'Action Paroissiale, a Catholic paper printed in Montreal, has the largest circulation—123,622. Next come the Missionary Monthly, an organ of the United Church of Canada, with 56,300, and the bi-monthly United Church Observer, with 50,707.

Report Councils Exist in 48 States

Some Form of Cooperative Protestant Organization in Each—Plan World Christian-Jewish Endeavor

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Every state now has some form of cooperative Protestant organization, it was revealed at the meeting here last week of the intercouncil field department, which represents eight national Protestant bodies. Thirty-five states have inclusive councils of churches, 4 have councils of church women, 3 have Sunday school associations, 3 have home missions councils, 1 has both a council of religious education and a council of churches, 1 has a rural life conference and 1 has a council of churches and social agencies. There are 634 state, city and county councils of churches, of which 195 have employed leadership. There are 2,176 ministerial associations. The United Council of Church Women, formed in 1941, has grown from 375 councils in 1942 to 41 state and 1,400 local councils in 1946.

Report Aid To C.O.'s

Financial assistance and consultation service have been provided for 36 men by the Committee on Educational Aid for Conscientious Objectors since its formation last spring, it was reported at the committee's annual meeting here Oct. 28. The men had been in C.P.S. camps or prison during the war and needed help to continue their interrupted education. Among them were 21 Protestants, 2 Jews, 4 Catholics and 9 men with no religious affiliation. "They are all men of promise and ability and represent an extremely good investment for the future of a sane and healthy society," said Arthur Swift, co-chairman of the committee. To date, $12,000 has been raised to carry on the work of assistance. To answer applications, which are continuing and will probably increase, an additional $5,000 will be needed.

Bogus Archbishop's Funds Given to Three Faiths

When the American Catholic Orthodox Church, Inc., was dissolved last year and the bogus archbishop and his self-styled dean and priests sent to Sing Sing prison, $9,000 of the funds which had been obtained under false pretenses and for which no claims were made remained in the hands of the state attorney general. Queens Pastors Plan Discussion Groups

At the annual clergy conference of the Queens federation of churches, held in Emanuel Evangelical and Reformed Church, Woodhaven, last week, A. J. MacKenzie of Union Congregational Church, Richmond Hill, declared that the churches must work together more effectively to meet the needs of the borough. He said that only by so doing could they avoid the decline which a recent survey showed has occurred in Brooklyn. W. Norman Pittenger of General Theological Seminary, New York, addressed the ministers on "Christian Mores." The meeting approved the setting up of discussion groups for clergy of the borough, and directed that a questionnaire be sent to all members of the federation to determine subjects to be discussed.

Plan International Council Of Christians and Jews

Plans for the formation of an international council of Christians and Jews were approved by the board of directors of the National Conference of Christians and Jews at its meeting here this week. The proposal, offered by Henry Noble MacCracken, president emeritus of Vassar College and educational adviser to the conference, suggested that the proposed body apply for affiliation to the United Nations' educational, scientific and cultural organization. The board announced that a $10,000 grant for setting up the council has been made by Lessing J. Rosenwald, president of the American Council on Judaism. It approved a budget of $2,000,000 for 1947. Everett J. Clinchy, president of the conference, declared in an address that "the development of new relationships among Christians and Jews is basic to a firm stand against materialistic trends and fundamental to a durable peace."

Home Mission Council Warns Against Anti-Semitism

Unless the Christian churches of this country rise up to combat anti-Semitism, our culture will "crumble and disintegrate" like those of Egypt, Babylon, Rome, medieval Spain, tsarist Russia and Hitlerian Germany, the committee on the Christian approach to the Jews of the Home Missions Council declares in a statement issued here this week. In all those countries, the statement points out, disintegration was preceded by a period during which anti-Semitism was widespread. It continues: "If America through its churches is able to prevent the anti-Semitism which now threatens, and instead succeeds in establishing friendly relations, good will and cooperation between Jews and Christians, this country may save its soul and assure her future, as well as lead the world to a new day of neighborliness which will include all peoples."

And So Forth

More than 800 young people from New York churches attended the annual youth conference sponsored at Riverside Church last Saturday by the Christian youth council of the Protestant council. Seminars were offered in youth relationships, cooperatives, race relations, United Nations objectives and other world problems.

Dean Greer McKee was inaugurated president of Biblical Seminary Oct. 29 at ceremonies held at St. Peter's Lutheran Church, Manhattan.

An interdenominational conference of Italian pastors was held at Broome Street Tabernacle this week under auspices of the committee on city and bilingual work of the Home Missions Council. Speakers were Earl F. Adams, director of the Protestant council, and Howard Yergin, Presbyterian minister who recently returned from a six-month mission in Italy.

Church Celebrates 100th Birthday

During the three weeks of Sept. 8-29, the First Presbyterian Church of Waukesha, Wis., observed its 100th anniversary. There were birthday ceremonies, a communion service, a men's club dinner, an all-church concert, a youth night, a service honoring 50-year members, a centennial banquet and a historical exhibit. A centennial book was published in connection with the celebration.

Stewardship Messages On Radio

During October, November and December the United Stewardship Council is sponsoring a series of addresses on stewardship by Arthur H. Limouze. The broadcasts, on the American Broadcasting Company's network, are heard every Friday morning at 8:55 eastern standard time. About 60 stations are carrying the broadcasts, and transcriptions are made of the programs.

Restudy Group Issues Report

Presbyterian, U. S., Committee Directs Research on Rural and Urban Church, Religious Education Programs

DAVIDSON, N. C., Oct. 30.—The first report of the committee appointed by the Presbyterian Church, U. S., to study its religious education program has been published. Findings have been set forth in three monographs: Rural Communities of the South, Urban Communities of the South and Church Relationships in the South. They were prepared under the direction of Felix B. Gear of Columbia Seminary, committee chairman. The study of the rural church reveals that its decline may be attributed to the general decrease in population in the south, to the rival attraction provided by farm bureaus and extension club programs and to the fact that the rural ministry is not acquainted with the needs and problems of farm people. In urban situations, the survey discovered that the church stands aloof from community needs; declines to share in the solution of the race problem; is indifferent to minority groups; and shows little interest in such problems as housing, social welfare and economic difficulties. A majority of teachers in the Sunday schools, the report points out, are above middle age, and many of them have never had a course in leadership training. Next task before the committee is a restudy of the denomination's religious education curriculum.

Consider State Medical Improvement Plan

The medical care commission has laid before the state budgetary commission a blueprint for a four-year program of expanding hospital and medical facilities of the state to provide each county with a hospital or a health center, and a four-year medical school at the state university. The cost of the program is estimated at $36,739,000, of which the state would pay $14,140,000, the federal government $12,049,000 and local sources $10,550,000. The program calls for the addition of 5,000 beds to the hospital facilities of the state, and the construction of 33 health centers, 24 of which would be in counties now without hospital facilities. There has been criticism of this plan from various sources. The state grange supported the proposals by a margin of three votes, a large minority of the membership fearing that rural hospitals would be left to the last in the scheme.

Appoint Weekday School Consultant

The appointment of Frances Query as consultant on weekday religious education in North Carolina will bring to biblical courses in the public schools a greater measure of coordination than has hitherto existed. Teachers for the courses are usually recruited by the local schools, and each is free to use any curriculum or to devise his own. This is in contrast with the plan in Virginia, where teachers are recruited through a central agency and one standard curriculum is worked out for all the courses.

Charlotte Has High Murder Rate

According to FBI figures for the first six months of 1946, Charlotte, N. C., has the highest murder rate of any city in the nation except Knoxville, Tenn. With a population of only 100,000, the city had 14 homicides. In cases of assault with intent to kill, North Carolina came first with 253 offenses per 100,000 population. South Carolina ranked sixth with 75.7. The national average is 31.9 per 100,000. In murder cases, North Carolina ranks third in the nation, being exceeded by Alabama and Georgia. South Carolina ranks seventh. Commenting on these figures, the Charlotte Observer points out: "Courts seem to be particularly indifferent to Negro murders, for seldom is the killing of a Negro, either by a white man or by another Negro, punished with the death sentence."

Low Teachers' Salaries Affect Schools

The low teachers' salaries prevailing in North Carolina are causing widespread concern. The state educational association has gone on record for a 20 per cent increase, and the Piedmont regional association is recommending a 40 per cent increase. Since salary rates for Negro and white teachers in North Carolina are now equal, teaching has become one of the most attractive professions for Negroes, and is gaining high-grade persons. On the other hand, the pay is low compared to that in other professions open to whites; consequently the supply of adequately trained white teachers is decreasing alarmingly. In order to fill vacancies, teachers without required certificates have had to be appointed. The majority of graduates even of teachers colleges have no intention of entering the teaching profession. In spite of the fact that the quality of Negro teachers is rapidly improving, 211 of the 1,768 Negro schools in the state still do not meet the minimum sanitary requirements required of accredited schools. Pupils of a Negro school in Lumberton recently conducted a strike in protest against the unsanitary facilities in their school.

BEYOND THIS DARKNESS

by Roger L. Shinn

"Christianity offers a hope that is real, but no one has a right to talk of that hope unless he has looked hard at the stark facts of our time." That's the task one of America's rising young churchmen set for himself in this simple, honest, clean-cut statement of what Christianity has to say to each of us today, of what the events of our time mean to Christians who face the future. There is a strong light shining through it—for you and your friends. $1.00 reported at the denomination's annual autumn council in Grand Rapids, Mich., according to Religious News Service. The church sent out 186 new missionaries in 1945, the greatest number since 1926. Mission offerings for the year were $7,837,868. During the council meeting, it was announced that labor unions have agreed to exempt Adventists from participation in their activities, since members of the group wish "to stand apart from conflict and violence," although they approve the aims of organized labor. They will pay the equivalent of union dues to specific charity funds.

Turkey Calm in Crisis

Feels Certain that the Democracies Will Not Allow Russia in the Straits

ISTANBUL, TURKEY, Oct. 12.—Although Russia's demand for a share in operation of the Dardanelles is discussed daily in the press, public opinion on the matter is very calm. The absence of excitement is undoubtedly founded upon certainty that the United States and Great Britain will fight Russia rather than permit her to have her own way and secure bases in the straits. The country is agreed on the necessity of resisting any Russian aggression. Whether or not Turkey scrupulously applied the provisions of the Montreux convention during the war is probably irrelevant. At any rate, any proof that Turkey could give that her attitude had been correct would probably be of no avail if Russia decided to solve the problem of the straits in her own way. A semi-official body is suggesting that an international body should decide whether this country has observed the provisions correctly.

Inönü Bows to Appeal For Neutrality

President Inönü's recent statement to members of the opposition party (Democratic) that he intends to observe an attitude of neutrality toward the two leading parties is being looked upon as a turning point in Turkish political ideology. It will be remembered that Inönü's active personal participation in the municipal elections several months ago caused bitter feeling among the Democrats, who claimed that the head of the state should remain above party activities. They recalled that Atatürk stressed the importance of the president's keeping clear of party partiality in order to insure strict democracy—this in spite of the fact that Atatürk himself had been the founder and leader of the People's party. Doubtless Inönü's participation in the municipal elections was dictated by the knowledge that winning them was essential to winning the ensuing legislative elections, and by the conviction that in the critical days ahead it was most important that the country should be governed by the much criticized but politically seasoned People's party. Although it cannot be said that President Inönü believes in the wisdom of unrestricted democracy in Turkey in critical times such as these, it would seem from his recent statement that he is bent upon insuring at least a minimum amount of democracy in the country's political life.

able to entertain the prelates adequately. However, five weeks have gone by, the Russian visitors have not yet arrived and people are wondering what has caused the delay. The visit is probably meant as an acknowledgment of the attendance of Msgr. Germanos, the patriarch's permanent delegate in London, at the enthronement of Patriarch Alexii in Moscow. It will be recalled that Alexii personally called at the apostolic sees of Jerusalem and Alexandria to return the visits their delegates had paid to Moscow on the same occasion.

Journalism Risky In Turkey

After the Great National Assembly's recent modification of the Turkish penal law, journalism in this country can hardly be called a free profession. Any Turkish citizen who publishes in a foreign country any news on the home situation that is without foundation or exaggerated or likely to destroy foreign regard for the Turkish state may find himself sentenced to five years' imprisonment. Anyone who at home publicly insults or expresses contempt for the republic, for the Great National Assembly, for the moral character of the government, the ministries or the military or police forces, or for the quality of Turkish justice may incur as much as six years' imprisonment. Even if the names of those attacked are not clearly mentioned, or if the attack is made in an indirect manner, the penalty still holds; all that is necessary is that the "allusion be clear." Those who publicly insult the laws of the republic or the decisions of the Great National Assembly may be sentenced to six months' imprisonment. The Democratic opposition had fought hard to defeat the modification provisions, but was unsuccessful.

AMERICA NEEDS WAGE INCREASES

Auto workers, like workers in other industries, urgently need wage increases. That need is not a matter of slide-rule calculations. It takes no statistical table or elaborate charts to convince the average auto worker that what he gets for his work is not enough to cover what he has to pay out for food, clothing, shelter and a thin share of the other necessities of life. Today's pay envelope simply cannot be stretched out to meet the living needs of the average auto worker and his family.

This was fully recognized by the recent action of the International Executive Board of the UAW-CIO calling upon industry for substantial wage adjustments. The need for wage increases is the need of tens of millions of American workers for earnings high enough to provide that American standard of living which has been so much advertised and so infrequently obtained.

Wage increases are equally urgent for the nation as a whole.

Already the country is moving toward catastrophic new depression.

Even record breaking spending by industry and the richest 30% of American families has failed by $23 billion to make up for a $62 billion drop in government wartime expenditures.

The 50% of American families who had only 3% of the nation's savings are now losing those savings or falling into debt as the cost of living mounts. Today the lowest price passenger car costs more than the entire average annual earnings of 70% of the people.

Talk of recession in 1947 is widespread. A return to the prewar pattern of boom-and-bust is being set by the declining purchasing power of the majority of the people and by profits now coming to industry at a rate of $14 billion per year. The share of national income going to wages has dropped from 68% in wartime to 62.5% today.

Only substantial wage increases can check the nation's headlong descent into economic catastrophe.

Robbery by Inflation

EARLY in this year most workers in the auto, aircraft and agricultural industries received wage increases amounting to 18 or 18½c per hour. These increases, which were secured only after long months of battle against auto corporation executives, were recognized by government as essential to the preservation of minimum wage standards. By 1945, basic wages in American manufacturing — snagged down by the Little Steel Formula — had gone up by less than 20%, over January 1941, while the cost of living as calculated by conservative government economists had risen by about 33%. And CIO studies, taking into account declining quality and other factors forgotten in other checks on living costs, showed a rise of nearly 50%.

HOURS CHOPPED

When the war was over, slashes in weekly take-home pay swept through American industry as work hours were cut. This meant that the effect of living costs in cutting hourly rates could no longer be concealed by overtime pay and high weekly earnings.

COST-OF-LIVING ESTIMATES

	BLS	CIO
January, 1941	100.8	100.8
April, 1945	132.1	147.0
October, 1946	153.4	166.3
% Increase—January, 1941, to October, 1946	52.2	65.0

Steps had to be taken to bring wage rates back in line with living costs.

Accordingly, in the General Motors case and in the steel case, government and industry agreed to wage increases of more than 18c per hour to restore partially the cuts in workers' earning power created by higher living costs and the elimination of overtime work.

This was the most substantial wage victory in the history of American labor. Industry's program of postwar wage cuts was defeated and thrown back. But industry's program of postwar price increases—launched months before labor's call for wage increases—has been all too successful.

How Real Wages Were Cut

By October, government recognized that the cost of living was at least 52.2% above prewar.* The more accurate estimates of the CIO showed that the cost of living

* The BLS index of consumer prices for October stood at 148.4 per cent of the 1935-39 average. After CIO criticism this index was no longer called a cost-of-living index. The BLS itself added five points to bring the October figure closer to the real cost of living. 52.2 per cent is the increase from the January, 1941, level of 100.8 to the October level of 153.4.

PROPOSALS FOR RESTRICTIVE LABOR LEGISLATION

"Senator Joseph H. Ball of Minnesota, Republican, sponsor of a bill which drew hot fire from organized labor in the last Congress, announced... he would introduce a bill in the new Congress to outlaw the closed shop and he predicted it would be passed."

"Ball is one of those who look upon the election results as a mandate to restrict labor activities. He indicated his approach to a congressional test on the closed shop question would be to strip the legalization of the closed shop from the Wagner Act. His bill, he said, would seek to write into the law that membership in a labor union must not be a condition of employment."

"[He] believes that his anticlosed shop campaign has been strengthened by outlawing of the closed shop by voters in Arizona, Nebraska and South Dakota on Nov. 5. The American Federation of Labor is planning court tests of the new state legislation and is confident it will be declared unconstitutional.". . . .

(Raleigh Un. Herald, AFL. 11-14-46. ILNS item)

"A shrewdly organized plan, designed to appeal to many well-meaning people, has been put forward by Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.) in an effort to weaken drastically the power of unions to bargain for a better standard of living."

"If adopted by Congress, the Ball plan would:

"1. Prohibit industry-wide bargaining, striking at the heart of the big industrial unions, like Steel, Auto and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers."

"2. Outlaw union security by forbidding the union shop. Ball's suggestion is that non-union members would pay a 'pro-rata' share in organized shops, with their dues reduced by the amount ordinarily set aside for payment to the national union with which each local is affiliated. This, of course, would weaken the national union's work with Congress, its publication and research departments, etc."

"3. Pass the Case Bill, which would water down the Wagner Act, repeal the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act, and permit widespread suits against unions in federal courts. President Truman vetoed this bill in the last session of Congress."
"Ball's plan is to abolish the Wagner Act entirely...and to force unions into endless and costly legal tangles."
"'The sooner we abolish the Natl. Labor Relations Board entirely, and write a statute to permit anyone whose rights are affected to go into court directly, the better off we'll be,' he declared."
"Ball's proposal for bargaining shop by shop instead of on an industry basis would, if adopted, lead to time-consuming negotiations that would slow up production. In the thousands of shops covered by both CIO industrial union contracts and the craft contracts of the AFL, local labor and management representatives would wrangle piecemeal over problems that could be settled much more easily by national bargaining conferences."
"Relationships on an industry-wide basis that have achieved stability would be disrupted, and shop by shop the bargainers would have to work out confused agreements that would vary widely in pattern."
(CIO News, 11-18-46)

"...Most labor leaders in Washington...concede that strenuous efforts will be made to shackle workers and they're fully prepared to do the necessary amount of fighting....They're also counting heavily on the good sense of responsible leaders of the G.O.P. as well as on continued support from progressive Democrats who're still in Congress.",...
"As expected [Senator Ball] was the first Republican lawmaker to come forward with demands for straitjacket laws. The ballots had scarcely been counted when Ball—who played no part in the election—rushed to tell newspapers that the G.O.P. had received a 'mandate' at the polls to enact the kind of anti-labor legislation he's been championing." . . .
"Ball's 'mandate' claim drew a prompt rebuke from a prominent Senator of his own party—Wayne Morse, a liberal Republican from Oregon. Morse...insisted that on his campaign tours he found 'no evidence whatever that the people of this country have any desire for unfair labor legislation.'"
"'They recognize that industrial harmony cannot be produced by any attempt to beat down the legitimate rights of organized labor,' Morse told newsmen."
"He warned that the Republican party...'must guard against the legislative misrepresentations of those who would make it an anti-labor party.'"

"Has Labor Gone Too Far?"—title of article in Machinists Monthly Journal, Oct. '46.
(Excerpts): "The rush since VJ-day, on the one hand, to decontrol management, and on the other, to clamp extraordinary controls on labor, such as were proposed in the Case bill, for instance, raises the question whether the war had so altered the balance of power between labor and management as to justify that much difference in policy between them."...
"At the present time the complaint lodged against labor, particularly by the employer group, is simple. Labor allegedly mounted the saddle about ten years ago, when the National Labor Relations Act passed, and has ever since been riding high."
"After the war broke out, lacking responsibility, labor, according to this group, began to take advantage of everyone's difficulties in meeting the needs of the war, only to exact higher and higher wages and to feed its own lust for power."

"Now that the war is over, still reflecting the position of this group, labor is presumably preventing an orderly return to normal conditions."
[The Case Bill and Ball-Burton-Hatch bill, were echoes in Congress of this employer complaint.] . . . . . .
"Those who now deplore the growth of unions should ponder what would happen and what, as a matter of fact, did happen without them, or weak imitations of them, after the First World War."
"Compared with the turmoil that then stalked the country, the recent tieups were just pink teas. Even management with fewer and weaker unions to deal with was then more virulent in its opposition to them than now."
"Unions, the more benighted part of management then thought, were something exotic, something that did not belong in America. Until outlawed by the National Labor Relations Act, this part of management sponsored company unions as the 'American plan' in opposition to the regular unions which were by the same reasoning un-American." . . . . .
"Every change in the volume of business activities, up or down, produces tension."..."The point is that with any change in the volume of business, particularly the kind that occurs during a war, there are many reasons why everyone should be kicking against everyone else."
"There is no way of striking a balance between kicks. But in an economy of free enterprise, in which everything in the end is supposed to balance out in dollars and cents, is it at all out of the way to ask, how labor, alleged flushed with power during the two wars, came out of the two wars?"
[Real wages, after allowing for changes in the cost of living, stood at 105 in 1918 as compared with 108 in 1913. Record not yet all in for Second World War.]
"The balanced judgment of the Committee for Economic Development representing the more enlightened part of management, concludes, in its volume on Jobs and Markets, that if overtime premiums, night premiums and upgrading were eliminated, real earnings at the end of 1945 would probably be where they were in 1939.". . . .

"What the National Association of Manufacturers regards as a formula for building 'good labor relations' was unveiled a few weeks ago by Ira Mosher, chairman of the board of the NAM. Mosher presented the program at a rally of West Coast employers."
"Under his program, the anti-trust laws would be amended to cover labor; the Norris-LaGuardia act would be modified to permit issuance of injunctions, and the Wagner Act would be revamped to subject unions to prosecution for 'unfair labor practices.'"
"Also, machinery would be established for compulsory settlement of jurisdictional disputes, with penalties for violation; boycotts would be outlawed, and employers would be given full 'freedom of speech' to say what they please about unions when their employes are considering the advisability of forming a union."
"Mosher gravely declared that these proposals are 'not anti-labor.' They would, he told the manufacturers seriously, 'bring labor and management to the collective bargaining table on an equal footing.'"

ON FREE ENTERPRISE

"Free Enterprise—But Not a Blank Check!"
Editorial, Journeymen Plumb. and Steamf. Journal, AFL, Nov. 1946. (Excerpts):
"One of the most evident results of World War II is the change throughout the world in the way most people earn their living. In other words, economic systems are being changed...Today, the system of free enterprise is the exception rather than the rule. The American business man today cannot enjoy the complete freedom he desires anywhere in the world. In America alone—with its watered-down, war-time controls—free enterprise retains some resemblance of its pre-war quality. Furthermore, as rapidly as controls are lifted—and they are being lifted—American economic life moves toward its prewar freedom. Business men realize, for the most part, that the trend is against free enterprise in the other parts of the world, and they are vigorously working to keep Americans convinced that free enterprise is 'the American way.'"
"Most trade unionists will probably agree with the business men that the system of free enterprise should be the American way—but these organized workers are not signing a blank check."
"Trade unionists do not have to be 'sold' on the advantages of free enterprise; they have enjoyed them. They have also suffered from its shortcomings. But workingmen have been able to do something about the shortcomings of free enterprise through self-organization and collective bargaining. Hence, as long as the right of workingmen to organize is not denied; as long as trade unionists may freely bargain collectively with their employers; and as long as our economic system freely permits changes brought about by collective bargaining—then the weight of evidence will convince American trade unionists to support free enterprise."
"Originally trade unionism had no place in the system of free enterprise.". . .
"The really important fact about the growth of trade unionism in America is that it taught workingmen how to protect themselves by their own activities.". . . . ."Free enterprise has taught workingmen—by the 'hard way'—how they can participate in the shaping of their economic lives. That lesson was very expensive and covers many a sordid page in the history of America. But we are free to think, to speak, to assemble, to organize, and to direct the economic system of which we are a real part.". . .
"But let no one make the mistake that free enterprise means anything less than what has been said above. We are not signing a blank check....The right to form unions, to bargain collectively and to participate actively in the economy must be a part of the system of free enterprise.". . . .

PROSPERITY AND ARMAMENTS

"Does Prosperity Depend on Armament?"
Article, by Pres. Harvey W. Brown, Machinists. (Excerpts):
"Barron's National Business and Financial Weekly, Sep. 9, 1946, issue makes the following announcement:
> "'An armament boom is the only ultimate major alternative now visible to a decline in business until it falls within a range of fluctuation around a 'normal' composed of replacement demand plus slow, natural growth. Such an armament program in the long run appears inevitable if we don't want to commit national suicide, but it isn't in sight at present.'"

"In other words, financial and business experts are contending there can be no continuity of operation of our industries and that abnormal unemployment can not be avoided, unless we have periodical armament booms. If such is a

"Barron's Weekly has wide circulation and is accepted as an authority on business trends by investors. We can agree with Barron's that if certain strong financial groups have their way, armament booms and wars are inevitable, but there is another way for our economy to operate without business depressions and periodical slaughtering and maiming of millions of men on battlefields. When wages or workers' earnings represent amounts that will enable the toilers to buy the products and services of industry and not be computed on the basis of living costs, there will be steady employment for all....". . .
"If our economy is to be stable and free from business depressions, the working people, of necessity, must receive a greater share of the benefits arising out of improved methods of doing the work for society.". . .
(Machinists Mo. Journal, Nov. 1946)

"Like all Americans who have to work for a living, our members are being unmercifully squeezed between extortionate prices and extortionate taxes. The enormous current American expenditures for armaments have a very direct bearing on the average American worker's problem of bringing home enough money to feed, clothe and house himself and his family.". . .
[Cites figures on government expenditures for armaments: 13 billion dollars a year for current military expenditures and for new armaments. The cost of retiring the debts of past wars, of pensions and the like, is in addition to this 13 billions.] . . . .
"Big business, which customarily complains about taxes, makes no complaints against huge federal armaments expenditures. In the first place, big business profiteers immensely in supplying armaments both in peace and in war. In the second place, although the overwhelming tax load on the working people has been only insignificantly reduced, corporations have received huge handouts in tax refunds and in sweeping reductions in corporation taxes.". . .
"The question of armaments reduction raised in UN has a very practical bearing upon efforts to make your pay cover your expenses."
(UE News, CIO, 11-9-46. Editorial.)

UNION WAGE POLICIES

"President Philip Murray of the United Steelworkers of America, announced that the union will demand wage increases for its 900,000 members."
"He condemned, 'reactionaries', who, he said, 'are hellbent on destroying our balanced economy', and declared the wage increases in steel 'will not be asked out of a spirit of vengefulness.'"
"American labor is entitled to a wage increase now. The United Steelworkers are going to ask for that wage increase when they meet the employers.". . .
[He said], "American industry...is making a sufficient amount of money to pay a very healthy wage increase without increasing the cost of living."
"The basis of our contentions in that regard are predicated wholly on the fact that American industry is able to absorb wage increases without increasing the prices of their commodities.". . . .
"This nation need not have any depression. If industry, through collective bargaining stabilizes purchasing power by putting higher pay in the workers' envelopes, there is no need for any depression," he said. . . . .
(Steel Labor, CIO, Nov. 1946)

"The CIO Auto Workers will demand substantial wage increases from all employers whose union contracts have wage reopening clauses, the UAW executive board voted at its Cleveland meeting this week."
"The board did not name a specific figure it would demand but said in a wage policy statement:
"'It is the intention of the union to make every effort across the bargaining table with management to arrive at an agreement on a wage increase adequate to meet the needs of the workers and the nation."
[Taking note of "complete destruction of effective price control"], under "these circumstances we have but one clear course--to demand a wage increase that will provide the workers and their families with a decent standard of living.'"
"The union statement emphasized that 'even at the present low level of production' substantial wage increases can be paid without any increase in the prices of cars or replacement parts.'"
(CIO News 10-28-46)

United Rubber Workers: "A wage increase demand of 26¢ an hour in the nation's rubber and allied products industries was unanimously approved Oct. 28 by the interim International Policy Committee of the United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum & Plastic Workers of America, CIO...."
"The demand is 'subject to upward revision in the event that any further substantial increases occur in the cost of living between now and the time the settlement is made...'"
"An effective date of Nov. 1, 1946, was set for the demand, to provide a backstop for retroactive increases should negotiations between the union and the companies be prolonged."
[Negotiations to be on a 'Big Four' basis in accordance with terms of an agreement signed Mar. 2, 1946, between the union and the Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and U.S. Rubber companies, according to Pres. Buckmaster of URW.] Said Pres. Buckmaster, the Policy Committee ordered "that the process of collective bargaining be fully exhausted and vigorously pursued to achieve a settlement of this wage demand to the end that strike action be avoided if at all possible." (United Rubber Wk., Nov. 1946)

"The Southern wage differential must be wiped out," according to Van A. Bittner, director of CIO Southern organization campaign....It is one of our goals you should be thinking about and talking about in your local unions. There is absolutely no reason for such a differential."
(Steel Labor, Nov. 1946)

Textile Workers Union, CIO: "Three hundred delegates from 20 states voted at a Textile Workers wage conference at Boston Nov. 8, to demand a general wage increase of 20¢ an hour from 158 woolen and worsted mills."
"The woolen and worsted workers are the third industrial division of the union to formulate wage demands. Northern cotton-rayon workers asked for a general 15¢ increase late last month and a few days later synthetic yarn workers demanded 18¢ an hour across the board. Southern cotton-rayon workers will draw up their demands in Atlanta Dec. 8."

HIGHLIGHTS IN THE FALL LES PROGRAM

FIRST NORTHWEST FARMERS' AND WORKERS' EDUCATION CONFERENCE - Glenn J. Talbott, President of the North Dakota Farmers Union, who was the opening speaker at the Northwest Farmers' and Workers' Education Conference, held in Minneapolis under the auspices of LES in September, 1946, said that this conference could be a milestone in farmer-labor relationships. Such a comment on the significance of this pioneer educational project stemmed in part from the broad participation in the conference of farmers and workers from six states. Mr. Talbott no doubt referred also to the vitality of the discussion and to the enthusiastic plans made for continued educational work, especially that educational activity which will strengthen the understanding between farmers and workers.

Two hundred and fifty delegates assembled in Minneapolis for these two days' meetings. They came from the farmers' unions in six states (Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, Iowa, Montana and Wisconsin) and from trade unions in 15 to 20 cities and towns in these states. The 150 delegates from cities represented 50 local unions affiliated with 25 international unions. Of the non-city workers, about 60 came from state farmers' unions. The balance were members of cooperatives. Some attending were in charge of educational work in their organizations. Most of the rest held other official positions.

Mr. Talbott, in his opening address, stressed full employment and international cooperation as the two great needs of the city and farm working people. He pointed out that the farmers' market is the worker's stomach, and that it takes a full pocketbook from plentiful jobs at high pay for the worker to buy what he needs, thus using the farmer's produce.

During the sessions following Mr. Talbott's talk, the delegates participated in the discussion groups of their choice. The groups were on the following subjects: Prices and Wages, Inflation, Full Employment, Cooperatives, Legislation, Political Action in the Local Community, Community Relations, Veterans' Affairs, and Foreign Policy and Peace.

Various sessions were held to demonstrate and make possible the discussion of educational techniques and materials available for educational work. Suggestions were made for joint work on the part of the farmers' and workers' groups present.

Junice Dalen, Educational Director of the Minnesota Farmers Union, was chairman of the Conference Committee, which consisted also of leaders of AFL and CIO unions and Railroad Brotherhoods.

MIDWEST WORKERS' EDUCATION CONFERENCE - Another important fall event was this year's Midwest Conference, which was held in Milwaukee, on November 2nd and 3rd, under the chairmanship of Rexford Schnaitter, LES Board member. The findings, compiled under the chairmanship of Annetta Dieckmann, form the basis for the following summary of this vital conference.

From first to last this 1946 Midwest Workers' Education Conference recognized economic and political setbacks in the present social scene. It was recognized that the battle of inflation is lost, and that after inflation depression is sure to come whether postponed by six months or five years. It was also predicted that labor would be defeated in the polls on November 5th, and that with the election of a reactionary Congress the forces of reaction would gain in strength. Significantly, however, this Conference was not characterized by discouragement but rather by a buoyant spirit. Someone pointed out that present setbacks are a stimulus to education. You have to be disturbed to think.

The educational strategy which was developed by this Conference to meet this situation included six foci:

(1) Security is the prepared position to which we must retreat. The workers' education for such an objective includes discussion of and action for public works, especially housing, health insurance, hospitalization plans, guaranteed employment, annual wage, unemployment compensation, and dismissal wages. Such social security is to be achieved in part by political action and in part through the process of collective bargaining.

(2) An understanding of the relationship of wages and prices is fundamental. Workers' education, therefore, must stress the ability of industry to pay, increased productivity, and technological advance. It must also include consumer education, since prices are as important as wages. The consumer education should include information on how to get the most for one's money, for example, by an understanding of standards as provided for by the Consumers Union and an understanding of the provisions in health insurance policies. It must further include experience in consumers' cooperatives. It should also include legislative action with reference to housing, health insurance, anti-trust legislation, regional planning, i.e. Missouri Valley Authority, taxation, and fiscal policy.

(3) Technical improvement in the functioning of trade unions is very important at this time. The workshops at this Conference included a discussion on how to have a good union meeting, how to use grievance machinery effectively, how to prepare for collective bargaining, industrial engineering machinery, how to deal with government agencies, and the utilization of community services.

(4) Workers' education is needed to improve the public relations of the labor movement. Price increases which are popularly believed to be due to wage increases and strikes, which have been utilized to get wage increases, have made labor unpopular. It is important not only for trade unionists, but for the public in general, to be educated as to the ability of business to pay. Fact finding was urged at this Conference as an effective democratic technique for the settlement of disputes without strikes.

(5) It is important that the rank and file of local unions be informed as to long range labor policies nationally conceived. As industry-wide labor agreements replace local agreements it becomes more and more important to interpret these agreements locally so as to insure the loyal support which comes only from conviction.

(6) Stimulate imagination as to the potentialities of the economy.

The development of workers' education to meet such a challenge is most encouraging. Dr. Ware says there is a "Gold Rush" of universities to aid in workers' education. Government agencies are expanding their services and a significant number of local labor schools have recently been set up. The work of the education departments of international unions is becoming increasingly effective. Allies such as American Labor Education Service and the workers' summer schools continue their excellent work. The difficulties of the present situation, therefore, are matched by the resources.

An important aspect of this Conference was its easy contacts with the labor movement in other countries and faraway places. This was made possible by Henry Rutz's presentation of the "Rebirth of German Labor", by Arnold Zander's account of developments in Scandinavian countries, by Professor Feinsinger's casual statement that he was flying to Honolulu to work on the strike of sugar workers during the coming week, by the appeal for a labor library in Manila, and by the presence of a guest from England. One could wish that we might have had someone from Latin America and the Soviet Union for workers' education is a resource for the development of a sense of solidarity among the peoples of all the world.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING - As part of its program of leadership training, LES has conducted a number of seminars for those newly engaged in workers' education. The most recent one was held this summer at the white collar workers' school in Lake Forest, Illinois.

As another phase of the program, an institute for experienced leaders in workers' education in the Middle West was held preliminary to the Midwest Conference. Here, the Director of LES gave a survey of workers' education in the United States, in connection with which there are so many new developments today. Three discussion sessions were held: the first a public relations workshop with George T. Guernsey, Assistant Director of the CIO Department of Education, chairing; the second, a meeting for the purpose of evaluating educational techniques, with special emphasis on the problems of developing prodemocratic attitudes, with Walter Sassaman, Regional Educational Representative of the U.A.W.-CIO, as chairman, and Dr. Goodwin Watson, Professor of Education at Teachers College, as consultant; the third, relating to methods of strengthening educational services offered to unions in small communities, chaired by Harry P. Bovshow, State Representative of the Wisconsin Regional Office of the ILGWU.

WHITE COLLAR DEVELOPMENTS - An important part of the LES educational services to trade unions and other workers' groups consists of meeting special needs from time to time. Work with white collar groups has been emphasized by LES for some time, one phase of the program being the resident Summer School held each year in Chicago. This year the School represented in its student body a wider geographical sweep than in former years, including communities from California to New York, and from Minnesota to Georgia; and the high calibre of the students who came from all over the country justified the faith of the recruiting committee in asking Marguerite Gilmore to travel to the Pacific Coast this year to contact new groups there.

The wide geographical span represented in the student body is also reflected in local study projects and institutes now being carried on. One institute is being organized in Denver, Colorado, through the cooperation with the Summer School, by a number of trade unions, both AFL and CIO, and various community groups. This conference, to be held in January, will discuss such questions as the plight of the white collar worker today, minimum wage and health legislation, propaganda and public opinion, and the need to interpret to the community the position and role of the white collar worker.

Over the week-end of November 23rd and 24th, an institute was held in Richmond, organized by the Office and Professional Workers' group, under the joint sponsorship of the YWCA, the Southern School for Workers, and the Summer School for Office Workers. This is part of a year 'round study and action program of the Office and Professional Workers' group, which will this year include a consumers' resistance program, work for a state minimum wage, and efforts toward new job opportunities for white and Negro white collar workers.

SOUTHERN SCHOOL - The Southern School, through the work of its Director, Brownie Lee Jones, plays an important part in the success of the project just described, as it does in so many labor education programs in the South. Since no story of the field work of the Southern School was carried in the last Bulletin, it will be of special interest to our readers to know that the Southern School has placed two additional staff members in the field to meet the many demands for institutes and local workers' education programs.

LES AND MINORITY PROBLEMS - LES is more than a series of educational services. It serves as a laboratory where experiments are conducted and problems are analyzed as a result of which new methods are recommended. As our Bulletin readers know, today LES is emphasizing educational programs which relate to the strengthening of the position of minority groups, and for over a year LES has been working in New Jersey in cooperation with the CIO of that State. Here, Marie Algor, as the LES Field Worker in charge of the New Jersey Minority Project, is functioning as an educational assistant of the CIO State Industrial Council, with special responsibilities for education on minority problems. The role of LES is to stimulate, help organize, and develop state and local leadership in developing programs for prodemocratic attitudes, thus helping to develop indigenous projects that become a functioning part of the normal life of the union.

Some time ago LES worked in two selected New Jersey communities, Camden and Trenton. Recently LES has been functioning on a statewide basis. In addition two new projects are now being organized, one in Passaic and one in Middlesex County, where once more community projects and special programs for selected unions are being worked on.

The story of the series of conferences on minority problems carried on by LES, together with a discussion of methods of the conference technique as an educational tool, is told in the pamphlet OVERCOMING PREJUDICE recently published by LES.

LES AND WARE STUDY - A more recent publication, representing another area in which LES has special interest at the present time, is LABOR EDUCATION IN UNIVERSITIES, by Caroline F. Ware. This study, made by Dr. Ware for LES, of university centers of workers' education in all parts of the country, is now available from LES. (Price, $1.00).

In her introduction Miss Ware briefly outlines the history of workers' education in this country. Next she analyzes the problems involved in university participation in workers' education. The objectives of universities in labor education are well described and carefully differentiated with illustrative material drawn from each program. The author's experience as teacher in universities as well as in workers' schools makes her approach to "content and method" an authoritative one. This twofold range of experience also lends validity to her discussion on the amount of control labor should exercise on the university. She also describes in detail teaching personnel, recruiting, financing and control, and explains the relationship of labor education to other university activities as well as to other resources for workers' education. The appendices describe current programs of workers' education in colleges and universities, and a directory of those conducting such programs. The final chapter contains findings and conclusions.

NEW LABOR EXTENSION BILL - Of vital interest to all those in the field of labor education is the work of the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education, sponsoring a bill in Congress, which would make available public funds for use in developing workers' education activities. The Bill for a Labor Extension Service introduced in Congress last July will be introduced again early in January. This Bill has been endorsed at recent conventions of the AFL and the CIO. Requests for information on the campaign to secure passage of the Bill and on services offered by the Committee should be addressed to the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education, 902-A 20th Street, N.W., Washington, 6, D.C.

LES is cooperating in the work of this Committee and is emphasizing in its program the study of methods by which cooperation with universities in the development and control of new publicly supported projects can be built on and reflect those techniques and standards in workers' education which have grown out of the experience of agencies long working in this field.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS - Although these pages do not permit the telling of the full story of this fall's work - we cannot pass over:

The recent fall issue of the GUIDE, edited by Orlie Pell.

The travels of the members of the Board, which have been all over the world, from Japan where Mark Starr went as Labor Education Consultant to the Supreme Command of the Allied Powers, to Germany, where Ted Silvey is now conducting an investigation of scientific personnel methods and industrial training programs for the Department of Commerce. The LES staff have remained in this country, but many field trips have been made. Included are Marguerite Gilmore's trip to Denver to help plan the white collar institute and her six-week visit to Minnesota to plan the Northwest Conference. Eleanor Coit has traveled to Minneapolis, Milwaukee, and Chicago, for LES conferences; to Urbana, Illinois, to visit the new Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations; to St. Louis to consult with Eleanor Emerson, making a study there for LES; to Richmond for the White Collar Institute; to Atlantic City for the CIO Convention; and to Providence to act as a resource for the Panel on Workers' Education in connection with the Annual Conference of the Association of Governing Boards of State Universities and Allied Institutions.

The successful Christmas Festival and Bazaar was held December 6th and 7th at the League House, with Lucile Kohn, Josephine Wise, and Fannie Turkel, and the active Bazaar Committee doing their usual outstanding service.

We suggest that you may wish to make LES the Christmas gift of your membership - or, if you already belong, that you may want to make a friend a Christmas gift of an LES membership.

WORLD WAR II

Your Benefits as a Dependent of a Deceased Serviceman or Veteran

Prepared by

YANKS SERVICE BUREAU of THE CHICAGO SUN

119 WEST WASHINGTON STREET • CHICAGO 2, ILLINOIS

WORLD WAR II

Your benefits as a dependent of a man who was killed or died in service . . .

ACCRUED MILITARY PAY

Back pay and allowances due an officer or enlisted man at the time of his death will be paid to the qualifying dependent upon application. Application blanks will be sent to the dependent.

SIX-MONTH DEATH GRATUITY

An amount equal to six months pay, including compensation of every kind and character received by the serviceman at the time of his death, except rental and subsistence allowances, will be paid to the qualifying beneficiary.

SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

Qualifying dependents of deceased servicemen who were covered under this Program may be eligible for payments. Consult your local Social Security Board.

NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE

If you have been named the beneficiary of the serviceman's life insurance, monthly payments will be made to you based on your age at the time of his death. You will be sent the necessary forms for this and payment will be automatic . . . you need not apply.

PENSIONS

Widows and children of servicemen whose death was a result of disease or injury incurred in or aggravated by active military service, and not the result of misconduct, are eligible for a monthly pension upon application. Widow's pension terminates upon remarriage. Dependent parents, if they can establish financial dependency, may be eligible.

BURIAL OF DECEASED

If a serviceman dies in active service, the Army or the Navy will prepare his remains and take care of the transportation to the place designated by the legal next of kin. (In the case of death overseas, the remains will not be returned until after the end of the war.) Upon arrival, an amount not to exceed $50 may be allowed for private interment. A flag is provided for all military personnel who die in service. This is used to drape the casket and after military funeral, is given to the next of kin.

Headstones will be furnished upon application and burial may be in one of the national cemeteries, where perpetual care is assured. If arrangements are made at the time of the burial of the serviceman, a wife may be interred in the same grave upon her death.

PERSONAL EFFECTS

All recovered and identified effects of the deceased will be returned to the next of kin.

AWARDS

Medals, awards, etc. may be given posthumously to the next of kin.

INCOME TAX

Six-month death gratuity, mustering-out pay, pensions, insurance payments, that portion of dependency allowance paid by the Government, and payments to a beneficiary under any of the laws relating to veterans are exempt from taxation.

All outstanding unpaid back taxes and those for the current year of men killed in action are cancelled. You should file the return, however, attaching to it a notarized statement of the serviceman's death. Returns should be filed by the 15th of March following the year of the serviceman's death.

PAYMENTS NOT SUBJECT TO SEIZURE

Payments made to beneficiaries under any of the laws relating to veterans are exempt from the claims of creditors, and are not liable to attachment or seizure.

DEPOSITS AND WAR BONDS

Deposits made by the deceased may be recovered by the next of kin. Bonds purchased will be turned over to the beneficiary. If none is named, bonds will be included in the estate of the deceased.

MEDICAL CARE

Widows of deceased Navy and Marine Corps personnel are entitled to the same medical care as dependents. There are no provisions for dependents of deceased Army personnel.

CIVIL SERVICE PREFERENCE

Widows of men who die in service are given a preference in Civil Service examinations—Federal, State, City and County.

DOMICILIARY CARE

Is provided by some States.

EDUCATION

Various institutions, including State facilities, offer scholarships to the children of men who died in service.

TRANSPORTATION

Dependents, household and personal effects of any person on active duty officially reported as injured, dead, missing or captured may be returned to their homes at Government expense.

Your benefits as a dependent of a veteran who dies after discharge

ACCRUED PENSIONS AND RETIREMENT PAY

Pensions and Retirement Pay due a veteran at the time of his death, will be paid to his next of kin.

SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

Qualifying dependents of deceased veterans who were covered under this Program may be eligible for payments. Consult your local Social Security Board.

NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE

If you have been named the beneficiary of an ex-serviceman's life insurance, monthly payments will be made to you, based on your age at the time of his death.

UNPAID MUSTERING-OUT PAY

Widows, children or surviving parents (in the order listed), are eligible to receive the mustering-out pay, either in full or in part, which was not paid to the qualified veteran, if his death occurred after discharge.

PENSIONS

Widows and children of veterans whose death was a result of disease or injury incurred in or aggravated by active service and not the result of misconduct, are eligible for a monthly pension upon application. Widow's pension terminates upon remarriage. Dependent parents, if they can establish financial dependency, may be eligible.

Widows and children may be eligible for a pension if the veteran dies from disabilities not incurred during service, but had a service-connected disability at the time of his death, if their yearly income is not in excess of $1,000 in the case of single dependent or $2,500 for more than one, and if the veteran received other than a dishonorable discharge.

BURIAL OF DECEASED

The Veterans' Administration will pay up to $100 for burial, funeral and transportation of the deceased veteran, who was not discharged dishonorably from service. Claims for reimbursement must be made within 2 years after permanent burial. A burial flag is provided and will be given the next of kin after the service. Headstones will be furnished upon application and burial may be in one of the national cemeteries, where perpetual care is assured. A veteran's widow, his minor children and unmarried adult daughters may also be buried in the national cemetery.

PERSONAL EFFECTS

If the veteran dies in a Veterans' Administration Facility, his effects will be forwarded to the person indicated by him at the time of admission. If he has not filled out Form 1170 for this purpose, his effects may go to the executor of the will, if he has made a will. If not, the effects will be sold and the funds therefrom subject to reclamation by a qualified dependent within 5 years.

INCOME TAX

Pensions, insurance payments and payments to a beneficiary under any of the laws relating to veterans are exempt from taxation.

A tax return for the deceased should be filed by March 15 of the year following his death.

PAYMENTS NOT SUBJECT TO SEIZURE

Payments made to beneficiaries under any of the laws, relating to veterans are exempt from the claims of creditors, and are not liable to attachment or seizure.

REVIEW OF DISCHARGE

If a veteran has received a discharge without honor, or a dishonorable discharge (except those given by general court martial), his next of kin may file an application for review of this discharge.

CIVIL SERVICE PREFERENCE

Widows of veterans are given a preference in Civil Service examinations—Federal, State, City and County, if the veteran received an honorable discharge.

DOMICILIARY CARE

May be provided on a State level.

EDUCATION

Various institutions, including State facilities, offer scholarships to the children of deceased veterans.

(By and large the same benefits accrue to dependents of servicewomen and ex-servicewomen)

Arbitration
Labor Disputes

First it must be underscored that organized labor welcomes constructive proposals for providing ways and means of implementing and improving our present procedures to encourage conciliation and voluntary arbitration to avoid and diminish work stoppages caused by strikes and other forms of industrial strife.

The conference for labor and management called by President Truman and Secretary of Labor Schwellenback will have the full cooperation of all branches of organized labor.

An example of legislation which is designed to perfect and extend our present machinery for the amicable adjustment of labor disputes but without destroying or restricting labor's hard won gains and basic rights, is Senate Bill 1419 sponsored by Senators McMahon, Hayden, Thomas and Turmell. It was introduced on September 20, 1945 and is called the National Mediation and Arbitration Act of 1945. It offers a field for new remedial legislation which will bring about better industrial relations but not through coersion and without interference with labor'r right to organize and to bargain collectively.

Briefly described, the bill:

1. Empowers the President to appoint special boards of inquiry to hear the facts respecting any labor controversy and report back to the President so that if and when he deems it desirable, the facts may be made available to the public.

2. A Mediation and Conciliation Division is created in the Department of Labor to be headed by an administrator to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

3. A new independent agency in the executive branch of the Government is created to be known as the "United States Board of Arbitration" composed of three members to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Board is given broad powers to determine all disputes which are submitted for voluntary arbitration. The award of the board of arbitration shall be final and conclusive upon the parties but with a limited right of court review.

Whatever differences of opinion may develop regarding the mechanics set up in the bill, we believe its main proposal that an independent board of arbitrators be set up with full power finally to settle all industrial disputes which are voluntarily submitted to this board will receive wide approval from management, labor and the general public. Such a board, headed by men who are outstanding experts in this field, and who are men of high character with a reputation for fairness, will inspire confidence and stimulate the desire to settle industrial disputes by arbitration rather than by strike or lockout. The board, through the high calibre of its members, should soon become efficient and expert in this specialized field and this will make not only for just and fair awards, but also for speedy settlements. The usual obstacles to arbitration as a method for the settlement of disputes have always been (a) the inability by those in dispute to agree on an arbitrator in whom both sides had confidence and (b) the delay involved in such a proceeding.

Another device set up in this bill which we believe may prove of considerable value is the provision for "the boards of inquiry". These boards are empowered to ascertain for the President the facts and circumstances regarding any labor controversy and the contentions of both sides. The President in his discretion may then make them available to the public. Public opinion formed on the basis of the real facts and not on one sided and prejudiced newspaper and radio items, can exert a legitimate pressure on both sides to exhaust every effort to reach a peaceable settlement. At present, we have no impartial agency which can inform the public of the real facts and merits of labor disputes. We confidently assert that the possibility of such disclosure to the public will eliminate much of the "jockeying for position" and the setting up of unreasonable demands by either side which now often prevail. But more important it will work to compel the recognition by both sides to such a dispute of the status and functions of the other. It will tend to eliminate false claims and name calling and smears which often prevent a true appraisal of what is involved and the merits of the controversy. It should go far in promoting real collective bargaining and to accord to the union the important place in industry which it must have as the representative of the workers in a true partnership between industry and labor.

The secret of better labor relations is an open one. They depend upon three factors. 1. Mutual repsect. 2. A determination to cooperate in good faith to settle speedily disputes as they arise, in a just manner. 3. The solutions which are thus reached must also be consistent not alone with the best interests of the parties to the dispute but must also be in the general public interests.

It is obvious that the task of complying with these principles is not an easy one. It requires real statesmanship and expert specialized knowledge. Management has the pool from which it can select representatives capable of presenting its side. Labor through the unions has equal means to develop those qualified to act as the representative for its side.

CONFERENCE CALL

All over the world today the common man is rising to claim his rightful place in a just and democratic society. The growth of the labor movement out of the needs and aspirations of working men and women in the South is one manfestation of this claim. In the presence of this manifestation a group of religious leaders in the South are recognizing their responsibility and that of the institutions they serve.

We feel that in labor's assertion of its right to organize, religious leaders face an unprecedented opportunity to put into practice their respective faiths, by interpreting labor's struggle in accord with the will of God for a social order of divine justice and an abundant life for all, and by banding together to effect this purpose. At this moment, Religion and Labor definitely have a common responsibility in building the Brotherhood of Man.

We invite you to attend the Southern Religion and Labor Conference at the Butler Street YMCA in Atlanta, February 4-5, 1947, at which churchmen and labor representatives will meet to formulate a program of action.

AN OPEN LETTER ON THE USE OF INJUNCTIONS AGAINST LABOR

TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE:

The reappearance of the discredited labor injunction on the industrial scene has been a sinister development in labor's nationwide fight for a general wage rise. Injunctions are being issued on such an unprecedented scale and with such disregard for anti-injunction laws as to indicate a reversion to the "government by injunction" of a bygone day.

The use of the labor injunction as an anti-union weapon was once condemned by a U.S. Senate Committee because of the "abuses of judicial power" involved. Nationwide denunciation of those abuses over a period of many years led to the passage of the Federal Anti-Injunction Act (Norris-LaGuardia Act) in 1932 and to the adoption of similar measures in more than fifteen states. Today this substantial body of statute law is threatened with extinction through a studied program of judicial evasion and nullification.

The labor injunction has been universally recognized as a strikebreaking device. But injunctions never settle labor disputes -- these can only be settled around the conference table, in the give-and-take of collective bargaining negotiations entered upon in good faith as required by federal law under the National Labor Relations Act (Wagner Act).

The issuance of a labor injunction negates the entire concept of collective bargaining. It places the public police power on the side of the employer. It tips the scale of public opinion unfairly against the union by its implicit suggestion that the union has somehow violated the law.

The most flagrant example of repudiation of the collective bargaining process as a means of settling a wage dispute appears in the wholesale injunction proceedings resorted to by General Electric and Westinghouse in a last ditch fight to break the strike of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, C.I.O. These two giant corporations alone of American big business have refused to make any offer of a wage increase in conformity with the present national wage pattern. Instead of seeking a solution at the conference table, these companies, since the start of the strike, have sought almost twenty injunctions in various parts of the country.

Injunctions have been issued despite the fact that the traditional bases of injunctive relief have been uniformly lacking -- there has been neither violence nor damage to company property. Plants have been safeguarded by maintenance and protection employees who, whether union members or non-union workers, have been authorized by the union to pass its picket lines in order to protect company equipment and plants.

The responsibility for the situation created by the issuance of injunctions must rest both upon the corporations which request them and upon the courts which grant them. High handed judges must bear the onus of helping to create the bitter antagonism on the part of the workers and the feeling of contempt for legal processes.

We condemn the use of injunctions against labor. Such injunctions make no contribution toward a constructive solution of industrial disputes. They tend to substitute conflict and ill-will for orderly, equitable and established methods of solving labor-management differences. They have once been outlawed from the American industrial scene. We cannot now allow the corporations to revive them through judicial fiat.

To All Local Unions

Order Creating:
UAW-CIO
Fair Practices Committee

PREAMBLE

Believing as we do that the trade union movement in America cannot hope to grow to its full stature as long as any segment of its membership is subjected to treatment different from that accorded all other members; and recognizing that discrimination against minority groups exists in our movement, notwithstanding our vigorous educational efforts and the acknowledged leadership of our Union in the fight to stamp out discrimination from American life; and, with full consciousness of the serious questions of seniority, wage and work differentials and the other attributes of unfair treatment which are bound to pose pressing organizational problems for our Union in the re-conversion and post war period, we do hereby direct attention to the declared constitutional objective of the UAW-CIO, "To unite in one organization, regardless of religion, race, creed, color, political affiilation or nationality, all employees under the jurisdiction of the International Union. To this end, the following program of positive action is adopted:

I. Fair Practices Committee

The UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee is hereby created. The Committee shall consist of not less than three nor more than five members of the International Executive Board appointed by the International President with the approval of the International Executive Board. In the event the International President is not appointed to the Committee he shall serve as an ex-officio member of the Committee.

II. Duties of the Committee

The UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee is authorized to and shall:

1. Receive and investigate, in accordance with the procedure herein set forth, all complaints of alleged violation of this International Union's anti-discrimination policy. It may require the attendance of any union member or officer as a witness, conduct hearings, take testimony and shall present its findings and recommendations to the International Executive Board. All such findings and recommendations of the Committee shall be subject to approval and enforcement by the International Executive Board.
2. Cooperate with and actively assist the International Education Department in all educational activities of this International Union which may have as their purpose the enlightenment of our membership concerning the policy of the International Union respecting discrimination.

R. J. THOMAS, President UAW-CIO and ex-officio member UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee.

ARNOLD ATWOOD, UAW-CIO Executive Board member and member UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee.

RICHARD T. LEONARD, UAW-CIO Executive Board member and member UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee.

3. Carry out such mandates and resolutions of the International Conventions of this Union pertaining to matters specially affecting minority groups in this Union, as shall be referred to it by the International Executive Board.
4. Serve in an advisory capacity to all departments, divisions and subdivisions of this International Union and all local unions, on matters specially affecting minority groups in this Union.
5. Formulate and recommend to the International President for consideration of the International Executive Board, policies designed to achieve the declared objects of this Union as expressed in its Constitution and in the foregoing preamble.
6. Utilize the services and facilities of all departments, divisions and subdivisions of this International Union and such voluntary and uncompensated services as may from time to time be needed in carrying out its functions.
7. Transmit to the International President, for submission to the International Executive Board, a quarterly report of the Committee's activities during the preceding quarter.
8. Transmit to the International President, for submission to the International Convention, an annual summary of the Committee's activities during the preceding year.
9. Make such reasonable rules, subject to approval by the International Executive Board, as may be required for the proper performance of the foregoing functions.

III. Executive Director

The International President, with the approval of the International Executive Board, shall appoint an Executive Director of the Committee and such assistants as may be necessary. The Executive Director shall be an ex-officio member of the Committee but shall have no vote in the Committee's deliberations.

IV. Regional Director's Responsibility

Regional Directors are charged with the responsibility of preventing any violation of the International Union's anti-discrimination policy in their region. Each Regional Director shall designate a member(s) of his staff who (in addition to his (their) other duties) shall serve as regional investigator(s) for the Committee in such region in all cases coming within the jurisdiction of the Committee.

V. Procedure for Discrimination Cases

(A) The procedure to be followed by any member of this International Union desiring to bring a case of alleged violation of this International Union's anti-discrimination policy to the attention of the International Executive Board, shall be the same as the procedure now existing for all other appeals by members to this Board, except that

(1) Upon receipt of the appeal, the International Secretary-Treasurer shall immediately refer the matter to the Regional Director for the region involved.

(2) The Regional Director, upon receipt of the appeal, shall immediately make a complete investigation of the case and attempt to adjust the matter in accordance with International policy.

(3) In the event the Regional Director is unable to make a satisfactory adjustment, he shall make his report and his recommendations to the International Secretary-Treasurer with the utmost dispatch.

(4) Cases not adjusted by the Regional Directors in accordance with this procedure shall be referred to the Fair Practices Committee.

(B) All complaints of alleged violation of this International Union's anti-discrimination policy, other than those described above, shall be referred by the International President to the Regional Director for the region involved. The Regional Director shall promptly investigate the complaint and report thereon to the International President. Upon receipt of such report, the International President may in his discretion refer the matter to the Fair Practices Committee.

..., Executive Director, ...tices Committee.

GEORGE F. ADDES, Sec'y-Treas. UAW-CIO and Chairman UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee.

JOSEPH MATTSON, UAW-CIO Executive Board member and member UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee.

CARL SWANSON, UAW-CIO Executive Board member and member UAW-CIO Fair Practices Committee.

(C) The International President also may, on his own motion, refer to the Fair Practices Committee any other matters regarding discrimination.

VI. Substitution of Committee Member

In the event an appeal arises in a region which is under the jurisdiction of a member of the Fair Practices Committee, such Committee member shall not sit upon the Committee when the Committee hears such appeal. The International President shall appoint another Board Member to hear such case with the Committee.

By order of the International Executive Board, UAW-CIO, unanimously approved at Atlantic City, N. J., October 5, 1944.

Labor's Political Future in the United States

by Sidney Hillman

ANYONE who undertook to predict labor's political future in the United States only a year ago, must greatly revise his ideas today, because of labor's role in the 1944 Presidential Elections.

For the elections of 1944 were not just another repeat performance. On the surface, this campaign may have appeared like any other. But to many politically sensitive Americans, it was clear that if the elections were lost to the reactionaries it would have spelled disastrous defeat to the cause of peace and freedom at home and throughout the world. Organized reaction, before November 7th, made no secret of its objectives. It was clear to anyone with eyes to see that, if the Old Guard Republicans and all the semi-fascist elements which welded themselves to the running-boards of the Hoover Coach were to win the elections, we would have lost all hope of winning an enduring peace in our times. They would have turned the country from a course of collaboration and friendship among nations to a struggle for world domination, leading inevitably to international conflict and a third world war. On the home front, their victory would have spelled almost inevitably the curtailment, if not the abolition, of the rights of labor, the rights of minorities, the rights of the Common Man.

That is why the bloodless victory which we scored on Election Day is as significant on the political front as the heroic achievements of our armies and the armies of our Allies on the battlefields. Politically, on November 7th we won our Battle of Britain, our Stalingrad.

To labor, and more particularly the Congress of Industrial Organizations, belongs some of the credit for forecasting correctly the rising tide of reaction in this country and for taking immediate steps to build strong dykes to withstand this tide.

LABOR PUTS ON POLITICAL LONG PANTS

In the Congressional and State elections of 1942, the enemies of labor and the enemies of the people scored sweeping victories. Every forward-looking American gloomily realized that if the trend continued in the national elections of 1944, the cause of peace and freedom, at home and abroad, would suffer a defeat from which it might take decades to recover. Yet many of the progressive elements did not know how to cope with the situation.

The CIO boldly prepared to meet the challenge implied in those "mid-term" elections. Early in 1943, Philip Murray and his associates in the CIO met, discussed and clarified their ideas. Finally, they announced their decision to meet the impending threat by mobilizing the membership of the CIO and to use the network of its organizations throughout the nation as the firm core around which could gather all progressive groups aware of the reactionary dangers and determined to fight them.

The CIO Political Action Committee was organized as that progressive political core.

When CIO-PAC undertook its program early in 1943, it was deluged from all sides with abuse, misrepresentation, lies on top of lies. No slander was too base, no appeal to prejudice too bigoted, no tactic too unprincipled for the reactionaries to employ. They carried on a campaign of bigotry and a stirring of class and race hatred unsurpassed in the history of American political campaigning. And the semi-fascist groups, such as the Committee for Constitutional Government, working closely with the Republican campaign managers, carried on a campaign of mimeographs, flimsies, and rumors, passed furtively in factories and in public places.

The reactionaries paid more attention to PAC than to all the candidates they promoted or opposed. They realized what was at stake. They knew that in 1944 they were fighting for total control of the government of the United States for their own purposes.

The fact that they failed is now history. But the reason is not yet fully understood. And in that reason lies the index of labor's political future in America.

To what degree the CIO-PAC and its affiliated National Citizens PAC contributed to the defeat of the reactionary forces in the last election is a matter of opinion. That they made some contribution to that victory is a matter of fact—and no one disputes strenuously that the contribution was considerable.

In the nature of PAC's organization and method, labor found a pattern for future effective political action.

With the organization of PAC, labor in America came of age. Someone at the CIO Seventh Annual Convention remarked very descriptively that labor has now put on its political long pants.

BY LABOR — FOR THE PEOPLE

This maturity expressed itself in many ways. Though American Labor has participated in politics in the past, it has done so piecemeal. It has evaluated issues and candidates for office in terms of organized labor's needs and demands. The CIO-PAC established its program from the start on a broad base. Nothing was measured exclusively by labor's desires. PAC voiced the deepest hopes and aspirations of the great majority of the people—workers, farmers, small business men, native and foreign born, white and black, men and women. It formulated and broadcasted its program for all to study. It invited the people to agree or disagree. PAC did not make exclusive claim to this program and its planks.

But PAC did make clear that the CIO and its enlightened membership was in a position to help the nation make that program a reality. The CIO placed its energies, its organizational skill, and its facilities at the disposal of all progressive-minded people.

The unceasing attack on PAC gave it public prominence; the untiring energy and the sincerity of its membership gave it strength. It was not long before PAC received the cooperation of all the best elements in the American community. Throughout the United States, CIO and AFL and Railroad Brotherhood members, unorganized workers, civic and religious organizations, farmers, professionals, small businessmen, artists and writers—all united to score a victory over reaction.

A LESSON TO REMEMBER

Labor in America learned one lesson it will not soon forget. In its political activities, labor must join hands with all progressive elements to fight for a broad program of national and international security, in terms of the welfare of the majority of the people.

Labor has learned another significant lesson which will influence its future political activities. It is a very simple lesson: and as crucial as it is simple: No third party.

During the recent campaign the evil forces in both major political parties complained that labor was out to build a "third party." That, they said, was un-American and un-democratic. All of which is sheer nonsense. It is not un-American or un-democratic to build a third or a fourth or a fifth party. But it is utterly undesirable for labor to start a third party. Were PAC really so foolish, it would have received support from many reactionary Democrats and Republicans. For they knew, as we knew, that a third party in America today would spell suicide for all the liberal forces and aid only the reactionaries. Precisely because PAC was not a third party and refused to function as such it brought down upon itself the ire of every labor-baiter in the country.

AMERICA IS — WHERE AMERICANS LIVE

Labor has learned its lesson well. It will not create a third party, but will continue to work with both major parties. At the same time, it will demand that both parties name and elect men who know what the people want and who will devote themselves to fulfilling the people's desires.

There is still another lesson labor has learned in the recent elections: America is where Americans live. America is not in Washington, D. C. It is as much in Ottertail County, Minnesota, as it is in the District of Columbia. Good government begins at the bottom and ends at the top. Therefore, labor's political activities must reach down to the local communities where the men and women of labor live. They must be taught to join hands with their forward-looking neighbors. They must learn the score and understand the issues and act politically upon their convictions. Labor's political future lies as much in helping to elect the right dogcatcher or sheriff in the smallest township or parish, as it does in electing the right men to Congress and the White House.

Labor's political future in the United States rests with its mature conviction that what is good for the majority of the people is good for labor, that to attain the people's objectives labor must function within the existing two political parties, and that its political activities must reach down to the county and township level.

THE SEED: DEMOCRACY

To do that, labor must continue to organize politically and develop a vast educational program. It must gather the facts on all the major issues affecting the people, from jobs for all to foreign policy. It must analyze the facts, organize them, popularize them, then bring them to the people in printed matter, in posters, over the radio, through songs, or whatever other medium it can find.

Labor's political future will depend on the effectiveness of its organizational, research and educational programs. And knowing this, labor will undoubtedly develop the most progressive and most advanced educational program which will be a boon to adult education in America, in general, and labor education, in particular. Of necessity, some aspects of this education will liberalize public opinion and stimulate local expression.

PAC has established the early patterns. Labor will not discard them. It will use them, and improve them, and increase them. And wherever labor plants its political seed, democracy, with all its political and cultural implications, will thrive and grow strong, as the union song has it, just like a tree that's planted by the waters.

And that is labor's political future in the United States as I see it.

) Project No. 1955 Savannah River Electric Company)

STATEMENT OF TEXTILE WORKERS UNION OF AMERICA-CIO ON APPLICATION OF SAVANNAH RIVER ELECTRIC COMPANY TO FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION FOR PERMISSION TO CONSTRUCT AND OPERATE A PROPOSED HYDROELECTRIC DEVELOPMENT AT CLARK HILL DAM SITE ON SAVANNAH RIVER

The Textile Workers Union of America-CIO respectfully urges the Federal Power Commission not to grant the license requested, for the following reasons:

(1) The United States Congress has already approved this project, has authorized $42,000,000 for its development as a multiple-purpose project for power, flood control, navigation, and other purposes to stimulate the best use of all the resources of the surrounding area, and has appropriated $5,500,000 for preliminary work. The Army engineers are now engaged in preparing plans for the development and expect to advertise for bids early next year.

(2) The private company has had ample time and opportunity to develop this site—indeed, once had a license to do so which it failed to use—and action by the United States Government is the only hope for prompt and proper development of this project. The private company has in recent years preferred to expand its fuel capacity rather than its hydroelectric capacity, apparently because the consumer pays the bill for leaving our waterpower resources unused.

(3) The Savannah River Electric Company is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Georgia Power Company. The net rates now charged by the latter company for typical amounts of energy used per month are shown below in comparison with those charged for TVA power:

	Georgia Power Company charges		TVA standard charges

[a]Used for commercial cooking, heating, and/or refrigeration, with incidental power permitted up to 2 hp in combination with either refrigeration or nonseasonal permanently connected cooking and heating equipment of not less than 2 kw, or both; no lighting permitted; refrigeration loads limited to 25 hp, including not over 2 hp of incidental power; subject to surcharge for refrigeration in excess of 1 hp connected.

[b]Applicable to customer with not under 100 kva demand who guarantees to maintain a power factor of 80%, lagging, or better.

Obviously these rate differentials reflect to a considerable degree the private company's preference for fuel generation noted above and the inherent obstacles to efficient private management of electric utilities.

(4) A multiple-purpose development, rather than the purely power project proposed by the Savannah River Electric Company, is particularly needed for the following purposes:

(a) Recreational opportunities are now sparse in the whole area centering on the Clark Hill site. The city of Augusta has only 389 acres of parks, all for whites. Areas suitable for vacation outings for those unable to go far afield because of limited funds are practically non-existent in the area. No state or national parks exist within a radius of 20 miles from Augusta—the effective limit for week-day or holiday outings, according to the National Park Service. The parks nearest Augusta are all in South Carolina, 22 to 30 miles off—the Aiken Wayside and the Aiken and Barnwell state parks. The nearest Georgia state parks are the Alexander Stephens park near Crawfordville and the Magnolia Springs park near Millen—both more than 50 miles from Augusta, and neither properly developed. According to the National Park Service, at nonurban recreational areas "activities most in demand include swimming, picnicking, fishing, boating, and informal sports and games. Three of these activities require water. This has led park planners and administrators to consider water an indispensable recreational resource in the hot summer climate of most sections of the Southeast." This indispensable resource should not be entrusted to the Georgia Power Company, which has done little at its present dam and reservoir sites to encourage their use for public mass recreation. This is but natural since its business is not recreation but generating and distributing power. But what is needed in the Clark Hill area is planning and management of the power development with the recreational needs of the area continuously in mind; that this will be best accomplished through government development of the site is clear from the pattern established by the TVA.

(b) Under multiple-purpose development, the Clark Hill project will provide minimum navigable depths of 7.3 feet for the river below Augusta, thus enabling steamboats drawing from 5½ to 6 feet to navigate the river to Augusta every day in the year. In contrast, the channel in its present condition has a controlling depth of 6 feet about 80% of the time and controlling depths of from 4 to 5 feet the rest of the time. Thus the Clark Hill reservoir would convert the present part-time, uncertain, and unsatisfactory navigation channel into a transportation route of considerable importance, capable of accommodating relatively large-scale tonnage. For many years the United States has been committed to the improvement of the river for 6-foot navigation to Augusta, but to provide the required depths continuously without the benefit of storage would be inordinately expensive. None of these benefits can accrue except from a multiple-purpose development, since the use of the river for power purposes only at times would conflict with maintenance of the channel. Proper attention to the navigation possibilities of this project is of great importance to the industrial and agricultural potentialities of the region.

(5) The Georgia Power Company now holds a virtual monopoly of electric energy generation for public use in Georgia. The facts appear in the following table, showing electricity produced in Georgia in 1944 and installed capacity at the end of that year:

	Total	%	Hydro	Steam	Internal combustion
PRODUCTION (M kwh):
All plants	3,169,866	100.00	1,248,965	1,916,865	4,036

All plants	657,177	100.00	342,892	311,950	2,335
Privately owned	613,789	93.40	311,500	301,675	614
Georgia Power Co.	550,389	83.75	287,100	262,675	614

Publicly owned	43,388	6.60	31,392	10,275	1,721
Municipal	10,688	1.63	192	8,775	1,721
Federal	20,000	3.04	20,000	...	...
Other	12,700	1.93	11,200	1,500	...

This monopoly should be curbed rather than extended.

(6) All the outstanding common stock of the Georgia Power Company is held by the Commonwealth and Southern Corporation (Delaware). A number of plans for reorganizing the latter corporation are now before the Securities and Exchange Commission, but at present it remains one of the largest combines in the nation. The Temporary National Emergency Committee found in 1937 that it was the ninth largest nonfinancial corporation in the United States, and that 1.5% of the holdings of its common stock included 65.4% of the outstanding shares. Large as its interests in Georgia are, the population it serves with electricity in this State constitutes only about 30% of the total served by its subsidiaries, and only 23% of its energy sales are in Georgia. Of the eleven directors of this giant corporation, only three reside in the South and only one in Georgia. It is not to be expected that a great corporation with such varied and far-flung interests could make southern problems its special concern.

(7) The generation and distribution of electric energy is best carried on by an agency of the government. The spur in private-competitive business is to make as much money as possible, but in an electric utility the standard is to furnish the greatest possible service at minimum cost. No private electric utility passes to consumers the benefits of efficient management and technological progress unless directly or indirectly compelled to do so by public regulation. To the extent that public regulation is effective those benefits are passed on, thus removing the spur of profits, and to the extent that profits are removed the advantages of private enterprise are lost. In enterprises so largely affected with a public interest, outright public ownership and operation is the only answer. Moreover, since return on investment is so large an element of cost, especially in hydroelectric projects, an important advantage of government operation is lower interest rates on borrowed capital. The Georgia Power Company at the end of 1945 had outstanding first mortgage bonds, issued in 1941 and due in 1971, in the principal sum of $101,271,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3½%, as well as bank loans due in semi-annual installments to 1949 in the amount of $1,687,500, bearing interest at 2½%. Contrast this with the fact that when the TVA and six associated municipalities bought the properties of the East Tennessee Power and Light Company in 1945, the interest rate on the $6,998,000 of revenue bonds sold publicly by the associated municipalities to finance their share of the purchase averaged 1.5%.

(8) The need for low-cost electric power in the area surrounding the Clark Hill site is great and has not been met by the Georgia Power Company, which now serves the Georgia part of this area. In the counties of Burke, Columbia, Elbert, Glascock, Jefferson, Lincoln, McDuffie, Richmond, Taliaferro, Warren, and Wilkes, there were, according to the 1940 census, 23,857 rural-farm dwelling units with lighting equipment reported, of which under 11% had electric lights. Other dwelling units in these counties with lighting equipment reported numbered 30,623, of which only about 63% had electric lights. For comparison it is interesting to note that whereas only about 1 farm in 28 in the Tennessee Valley states had electric service in 1933, 1 in 4 was using electricity in 1944. Residential consumers in the present TVA service area used about 150,000,000 kwh in 1933, over five times that much in 1944.

CONCLUSION

May we say in conclusion that our concern extends to many phases of this project. The union is interested in what it means in terms of rebuilding the soil. We appreciate the hope it holds out to the farmer of securing electricity on his farm, an area of power provision notoriously neglected by privste companies because of its low profit possibilities. We are fearful of the anti-democratic implications of the increasing growth of a giant monoply, privately owned and controlled by northern financial interests. We are mindful of the meaning in terms of lower consumer costs to all residents of the area, including the textile workers.

But it is to the social and economic needs of the textile workers that we chiefly address ourselves. Within reaching distance of the proposed project live a hundred thousand textile workers and their families. For them we enter a special plea for the sort of recreational development that the public project leads us to hope for. Mass recreational facilities are few in our southern states; they are even fewer in the textile mill towns. Where the mill village is not completely barren it facilities are limited and dominated by the mill management.

The problem of full use of the vacations with pay won in the last few years by the union would be met in part by the resources of the publicly developed project.

The textile workers also are vitally interested in the project for what it means to the increasing industrialization of the south. Our region as a whole needs more jobs- and better paying jobs. We need industries that will make use of the skills learned by thousands of southern workers during the war years at the shipyards along our coasts and at such establishment as the great Bell Bomber plant which stands almost empty just a few miles from here.
We have announcements almost weekly of some new industry or another in our towns but - with a few notable exceptions - these are chiefly industries driven out of the sweatshops by the unions in the east, seeking new areas and people to exploit with sub-standard wage levels. For returning veterans and for millions who will be displaced in the next few years by the increasing mechanization of the farms, they offer meager hope for the future.

The Textile Workers Union has a frankly selfish interest in increased industrialization. We have made amazing gains in wages in the last few years, for the first time we can hope to see the day when this greatest basic American industry will no longer be at the bottom of the economic barrel, when it can reach a par with the rest of American industry. To hold our gains, to raise further our standards, we need full employment, we need the new job opportunities that industrialization will mean. To have cheap and plentiful power available in the great Savannah River area, to have easy and inexpensive river transportation to offer, increases the possibilities of great industrial expansion there. Public enterprise is the surest road to these ends.

The Textile Workers Union of America, therefore respectfully urges, on behalf of its members, that the lisence requested by the Savannah River Electric Company be denied and that the development of the area by our government for the greatest benefit of all of us, go forward without further interference and delay.

Dear Senator,

There's so much talk going around about cutting wages that I'm getting scared. Although I'm fairly well up in the wage scale, I know that if the bottom drops out the top will fall too. Can't we put in a foundation? I hear there is a bill for a 65¢ minimum. Although I'd hate to work for that little I do think a floor like 65¢ or 75¢ would make me a lot safer. I hope the bill gets through and wish you would write me about your position on it.

DON'T LET OUR
STARVE !

LONG BEFORE THE WAR WAS OVER everybody knew that we were going to have unemployment. But Congress saw nothing, heard nothing, said nothing, did nothing.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATED the end of the war unemployment flooded all our industrial cities. The flood is still rising everywhere and unemployment is expected to reach 8 or 10 million.

BUSINESS IS OPTIMISTIC Sure! Business promises to take up the slack. But even business admits there must be unemployment for several months—at least till January; maybe till spring!

IN THE MEANTIME what happens to us, war workers? We have no severance pay; no GI Bill of Rights; no corporation tax benefits to carry us over.

Animals are fed, machines are tended, but we are left to starve!

PRESIDENT TRUMAN HAS ASKED Congress to give us Emergency Unemployment Compensation (Kilgore Bill) which will

1. allow us up to $25 for 26 weeks
2. cover federal, maritime, and agricultural processing workers
3. pay the expense of getting home from our war jobs

BUT CONGRESS REFUSES A Senate Committee has already voted to cut out the $25 payments; observers warn of further cuts.

The House Committee, with an openly hostile chairman, has stalled for months; and considers anti New Deal measures instead.

DECENT WAGES ARE THREATENED The loudest protest against adequate unemployment compensation comes from employers who want to pay starvation wages. And the drive is on in the States to cut wages by denying unemployment compensation to workers who refuse jobs at sub-standard rates of pay. The fight for decent unemployment compensation is part of labor's fight for a living wage, and must be fought both nationally and in the State.

Tell It to Your Congressman

Tell him you want the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Bill passed without delay.

ORGANIZE LETTER-WRITING BRIGADES

Swamp Congress with your mail demanding the passage of this Bill. Write also to your Governor and your local newspapers. Send delegates to your Governor, State Legislatures, Unemployment Compensation Commission. Demand unemployment compensation as your right.

February 12, 1945

Philip Murray, President
Congress of Industrial Organizations
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Murray:

I am serving as a member of a committee that is studying the question of post-war employment opportunities for all persons whose employment status has been affected by the war. Veterans who have statutory rights of reemployment under Section 8 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, and war workers who may obtain similar rights under pending legislation constitute but a portion of the total number of people with whom our study is concerned. Not affected by existing legislation are countless numbers of veterans and non veterans who have had their normal peacetime places and opportunities in the field of employment disrupted by the present conflict.

In formulating broad plans for the future that would be designed to accomplish an orderly return to peacetime employment of all of our people on a fair and just basis, it becomes necessary to give some consideration to the relative equities of various groups.

In your broad planning for the future, I am confident that you have formulated opinions as to what America's post-war employment policy should be. I would be grateful indeed to have the benefit of those opinions and to have the benefit of your comments and suggestions on certain questions which I am taking the liberty to attach hereto.

Inasmuch as the committee on which I am serving is endeavoring to formulate its recommendations at an early date, I would appreciate it very much if you could find it convenient to favor me with an early reply.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

ATTACHMENT to letter dated February 12, 1945, by Lewis B. Hershey, Director of Selective Service System, to Philip Murray, President, Congress of Industrial Organizations.

QUESTIONNAIRE

1. In general, what distinction, if any, should be made between veterans and non-veteran war workers?

2. Should veterans be differentiated among themselves on the basis of length of military service, kind of military service, whether they served overseas or not, whether they were engaged in actual combat or not?

3. Veterans with present statutory rights who do not assert them.
(a) What should be the rights of a veteran who refuses his old job and applies elsewhere for employment? Should he be given rights somewhat less than he could exercise with respect to his former employer, but greater than those granted a veteran with no statutory rights? What of the veteran who exercises his reinstatement rights and after a short period of employment decides the job is no longer suitable and wishes to be employed elsewhere?

(b) What preferential treatment should be accorded such veterans on the basis of their military service, both as to nature and extent, and in relation to (a) other veterans and (b) war workers and non-war workers. Should such preferential treatment be limited to the initial hiring or should it carry over and apply to retention in employment?

4. Veterans with no statutory rights of reemployment.
(a) What preference should be given to a veteran with employment experience but who has no statutory reemployment rights because he fails to meet one or more of the conditions of eligibility provided by the Selective Service Law. These conditions are: (1) an honorable discharge; (2) application for reinstatement within 90 days; (3) the former position must be one "other than temporary"; (4) the veteran must be qualified to perform the duties of his former position; (5) the employer's circumstances must not have changed so as to make it impossible or unreasonable to reinstate the veteran.

Should such a veteran be given preference for employment and retention in employment with relation to (1) other veterans with no employment experience (2) war workers and non-war workers?

(b) What preference should be given to veterans with no employment experience, both as to original hiring and retention in employment? How should they be considered in relation to (1) other veterans and (2) war workers who have employment experience?

5. Disabled veterans. What special consideration should be given to veterans with service-incurred disabilities? Should any distinction be made between those who have had employment experience and those who have had none? Should those who would have statutory employment rights except for their disabilities be assured a job with their former employer for which they may now be qualified even though not qualified to return to their former jobs? If so, what preference should they have regarding retention in employment?

C O P Y

February 21, 1945

General Lewis B. Hershey, Director
Selective Service System
21st and C Streets, N.W.
Washington 25, D.C.

Dear General Hershey:

Your February 12 letter with list of questions attached provides me an opportunity to express some ideas about employment of veterans, when they are demobilized from military service, for which I am grateful. Some of the questions sound very ominous and difficult; in fact, they are not so and would not even need to be raised under the consistent application of seniority principles long established by collective bargaining and in effect in all good industrial relations situations.

There will ultimately be about 15 million veterans — one-fourth of our potential work force if we realize the goal of 60 million job opportunities that President Roosevelt has set forth. No matter how far we go in the direction of special employment preference for them, we cannot provide so large a number with an island of security in the midst of economic depression. The kind of economic order we have assures that if there is employment only for a fraction of the people in the labor market, there is unemployment for some other fraction, whose lack of purchasing power is a constant threat of unemployment to those who do have jobs.

Veterans are not going to be content to have jobs, even with every preference, if they have to pay taxes out of their wages to support an army of unemployed. They most certainly will be concerned with work opportunities for their parents and other relatives and friends and will not be divided as civilians against other civilians.

My first recommendation, therefore, is that the activities in the Selective Service System be directed toward the concept of planning for full employment and maximum production and away from the idea that the only important thing is to find hair-splitting ways of defining preference and "super" advantages.

I should like to say something about the application of seniority principles in well-established industrial relations. The idea of seniority is that a workman by constant application to a job through many years of his life develops therein a property right, the application of which is just to both the long-time employee and the short-time employee. Seniority means the investment of time at work on a job by a person and his right of precedence of employment on such a job over other persons who do not have such an investment of time at work in it.

Seniority is an instrument to prevent discrimination and favoritism in the employment relation. It prevents unjust discharge of a workman by an employer in a capricious or angry moment. Seniority prevents conflict between workmen and relieves employers of decisions that would require more than the wisdom of Solomon to resolve justly without it. It prevents the socially undesirable practice of forcing workmen to bid against each other for employment by alternate lowering of wages, with the consequent loss of purchasing power and decline in the national prosperity.

There is no situation -- NO MATTER WHAT IT MAY BE -- that cannot justly be resolved at the place and in the circumstances where it occurs according to the rules of seniority as they are being applied throughout industry under collective bargaining. There may be a variety of ways to apply the principles of seniority, according to practices in different industries.

In discussing several of your questions I shall show later on in this letter how the principles of seniority apply in difficult cases. Here, my second recommendation is that Selective Service System shall acknowledge the existence of the seniority principles, recognize that they are accepted universally, and seek to resolve the questions of employment and reemployment of veterans within this well-established institution.

In this recommendation, I am not speaking superficially, but right to the heart of the universal concern we all have about veterans' employment and in answer to many of the questions you raise. I say to you quite frankly if Selective Service System in early 1944 had understood this, Local Board memorandum 190-A never would have been issued. I cannot conceive why such a document was published without consultation among organizations of employers and among Labor Unions. If a draft copy of this document had been circulated for comment and criticism, you would have received many exceedingly valuable observations so that when you did affix your signature to the document it would have been a useful instrument instead of the obstructive piece it now is.

It is no answer to reply to these objections that anyone can go to court. The courts exist to rectify injustice and to resolve conflicting claims; not to eliminate artificially created obstacles to application of law.

To turn now to your five questions.

In the first place, I shall not attempt to include in any of these paragraphs any comment about the effect of pending legislation. I feel the final disposition of the May-Bailey bill, or other measures that may evolve from it, is so uncertain as to extend this letter to the realm of conjecture which would add nothing constructive. If the Congress does pass some sort of civilian service law, I shall be happy to promptly send you a supplementary letter with full comment on the significance of such a law in relation to what I say here.

With respect to question No. 1.

The distinction that should be made between military veterans and non-veteran war workers, and between veterans of military service of varying degrees of importance or danger, is one that is not exclusively, nor even of considerable importance IN THE EMPLOYMENT RELATIONSHIP.

The C.I.O. stands firmly with the universally accepted principle in American custom and law that all persons who have served in the armed forces of the United States during a recognized war, campaign or expedition, and who have terminated their service under conditions that were not dishonorable, shall constitute a citizenry to whom the nation owes consideration by reason of such service.

This consideration is given substance in more or less satisfactory legislation by which the whole nation obligates itself to grant certain advantages to the veterans. These are well-known. It has never been an American principle of veteran legislation that any one group in the population should be required to grant advantages and preferment to veterans.

With respect to the employment relationship, the principles of Union seniority and the language of the Selective Service Act both give cognizance to the fact that if a man had to leave his employment to serve in the armed forces, he should not lose thereby the position in relation to his fellows that he would have retained had he not gone to war. Beyond this, any advantages to the person as a military veteran must be given to him by the whole nation.

The foregoing applies only to those persons who had employment before military service and who remain physically sound and competent to return to their jobs. It does not take into consideration the person who went into military service from school, or from the ranks of the unemployed, or from the proprietorship of a private business. Neither does it touch upon the person with previous employment who returns crippled or disabled from war service and who consequently cannot do his previous job.

With respect to the first of these groups, I shall comment in the reply to your question No. 4. With respect to the second, I observe here that other legislation besides Section 8 of the Selective Service Act is provided, and I shall comment about such persons in the employment relationship in the reply to your question No. 5.

With respect to question No. 2.

There should absolutely be no consideration in the employment relationship concerning the quality or quantity of a person's service to the nation while in the armed forces. Who is wise enough to say, with respect to offers of employment to the military veteran, that an air corps ground mechanic was more or less useful to the war effort than a master sergeant in the infantry; or that a corporal who successfully assumed command of a platoon during a battle crisis when his lieutenant was shot was more or less useful than the commander of an artillery crew; or any of the hundreds of similar comparisons and contrasts that might be cited?

Any attempt to weigh these things by an industrial personnel officer would confuse the fundamental question at the moment of hiring; namely, Is this person qualified and suitable for employment in the job that is open? Any attempt to create gradations of service in value to the war effort and then assign reemployment or employment rights to veterans in such brackets of value would only create laughter at the proposition.

Would anybody seriously propose that employment rights should be granted to the veteran on the basis of his military decorations? Such a proposal is inherent in question No. 2.

The points you mention in question No. 2 can be relatively weighed in broad terms with respect to transfer of duty, furlough privilege, discharge and return home, rates of pay, amount of pension, or any other point involving the relation of the soldier or sailor to society as a whole, but NEVER to the employment relationship.

With respect to question No. 3.

The answer to (a) is that no veteran is required to claim any rights that he does not choose to exercise. If a veteran with reemployment rights decides not to return to his previous employment, he merely declines to use what he has a right to use. He is like the husband and wife who pay taxes to support the public school system, but who have no children to send to school.

There may be good and sufficient reasons why an individual veteran should decide not to claim his pre-military job. His military experience may have qualified him to take employment superior to that which he previously had. Such would be the case of a movie usher who became a cartographer. Why shouldn't every veteran seek employment in a job that would enable him to exercise his highest skills and earn a maximum income?

The veteran at demobilization should be advised of his reemployment rights. If he does not assert them, they are of no value to him and no consideration need be given to the proposition that is stated in the second sentence under (a).

If a veteran does exercise his reemployment rights, goes back to his previous job, and after a while voluntarily leaves it, he has exhausted all of the protection under Section 8 that he desires to use. His reemployment rights do not follow him to another job, either under the law or under Union seniority.

The questions that are in (b) under question No. 3 are entirely unrelated to reality in industrial relations and are not embraced in any manner in Section 8 of the Selective Service Act, either with respect to initial hiring or retention in employment.

The various inquiries under question No. 3 seems to arise out of misunderstandings of the provision that a veteran cannot be discharged without cause within one year. There is a difference between a layoff (because of lack of employment) and a discharge (which is a permanent separation from a job). Workmen are called back from a layoff when employment opens up, and in the order of seniority in which they were laid off. The law does not require that veterans shall be forced to stay on a job which they do not want, or that the employer must keep them on the payroll when there is no work for them. It does require that they shall not be discharged except for a proper cause (such as insubordination, dishonesty, or the like).

There is an opportunity under Union seniority not provided in the law which some veterans may choose to exercise. Suppose a man claims his reemployment rights, goes back to his job and finds out that he isn't ready to work, or that he would like to take time off of his own volition for any purpose, yet wants to retain his seniority. In such a case, he would consult with his Union steward or committeeman and his foreman, and work out an arrangement for a leave of absence during which time his name would remain on the seniority list in the same relative position. He would come back to work at the end of his leave without prejudice and in the same order on the seniority list as when he went away. Such arrangements (or modification of them) are common occurrences under Union seniority and with respect to veterans would be very easy to apply.

With respect to question No. 4.

No law provides that military veterans without previous employment shall have special employment rights upon their demobilization. In consequence of this, and with a full understanding that the employment relationship is a private compact between the employer and the employee (either individually or collectively by either or both parties), the Labor Unions have participated in signing a set of pertinent recommendations.

On July 25, 1944, there was publicly announced an agreement between the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the American Federation of Labor and the Veterans of Foreign Wars in which was included a recommendation to grant seniority rights to veterans for whom there was no statutory provision because they were unemployed prior to their military service.

The recommendations by the three national organizations was to their Local Unions and Posts and to individual employers. It is only at the plant level by collective agreement of both parties that the recommendation could be made effective. It provides that seniority be granted month for month according to the period of time in military service, not prior to September 1, 1940, and would be effective immediately upon hiring, or at the end of a probationary period, depending on custom and the contract in the plant.

The application of this recommendation (which can be universal) would answer all the points you raise under question No. 4. In the event the recommendation was not accepted in a plant, and a veteran was hired for employment in that plant, he would go on the seniority rolls as of the day he was hired. His retention in employment would be the same as a non-veteran; subject to layoff if work declined, but not subject to discharge without just cause.

The principle invoked by the C.I.O., A.F. of L., and the Veterans of Foreign Wars in this recommendation is a familiar one. It is presumed that if a person who was unemployed (for any reason), at the time he entered military service, had not gone into uniform he would have obtained employment and built up seniority rights on his job. Since he could not build up such rights while at war, it is only proper that they should be granted to him (in the absence of statutory provisions) when he does return and when he does get a job.

This is the concept, well established in law, that grants additional civil service points to a veteran -- both in Federal and in certain State employment applications. The presumption that by such grants a balance is restored that would have existed if there had been no need for the person's absence at war.

The principle -- both in the C.I.O., A.F. of L., V.F.W. agreement and in civil service law -- is thoroughly sound, consistent with Union seniority, and easy of application to industrial relations practices.

With respect to question No. 5.

Earlier in this letter I referred to the fact that disabled veterans have legal provisions aside from those in Section 8 of the Selective Service Act. There is no need here to engage in a discussion of disability benefit provisions, which subject is not a part of the employment relationships.

But you have raised questions concerning the employment relationship of disabled veterans, both those who have legal reemployment rights and those who are not covered by Section 8.

Obviously, certain service-incurred disabilities make it impossible for a veteran to perform the job at which he previously worked. Therefore, such a veteran does not fulfill the condition which you state under question No. 4 (a) (4); namely; "the veteran must be qualified to perform the duties of his former position." He therefore would have no binding statutory reemployment rights, and the employer would not be legally required to reemploy him -- on his previous job or on any job.

The C.I.O. has taken congizance of the disabled veteran who cannot do his previous work. The previously-mentioned C.I.O., A.F. of L., V.F.W. agreement contains this recommendation, again suggesting it for application by the individual employer and the Local Union in the plant:

> "It is agreed that any veteran with prior employment rights who has been disabled by reason of military or naval service shall not lose his right to employment. If the veteran has acquired physical limitations, by reason of his military or naval service, which makes it impossible for him to fulfill his former job, he should be given another job which he is able to perform at the prevailing wages for the job he receives."

Two principles are contained in this paragraph; namely, the veteran shall have his rights to some employment unimpaired, and that he shall not be required to work for a reduced wage rate because he has acquired physical limitations.

Every employer and every Union of good will desires that the disabled veteran should not be rejected for employment. In such cases an arrangement can be worked out to give such disabled veteran the best job he could perform.

The quoted paragraph takes into consideration the possibility that some employers might offer a disabled veteran employment, but would seek to take him on at a reduced rate of pay for the job he would do. An employer might say to the disabled veteran, in effect: "You're getting a pension from the government, therefore you won't need full wages. I'll give you a job, which pays 83 cents an hour, but since you have your pension I'll pay you 68 cents an hour."

Other employers might take just the opposite point of view and offer a disabled veteran a job inferior with respect to wages to the one he left, but pay him the same wages as he could have earned on the better job. Some Unions have proposed such a wage standard to the employers of their members for the disabled veterans. It is an entirely proper proposal and one that I would recommend.

The last question you ask is about the retention in employment of such disabled veterans. The answer is the application of Union seniority in the plant involved. In some cases, order of necessary layoff would be on a department basis and in some other cases on a plant-wide basis. One C.I.O. Union has proposed to employers of its members that plant-wide seniority prevail for all disabled veterans, so that as employment fluctuates the disabled veterans could move from department to department and stay on the job as long as there were jobs they could do throughout the plant.

For disabled veterans who were unemployed previous to their military service, the same provisions would apply that I have described in answer to your question No. 4.

Although the foregoing constitutes a lengthy document, I have attempted to answer all the questions you raised. Many more points could be made and several explanations elaborated even more. I hope these observations will be useful to you and to your associate officers. If there is any point about which you would like to have additional comment, or if you have any new questions, do not hesitate to call on me. This business of veterans' employment is a job for all of us, and the C.I.O. has no self-imposed limitations on it with respect to our performance in this field.

Sincerely yours,

s/ Philip Murray

ARBITRATION INFORMATION BULLETIN

No. 143

COMPANY: Timken Roller Bearing Co.

DISTRICT NO. 27

PLANT: Canton, Ohio

CASE NO. 778

ARBITRATOR: Herman A. Gray

CONTRACT SECTION: Seniority

DATE OF DECISION: March 13, 1945

Statement of Case:

The following grievance having been duly processed through the grievance procedure of the contract between the United Steelworkers of America and the Company, was submitted to the Arbitrator for final decision:

That there is involved the construction and application of the seniority clauses of the collective labor agreement in the light of the provisions contained in the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

The issue arose when one Gaskill, a member of the Union in the employ of the Company, was advised that he would be demoted from second to third helper on the open hearth furnaces in order to make place for a returning veteran.

Gaskill protested, and the Union presented a grievance on his behalf on the ground that he had the greater seniority and that his displacement would violate the collective labor agreement. The Company's position was that it had no alternative but to displace Gaskill under the provisions of the Local Board Memorandum No. 190-A issued by the Director of the Selective Service System under date of May 20, 1944 and dealing with the reemployment provisions of the Selective Service Act.

When the matter came up for hearing, it appeared that the veteran had refused to take the job in question and had severed his employment relationship with the Company. Thus Gaskill continued as second helper and the immediate dispute was terminated.

Nevertheless, the parties, recognizing that the basic issue had not thereby been resolved and that it continued as a cause of controversy, agreed that this case should proceed before me as Arbitrator for my determination of the general question involved.

Arbitrator's Finding of Facts:

Section V, Subsection 1 of the collective labor agreement between the parties provides in substance that in case of decrease of working force, the senior employee with ability to perform the work should be given preference.

... continued

No. 143

Section XI of the said agreement reads in part as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of any pertinent United States Statutes, including the Selective Training Service Act of 1940 (Public Act No. 783), any employee who is called into active service or who, in time of war, volunteers in the armed forces of the United States shall be given leave of absence for and will accumulate seniority during such period of service and upon termination of such service shall be reemployed by the Company provided:
> (1) Such employee has been honorably discharged;
> (2) Such employee is physically and mentally able to do available work in the department in which he or she was working at the time he or she entered the armed forces of the United States;
> (3) The seniority of such employee is greater than that of other employees working for the Company in the department in which such employee was working at the time he or she entered the armed forces of the United States; ...

Thus it is clear, and it is so conceded by the Company, that insofar as the collective agreement is concerned the veteran cannot be reemployed unless there are employees in the department to which he is to be returned junior in service with the Company.

But, the agreement also provides that it shall be subject to the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940.

Under date of May 20, 1944, the Director of the Selective Service issued Memorandum No. 190-A containing a statement of the policies adopted by the National Headquarters of the Selective Service System with respect to the reemployment provisions of the Act. The part of the Memorandum which is relevant to the issue involved in this proceeding is Part IV, Section 1. Subsections (a) and (b) of this Section declare that seniority rights shall accumulate in favor of the veteran during the period of his service in the armed forces to the same extent as they would have accumulated had he remained continuously at work. In that respect there is no conflict between the Memorandum and the collective labor agreement which by express language provides for such an accumulation of seniority rights during absence in the Service.

Subsection (c) of Section 1 of Part IV of the Memorandum reads:

> "A returning veteran is entitled to reinstatement in his former position or one of like seniority, status, and pay even though such reinstatement necessitates the discharge of a non-veteran with greater seniority."

It is said that under this provision the Company is obligated to reinstate a veteran though this would necessitate displacing a non-veteran who still has greater seniority even after the veteran had received credit for the time spent in the armed forces. If that be the meaning of the Subsection, it would be in direct conflict with the collective agreement. And, if it be a binding interpretation, then it would, to that extent, over-ride the collective agreement both by operation of law and the language of the collective agreement itself.

When the hearing on this case was first held before me, I was under the impression that the Director of the Selective Service was, by the terms of the Selective Service Act, charged with the enforcement of its reemployment provisions. If that were the case, the interpretation set out in his Memorandum would be binding on all persons until modified by him or set aside by some higher authority; so long as the interpretation stood unchanged the Company would be obligated to follow it, and the Union, if it felt itself aggrieved, would have to seek relief in some proceeding, not against the Company, but against the position taken by the Director.

In the brief which the Union's counsel have filed, it is argued that my impression was erroneous and that the Director has no power or responsibility with respect to the administration of the reemployment provisions of the Selective Service Act. I have, therefore, with great care examined that portion of the Act itself. I find that I was mistaken. The enforcement of the rights created by the statute is expressly turned over to the courts exclusively. Even in the matter of representation before the courts, the statute directs the Federal District Attorneys and not the Director of the Selective Service to appear and act in behalf of the veterans. The only function given to the Director is to establish a Personnel Division "to render aid in the replacement in their former positions of, or in securing positions for" discharged members of the armed forces. The Director is given no duty to administer the reemployment provisions of the Act, no authority to enforce them, no power to issue any ruling interpreting their meaning or any order directing compliance.

The Memorandum, therefore, is no more than a statement of the views of the National Headquarters of the Selective Service System. It is not a mandate addressed either to employers or to any other section of the public concerned with or affected by the reemployment provisions of the Act. It doesn't purport to be. As expressed in its own preliminary statement of "Purpose", the Memorandum is designed to set out the policies of the National Headquarters solely for the "guidance" of the members of the Selective Service System.

Coming from the source it does, the Memorandum is entitled to great weight in the construction of the reemployment provisions of the Selective Service Act. But it is not controlling because it was not issued under any power either to interpret or to bind, and it does not, in fact, undertake to bind.

The Union, therefore is free to dispute the right of the Company to follow the Memorandum rather than the terms of the collective agreement. Such a dispute having arisen, the Union is entitled to have it disposed of through arbitration in accordance with the provisions of the collective agreement for the disposition of all disputes. And, as the Arbitrator to whom this dispute has duly been submitted, it becomes my duty to decide it through an independent appraisal and judgment.

No. 143

The basis for decision must be the Selective Service Act itself. The pertinent provisions are the following excerpts from Section 8:

(a) Any person inducted into the land or naval forces under this Act for training and service, who, in the judgment of those in authority over him, satisfactorily completes his period of training in service under section 3b shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect upon the completion of such period of training and service. ...

(b) In the case of any such person who, in order to perform such training and service, has left or leaves a position, other than a temporary position, in the employ of any employer and who (1) receives such certificate, (2) is still qualified to perform the duties of such position, and (3) makes application for reemployment within ninety days after he is relieved from such training and service. ...

(b) if such person was in the employ of a private employer, such employer shall restore such person to such position or to a position of like seniority, status, and pay unless the employer's circumstances have so changed as to make it impossible or unreasonable to do so; ...

(c) Any person who is restored to a position in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (b) shall be considered as having been on furlough or leave of absence during his period of training and service in the land or naval forces, shall be so restored without loss of seniority, shall be entitled to participate in insurance or other benefits offered by the employer pursuant to established rules and practices relating to employees on furlough or leave of absence in effect with the employer at the time such person was inducted into such forces, and shall not be discharged from such position without cause within one year after such restoration. ...

The intent of these provisions is clear. They are designed to safeguard, as far as practicable, the economic position held by the veteran before induction into the armed service. He is to be returned to his old job with its emoluments and with his seniority unimpaired by reason of his absence.

Nothing in the Act provides that the returning veteran is to get more than he had when he left. Not a word is to be found that even suggests that he is to be favored above his older fellow workers and given a seniority standing superior to theirs irrespective of the length of their employment with the employer. The veteran is not to lose by his term of service, but, likewise, he is not to gain thereby. He is to be protected against economic loss as a consequence of his leaving by being restored to his prior status; he is not to be given something which he did not have and could not have acquired even though he had not been compelled to leave and had continued at work without interruption.

To give to the veterans seniority standing ahead of all others would entail a serious economic and social upheaval. The older workers carrying family responsibilities which come with maturing years would find themselves displaced, despite their long service in industry, by younger men who, as a rule, have only themselves to care for. Established industrial organizations would be disrupted and thrown into confusion. Trained and proven workers would have to be dropped, their places to be taken by men of relatively small experience with skills as yet not fully developed. The task of reconversion to a peace time economy, difficult at best, would be hampered to a degree that might well prove dangerous. Unemployment, if it comes, will be all the more devastating since it would fall most heavily on those of our working people who bear the greatest financial burden and who, by very reason of their years and length of employment at a given task, would find readjustment most difficult.

The advantage which the interpretation set out in Memorandum No. 190-A would seemingly give the veteran would, in the end, not profit him. The welfare of the veteran requires that he be assimilated as speedily as may be. Anything which serves to keep him differentiated and apart will do injury to him no less than to the community. Yet exactly that would result from any rule which would give to veterans a claim on jobs superior to all civilians. Veterans should receive from the government the help needed to make the transition, but once they reenter normal economic life they should do so as civilians on an equality with all others.

The Union's brief cites a number of instances in which other governmental agencies have refused to adopt the opinion given in Memorandum No. 190-A and the statements of spokesmen both for veterans and business interests in which the Memorandum is criticized as being without foundation in law and against sound policy. These serve to confirm me in my own views.

Decision:

I, the Arbitrator, having been designated in accordance with the Arbitration Agreement entered into by the above-named parties, and dated February 19, 1943, and the War Labor Board's Directive Order dated July 12, 1944, and having been duly sworn and having duly heard the proofs and allegations of the Parties, AWARD, as follows:

1. Under the provisions of the collective labor agreement in existence between the parties:

(a) a veteran is entitled to have his seniority accumulated during the period of time which he serves in the armed forces and on his return is entitled to be credited with the seniority so accumulated;

(b) no employee can be displaced to make room for a returned veteran if, after crediting the veteran with the seniority as so accumulated, such employee still has the greater seniority.

2. These provisions are not in conflict with the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended.

RECOMMENDATIONS by all organized labor to General Frank T. Hines, for presentation to the Advisory Council of the Retraining and Reemployment Administration.

SUBMITTED March 20, 1945, by signatory representatives of the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and the Railway Labor Executives Association.

INTRODUCTION

Having uprooted the veterans from civilian life, separated them from their families, interrupted their careers and subjected them to hazard of life and limb, the nation is obligated to facilitate their reintegration into productive employment and, to the maximum extent possible, to make them whole for the sufferings and hardships they have endured.

While realizing fully that the nation can never fully compensate the veteran for his sacrifices, every practicable step must be taken to restore him to a dignified and respected place in the civilian economy. All measures employed must be firmly grounded in the following principles:

1. Costs involved in the readjustment of veterans to a normal economic life are part of the expense of winning the war and, as such, a charge upon the nation as a whole.

2. No group must be permitted to shirk its share of the burden. All segments of the population must share equitably in bearing it. Above all, nothing must be done which would permit selfish elements to turn the veterans' plight to political or financial advantage.

3. Under conditions of modern total war, all persons make contributions to and sacrifices for the war effort in a manner and under conditions determined largely for and not by them. To attempt to grade the population into layers of employment preference -- rewarding some at the expense of others -- is bound to result in widespread inequity, for there is no logical basis upon which to assess the relative value of the individual cogs of the war machine.

4. Any attempt to establish orders of relative employment preference will prove unworkable in practice because private employers competing for profit must base their selections of individuals for employment on the qualifications of the applicant to perform the duties of the vacant job.

5. The social cost of the veterans' readjustment to civilian life will be minimized, the frictions accompanying it reduced, and the success of the readjustment process increased to the degree that we approach full employment.

6. Only full employment can assure to the veteran the security and opportunity he has earned at the risk of his life. Failure to maintain reasonably full employment will give rise to divisive social tensions threatening our country with the rise of a tyrannical dictatorship similar to those the veteran has fought to destroy in other lands.

7. A depressed economy would jeopardize the employed veteran's wage scale and force him to share his earnings, through taxation and otherwise, with his unemployed fellow citizens. His job would be endangered, first, by the lack of a market for the products of his labor and, secondly, by the willingness of others to do his work for lower wages. No form of veterans' preference could long withstand such economic pressures.

Our first obligation to the veteran, therefore, is to plan as a nation for an expanding economy in which there are jobs at decent wages for all able and willing to work.

Our second responsibility is to maintain intact for the veteran's return all the rights and privileges which he would have enjoyed had he remained continuously employed in the job he held before entering the armed forces.

Our third task is to assist the integration into new employment of those veterans who did not have jobs when they entered military service, those who cannot return to their old jobs, and those who seek wider opportunities than those available in their pre-service jobs.

I. MAINTENANCE OF JOB RIGHTS

A. Labor's Role

Organized labor has been deeply concerned for the preservation of the veteran's employment rights from the moment it was first proposed to enlarge the nation's military forces.

Labor was aware from the outset that the men for the expansion of the armed forces would have to come in large part from the families of the working people and from the membership of the trade unions.

But Labor considered itself responsible for protecting the jobs and the seniority rights of all workers taken out of civilian employment, whether or not trade union members.

Labor pressed for this statutory reemployment protection in the face of vigorous doubts expressed by members of Congress and high officers of the Army concerning its constitutionality.

Labor, therefore, has the right to speak with considerable authority as to the meaning of Section 8.

That section, in its mention of seniority, refers to an institution established and maintained by organized labor.

No one, therefore, is better qualified to interpret statutory seniority protection than the official spokesmen for the labor movement.

The rights of some 3,000,000 union members hinge on the interpretation to be given Section 8. Additional millions now serving in the armed forces are the sons and daughters of union members.

B. Statutory Rights

Conscious of its grave responsibility to its own member veterans, to veterans in general, and to the nation as a whole, labor calls for the reinterpretation of Section 8 in Selective Service Local Board Memorandum 190-A. This position is strengthened by the now apparent adverse effects of attempting to apply 190-A in the practical operation of established personnel policies.

Local Board Memorandum 190-A is incompatible with the intent of Congress, with the most adequate protection to the greatest proportion of veterans, with the efficient and orderly operation of our economy during the transition from war to peace, and with equity as among veterans and as between veterans and non-veterans.

In order to assure rationality, practicability and justice in the administration of veterans' statutory reemployment rights, Labor suggests the following principles on which the new interpretation should be based:

1. The statutory exclusion from reemployment protection of those veterans who before their entrance into the armed forces held "temporary positions" must be understood to refer only to those who at the time of hiring were notified that they were being hired as temporary employees; provided that even such persons are not to be deemed temporary if (a) by the time of their entrance into the armed forces they had acquired seniority rights under the seniority system operating in the plant regardless of whether such seniority system arises out of a collective bargaining agreement or out of established practice in the plant, or (b) the positions which they occupied prior to induction or similar positions still exist at the time of their discharge or release from military service or from hospitalization within one year following such discharge or release.

2. The provision of Section 8 specifying that its protection extends only to a veteran who "satisfactorily completes his period of training and service" must be understood to exclude only those who were dishonorably discharged. The subsequent enactment by Congress of the G.I. Bill of Rights whose benefits are available to all veterans discharged "under conditions other than dishonorable" must be considered clarification of the intent of Congress as expressed in the phrase "satisfactorily completed" in Section 8. In order to avoid confusion in the administration of the statute the armed services should be called upon to abandon the use of "intermediate" type discharges which are neither honorable nor dishonorable such as the Army's blue discharge.

3. The provisions of the statute requiring the restoration of the veteran to his former position or to one of "like seniority, status and pay" and "without loss of seniority" must be understood to call for the restoration to the veteran of all the job rights which he would have had if he had remained continuously in employment, during the entire period of his military service. Determination of the rights he would have had if not absent in service must be made on the basis of the seniority system existing in the plant. If no such system exists, the veteran's status relative to other workers must be determined in accordance with dates of first employment by the employer (giving consideration to continuity of employment) with the veteran having rights in layoff and rehire, promotion and demotion superior to those of workers hired later than he was and inferior to those of workers hired earlier.

4. If neither the veteran's former position nor another of like seniority, status and pay is available for him at the time he makes application for reinstatement the statute must be understood to protect his right to any other job which he can claim in accordance with the plant seniority system or, in the absence of an established seniority system, any job the duties of which he is qualified to perform and which is held by another worker first employed subsequent to the date when the veteran was hired.

5. If the employer is unable because of changed circumstances immediately to reemploy a veteran who makes application for reemployment within 90 days following his discharge from service the statute must be understood to protect his right for one year to any job he can claim in accordance with the plant seniority system or, in the absence of an established seniority system, to reemployment in any job the duties of which he is qualified to perform before the reemployment in that job of any other worker who was first employed subsequent to the date when the veteran was hired.

6. Where the veteran, because of a service connected disability, is unable to perform the duties of his former job, the statute must be understood to protect his rights to exercise his seniority claim to a job the duties of which he is qualified to perform. In the absence of an established seniority system the disabled veteran must be given such a job in preference to any other worker whose employment in the plant began at a date subsequent to that on which the veteran was hired.

7. Where a veteran is transferred to the Enlisted Reserve Corps on condition that he enter essential employment, and where employment with his with his former employer is not considered essential, the requirement that the veteran must apply for reinstatement within 90 days after being relieved from training and service must be understood to refer to the 90 day period running from the time he is no longer required to continue in essential employment.

8. The statutory rights of the veteran must be understood to be subject to his conformity with all reasonable conditions of employment to which he would have been required to conform had he remained continuously in employment.

These principles are stated in the interest of the veterans. In their application they give a great deal more protection than Local Board Memorandum 190-A which, assuming "super seniority", actually provides only a relatively few veterans a preferred position and only for one year. Under 190-A, the whole seniority system would be weakened, causing the loss of permanent rights to all veterans. In the second and succeeding years, when Section 8 of the Selective Service Act is no longer applicable, the veteran will be most in need of seniority protection.

II. NEW EMPLOYMENT

The disabled veteran has a claim on society which, in the employment relationship, can be satisfied only by voluntary action of management and labor.

Similarly, veterans obtaining new employment following discharge, or restored to their old employment despite failure to qualify for statutory reemployment rights, should be compensated for their loss of opportunity, while in military service, to acquire the security and job prerogatives obtained by other workers under the operation of the seniority system. This, also, can be accomplished only through the voluntary cooperation of labor and management.

It is therefore recommended that:

1. Management and labor should be encouraged to formulate special programs for the employment of veterans whose employment opportunities are limited by reason of service connected disabilities. Joint efforts should be made to discover jobs which they can fill and to alter the content of jobs where feasible to facilitate their employment. They should be guaranteed the wage paid to able-bodied workmen doing the same or similar work. Management and labor should be encouraged to accord them such additional privileges as may be found practicable in the circumstances of the individual plant.

2. Management and labor should be encouraged to agree that a veteran separated from military service under conditions other than dishonorable whose first employment following such separation was secured otherwise than by the exercise of statutory reemployment rights should, after completion of any probationary period in effect in the plant, be granted seniority credit for time spent in the armed forces after September 1, 1940. It is understood to be a part of this recommendation that such imputed seniority should not be applied in any employment situation where the public safety, welfare or interest would be jeopardized by assignment of a workman lacking sufficient experience on the job. This qualification is expressed because in certain jobs — such as in the transportation industry — seniority, experience and promotion are closely tied together.

Such imputed seniority, in all cases where it is accepted and applied, should determine the veterans' rights with respect to layoff and rehire.

Where seniority carries with it prerogatives involving costs to the employers, such as wage increases and insurance, vacation and pension rights based on length of service, employers should be urged, nevertheless, to commit themselves in good faith not to discriminate against qualified veterans for that reason. Such a committment should be made in consideration of the willingness of organized labor to subordinate the rights of those of its members with less actual seniority than the imputed seniority of the veterans. In the application of these considerations, the collective bargaining machinery should be fully utilized in adjudicating any differences that occur on the job, or any discrimination against the employment of veterans.

III. CONTINUING ACTION

Labor is fully aware that no statement of broad general principles will serve to resolve the almost infinite variety of complexities likely to arise in the restoration of millions of veterans to civilian employment. Good will, knowledge of industrial practice, and recognition of the debt which the nation owes the veterans provide the framework within which all of these problems are capable of solution.

It is therefore proposed that there be cooperatively established a continuing council representing management, labor, the veterans' organizations and the interested government agencies to develop in the light of experience policies, procedures and practices designed to facilitate the employment of veterans in their former jobs or in new jobs.

General Frank T. Hines, Administrator
Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion
Retraining and Reemployment Administration
Federal Works Agency Building
Washington 25, D.C.

Dear General Hines:

Reference is made to recommendations submitted to you March 20, 1945, for presentation to the Advisory Council of the Retraining and Reemployment Administration, signed by Messrs. Meany, Woll and Watt for the A. F. of L., and Messrs. Murray and Golden for the C.I.O., and to the letter attached thereto, signed by me as Executive Secretary, Railway Labor Executives' Association, advising of the procedure which would be necessary to secure approval of the recommendations by the Railway Labor Executives' Association.

The Association carefully reviewed the recommendations during the meeting March 28,29, and 30, 1945, and because of the historical background and the character of railroad seniority rules and regulations, has found it necessary to rewrite Part II of the recommendations. Part I and Part III of the document as originally submitted are approved by the Association together with that portion of the submission identified as the "Introduction". The revision of Part II is solely for the purpose of fitting the recommendations on "New Employment" to the long established regulations and practices prevailing in the Railroad Industry.

Twenty copies of this letter and of the revised recommendations reproduced in full, are being sent to you for the Advisory Council members. Five copies are being sent to the Honorable Daniel W. Tracy, Assistant Secretary of Labor. Copies are also being sent to Messrs. William Green, George Meany, Mathew Woll and Robert J. Watt of the A.F. of L., and to Messrs. Philip Murray, Clinton Golden and Ted F. Silvey of the C.I.O.

Assuring you of our desire to cooperate in every way possible in the continued consideration of all matters involving the retraining and reemployment interests of returning veterans, I remain

Yours very truly,

Julius G. Luhrsen, Executive Secretary
Railway Labor Executives' Association

NEW SECTION II, referred to by Julius Luhrsen letter of March 31, 1945.

II. NEW EMPLOYMENT

The disabled veteran has a claim on society which, in the employment relationship, can be satisfied only by voluntary action of management and labor.

This is not the only claim on society however. The ultimate classification of our workers as veterans and non-veterans must be recognized as largely accidental. Age, physical condition, professional training, occupational skill, marital status, geographical location, all have played their part in determining who would fight and who would work in the fulfillment of our country's wartime needs. All workers able and willing to work, and who should work, veterans and non-veterans alike, are entitled to jobs and the right to live normal lives when peace returns. This fundamental right must be protected by affirmative action. The negative approach laid down in Local Board Memorandum 190-A seeks by the devices of preferential treatment and discrimination to determine who shall be allowed to earn a livlihood and who shall be denied the opportunity to do so. The effect of this is the creation of a workers' cast system. Such a program not only fails to fulfill the obligation resting upon society as a whole, and upon government, but becomes a mechanism by which both society and government could renounce their plain obligations and impose those obligations upon a limited number of citizens who are guilty of no wrong, or of the evasion of any duty; citizens who are to be selected solely by the use of a yardstick of accidental origin.

In the railroad industry, seniority, experience, responsibility and promotion are so interwoven as to make it impossible to adopt any system of imputed or preferential seniority. All seniority in this industry is "earned" seniority. The rules and regulations governing the establishment and exercise of seniority have been in effect more than a half century, and have, in the course of their existence, been court-tested in many ways. Railroad employees' seniority and their service and promotion rights thereunder, are, by this history and by action of the courts, definitely established as property rights.

It is therefore recommended that as to new employment in the railroad industry:

1. Management and Labor should be encouraged to formulate special programs for the returning veterans with contract or statutory reemployment rights, who, because of service connected disabilities, are unable to resume their former occupations, and such programs should include a joint effort to discover jobs which they can fill or for which they can be trained, and to alter the content of jobs where feasible to facilitate their employment. And such employees should, when so placed, be guaranteed the wage paid to ablebodied workmen doing the same or similar work.

2. Where seniority carries with it prerogatives involving costs to the employers, such as wage increases and insurance, vacation and pension or retirement rights based on length of service, employers should be urged, nevertheless, to commit themselves in good faith not to discriminate against qualified veterans for that reason. In the application of these considerations the collective bargaining machinery should be fully utilized in adjudicating any differences that occur on the job, or any discrimination against the employment of veterans.

NEGRO WORKERS AFTER THE WAR

March 8, 1941. A day of swirling snow and whistling wind. Fighting the storm, bodies pushing stubbornly against the gale, fifty pickets, holding their signs in frozen fingers, marched back and forth before the plant of the Sperry Gyroscope Company in Brooklyn.

For the Sperry Company, recipient of more than fifty million dollars' worth of defense contracts, had stubbornly refused to hire Negroes. To rectify this injustice, more than half a dozen groups had banded together into the Brooklyn Joint Committee on Employment. Included were the National Negro Congress, the Urban League, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., Brooklyn churches.

The United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers of America, Local 1224, entered the fight. Although the Sperry plant was as yet unorganized, the union signed a pact of cooperation with the National Negro Congress. The local, which had temporarily closed its books because no more jobs were available at the moment, opened them again to Negroes in this emergency.

The company left communications unanswered, ignored requests for an interview, and refused admittance to a delegation. It admitted a second delegation on March 3, 1941, only to turn it away with answers that were no answers, without promises of employment. The factory, it was said, could use only "the best and most responsible workers."

There followed the picketing of the plant, a letter campaign, an organized barrage of telephone calls.

During the next year, things began to happen. President Roosevelt issued his Executive Order 8802, forbidding discrimination in plants working on government orders. The Fair Employment Practices Committee was established. A nation preparing to fight fascism began to polish up its armor of democracy at home, to tighten the seams, to caulk the cracks.

By September of 1941, the Sperry Company had hired four Negro assemblers. Just a beginning. It advertised for help, pledging that there would be no discrimination in employment.

Today there are hundreds of Negro workers in Sperry's five plants. Still not enough. But a vast improvement.

A Change of Heart

And in the summer of 1944, Mr. R. E. Gillmor, President of the Sperry Gyroscope Company, who had at first scorned to hire Negroes, refused to receive a delegation, failed to give more than evasive answers that were not answers, said in an inspiring speech before the national convention of the N.A.A.C.P. in Chicago:

"The story of the Negro personnel in the Sperry Gyroscope Company proves that they have held and will continue to hold their jobs and open up new and better opportunities for their race.

"Before the war," Mr. Gillmor continued, "my company had no Negro personnel. We were then employing for the most part very experienced skilled workmen. I cannot say that this was a reason for not employing colored people. Our employment of Negroes did not begin until 1941. Some of the Negro organizations had much to do with convincing us of the logic and ethics of this policy. To their credit be it said that in all of their representations they were intelligent, objective, and helpful. Negroes are now employed in 28 different occupations. One-third are in highly skilled occupations, one-third in semi-skilled, and one-third in other jobs. A considerable number are leaders, which is our designation for people who are acting as instructors and tool setters for groups of 10 to 20. One is a foreman in charge of all internal transportation in one of our most important plants. A small number occupy office positions. We had three colored engineers who did very satisfactory work."

And then Mr. Gillmor, who had expressed to a delegation the fear that white workers would refuse to work with Negroes, went on to say: "The threats never materialized, the doubts disappeared. Out of our 300 shop stewards, 22 are Negroes. One of the stewards is the only Negro in his department, so we have here an example of a Negro chosen by popular vote to represent an otherwise all-white department. Colored people are participating in the most natural way in many of the social and recreational activities of the Company."

We have retold this story, not in order to reopen old wounds or recall old quarrels with the Sperry Gyroscope Company. Our purpose is the opposite: to illustrate how a vast industrial concern, in the course of a great democratic war, and in the process of dealing with a progressive trade union movement and with organizations of the Negro people, made an abrupt change in its practices, and in the end benefited itself, the community, and the nation.

An Era of Progress

What happened at Sperry has happened in hundreds and thousands of factories and communities. Responsible for the transformation has been the policy of the Roosevelt administration, which has not hesitated to enforce equality even by moving in troops where that was necessary. Responsible has been the FEPC, which pried open doors that had been considered forever barred to Negroes. Responsible have been management; Negro and mixed organizations; and the great trade union movement, which knows that without the firmest unity of Negro and white, it is impotent to build its organizations. In the last few months have come two important and progressive court decisions. The first was the decision of the United States Supreme Court that railroad unions must give full representation to Negro members while operating under the Federal Railway Labor Act. The second was the decision of the California State Supreme Court, in the case of the Boilermakers, that a union, which has won or desires to win a closed shop agreement, must admit "Negroes to membership on the same terms and conditions applicable to non-Negroes."

The gates of industrial opportunity are swinging open to the Negro worker. Too slowly, yes. But they are swinging open.

And yet—the solution of every problem poses a new problem. Success, even partial success, in breaking down the barriers of discrimination in industrial life, has placed before us the question: Will the end of the war again see the doors of industrial opportunity closing in the face of the Negro working class?

We began our discussion with the story of the Sperry plant. Let's see what would happen to the Negro workers in Sperry's, if there were cutbacks amounting to 50 per cent, and if the seniority rules—last hired, first fired—were to operate without modification.

The Future for Negro Workers

To get the answer to that question, the National Negro Congress sent an investigator to the Sperry plant at Great Neck, L. I. This factory is the largest of the five belonging to the company, and the percentage of Negroes there—4.38—is higher than in any of its other four factories. The study was undertaken with cooperation of the union—Local 450 of the United Electrical Workers—and management, from the company records as they stood on November 8, 1944.

The type of seniority at this plant is based on occupation, and operates both plant-wide and company-wide. Seniority applies within the occupation. Employees who change from one occupation to another, for any reason at all, carry their seniority with them; that is, the seniority is cumulative.

The following facts were discovered:

Filers' and burrers' occupation: Total number of people employed, 549. Number of Negroes, 36. Negroes are therefore 7 per cent of the force of filers and burrers. In case of a 50 per cent layoff, with an unmodified application of seniority rules, there would be 275 people working at this occupation, and the number of Negroes would drop to 9. The percentage of Negroes would therefore fall from 7 to 3 per cent.

Assemblers' occupation: Total number of people employed, 1,677. Number of Negroes, 37. Negroes are therefore 2 per cent of the assemblers. In case of a 50 per cent layoff, there would be 839 people working at this occupation. Only one Negro would be left of the original 37. The percentage would drop from 2 to one-tenth of one per cent.

Inspectors' occupation: Total number of people employed, 973. Number of Negroes, 23. The percentage of Negroes is therefore 2. With a 50 per cent layoff, there would be 487 people in this occupation, and no Negroes at all. The percentage of Negroes would drop from 2 to 0. The right of Negroes to work as inspectors would be wiped out.

The National Negro Congress found a similar picture in other plants, showing that unless there is a modification of seniority rules, a large proportion of the gains made will be lost. Let us cite one more study, made at the United Transformer Corporation in New York City. This plant has had an unusually advanced policy in regard to the hiring of Negroes, due partly to management and partly to the union's nation-wide fight against discrimination. The plant is organized by Local 430 of the United Electrical Workers.

The type of seniority at the United Transformer Corporation is a combination of department and plant seniority. Employees who shift from one department to another have cumulative seniority, which applies in each department.

The study was made with cooperation of union and management, from the plant's personnel records as they stood on November 2, 1944. The following facts were discovered:

Willor Department: Employs 83 people. In case of a 50 per cent cutback, the proportion of Negroes would drop from 50 to 31 per cent.

Department C 410: Employs 107 people. In case of a 50 per cent cutback, the proportion of Negroes would drop from 62 to 31 per cent.

Department C 114: Employs 64 people. Proportion of Negroes would drop from 48 to 18 per cent.

Testing Department: Employs 34 people. Proportion of Negroes would rise from 28 to 29 per cent.

Ouncers: Employs 83 people. Proportion of Negroes would fall from 47 to 23 per cent.

Laminating Department: Employs 63 people. Proportion of Negroes would rise from 24 to 31 per cent.

Porters: There are only Negro porters in the plant.

Winding Department: Employs 186 people. Proportion of Negroes would fall from 30 to 13 per cent.

Power Press: Employs 49 people. Proportion of Negroes would fall from 33 to 16 per cent.

Assembly: Employs 194 people. Proportion of Negroes would fall from 37 to 25 per cent.

Thus, in two departments, the proportion of Negroes would rise by a strict application of seniority rules in case of a cutback. In all others, the proportion would fall.

First to Be Fired

Other studies which the Congress has undertaken, and reports coming in from all over the nation, show a similar picture. In the Detroit labor area, where heavy cutbacks have already taken place, those fired are almost exclusively Negro men, Negro women, and white women.

If, in the pre-war years, there had been no discrimination against Negroes in industry, a layoff of 50 per cent today would hit about half the Negroes and half the whites in a given plant. Actually, this is not the case. In the majority of instances, a layoff of 50 per cent would cause the Negroes to lose, not 50 per cent of the jobs they now hold, but 60, 70, 80, 90 or even 100 per cent of these jobs.

Efforts have been made to prove that, in spite of their recent advent into industry, Negroes do not have the lowest seniority. There is, for example, the argument that since seniority operates mostly on a department basis, and since Negro workers have, unfortunately, been less frequently upgraded, they have at any rate acquired an improved seniority status because they have been stuck for long periods in the same department. Our investigations have proved this to be untrue. In most factories where seniority is the basis of layoffs, it operates on a departmental or occupational scale, but dates from employment in any part of the plant. The seniority is cumulative, and the degree to which the worker is upgraded, or not upgraded, does not affect his status.

So the question arises: Will the unions, which have made such magnificent advances in tearing down the color barrier, allow unmodified and unadjusted seniority rules to become an instrument whereby pre-war discriminations may be frozen into post-war industry, the unions disrupted, the Negro and white workers alike weakened in organizational power?

But let's understand one thing first. It is not the unions, nor their seniority rules, that stand in the way of the Negro worker. No, no! Quite the opposite is true! If, with unmodified seniority regulations, Negro workers might suffer some injustices, without union organization and without seniority rules the full weight of prejudice would descend upon Negro employees. The seniority rules are themselves the best protection for Negroes in industry. If after the war—or before that time—an employer should decide to return to a lily-white employment policy, the union can stop him. It can point to the seniority status of this or that Negro worker. It can say: "You can't fire Mr. Jones, or Mr. Smith, or Miss Brown, because of their seniority rating."

The seniority rules are among the most important that the unions have evolved for the protection of all workers in industry, Negro and white. Seniority prevents throwing older workers on the scrap heap. It blocks attacks on the union through the firing of union members and union officials. It does away with favoritism. And, not least important, it prevents discrimination on the basis of race, color, sex, or religion.

Yet, because the gains made by Negroes in industry are very recent, the traditional application of seniority during periods of layoffs would erase many achievements. Thus the question arises as to whether some adjustment of the seniority rules will not be necessary in the transition from war to peace.

There are industries in which this question does not come up at all, because there the unions do not operate with seniority rules. In the marine industry the rotary hiring system prevails; the first man to hit the beach is the first to ship out again. There are other industries—shoe, fur, leather, needle trades, furniture—which divide the work equally among all.

Seniority Adjustments

But in industries where seniority is the basis of layoffs, and where Negroes, in alliance with organized labor, have made great gains, we face the problem: Shall not the unions, in order to maintain the unity of labor and the Negro people, in order to preserve the organization, in order to stay the hand of some employer who may wish to throw one group of workers into struggle with another—shall not these unions modify their seniority rules, where necessary, so that the discriminations of the past hundred years shall not reappear in the post-war era?

It is no answer to say, as a few employers and union officials have stated to representatives of the National Negro Congress: "We never discriminate. We treat everyone alike." Sometimes people who say this are deliberately evading the question. More often, they are sincere but just don't see that a problem exists. If we want to be wholly just, we cannot treat everyone alike. Negroes, unlike whites, have been subjected to industrial discrimination for a century and more. A runner tripped up just as the gun is fired for the race, needs a better-than-even break if he is to reach the tape in average time. Unions cannot be expected to wipe out, in a few years, all the effects of an evil system rooted in a long past. But they can be asked to adjust their practices so as to eliminate at least some of the worst results of that system.

The proposal for the adjustment of the seniority system has become one of the most hotly contested of all trade union issues. The fact that opinion is not instantly unanimous, is no cause for astonishment or alarm. This problem has no precedent. It is new to history. Never before has the labor movement been called upon to solve it.

New unionists, and some older ones, fear for the fate of the seniority system if it is subjected to adjustments. They point out, and justly, that seniority is the life-blood of a union. But they forget that a seniority system which, even though unintentionally, allows injustices to be perpetrated against a minority group, which records only the gains made years ago and fails to record and insure gains made more recently, is thereby weakening the union and weakening the principle of seniority.

Speaking before the national convention of the United Federal Workers in New York City in October 1944, Arthur Huff Fauset, member of the National Board of the National Negro Congress, drew upon his experience in Philadelphia's fight against the Sunday blue laws. He urged the delegates to remember that "the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." The seniority rules, he went on to say, were made for labor, not labor for the seniority rules. And the United Federal Workers then passed a resolution empowering the executive to take whatever steps might prove necessary to prevent injustice to the Negro people in layoffs.

Far from making a fetish of seniority rules, unions have in the past, and again in recent months, modified them as the need arose. For example, most union contracts state clearly that in case of layoffs, union officers working in the plant shall be the last to go. That is for the better functioning of the union. The contract between the Sperry Gyroscope Company and Local 450 of the United Electrical Workers states in its seniority clause: "Notwithstanding anything that may be contained herein, in the event of a layoff the following officials of the Union, during their term of office, shall be the last persons to be laid off in the bargaining unit: President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, Sixteen Executive Board Members, Four Trustees, Chairman and Secretary of the Grievance Board. Stewards shall have maximum plant-wide seniority within their occupations."

The Veterans' Problem

A more recent modification of seniority rules has been made for returning veterans. Since veterans have been absent from industry while the workers on the home front have accumulated seniority which—properly enough—entitles them to hold jobs, the problem has arisen that, on the basis of unadjusted seniority regulations, the veteran would be at a disadvantage.

Labor was ready for that problem. The C.I.O. made an agreement with the Veterans of Foreign Wars under which returning veterans are granted "accrued seniority"; the time spent in service counts as time spent on the job. At its national convention in November, the C.I.O. went further. It recommended to its affiliated unions that in the case of veterans employed in a given plant or industry for the first time, the same rule apply—accrued seniority for time spent in the armed services. These decisions will not only go far to help solve problems of the veterans; they will also bind the veterans more closely to the family of labor and make millions of new friends for the trade union movement.

Basic to any consideration of seniority adjustments is this fact: since the adoption of the seniority rules now in practice, the composition of the American working class has undergone vast changes. Millions of workers have left factories for the armed forces. Negroes and women have entered industry in unprecedented numbers. Seniority rules that were adequate three years ago may no longer reflect the actual situation. With a shifting scene, they may stand in need of adjustment, like scientific instruments whose readings require correction because of varying temperatures, atmospheric pressures, and the like. The instrument is not rejected; it is adjusted.

There are those who say: We should like to adjust our seniority regulations, but we dare not; the white workers will not stand for it. That argument is very old, and, in the light of experience, very unconvincing. It has been used whenever an advance has been proposed for Negroes, or Jews, or the foreign-born, or women. It was used by those who urged Lincoln to withhold his Emancipation Proclamation, and by those who counseled him not to allow Negro enlistments in the Union Army. The white population, they said, and the white soldiers, wouldn't stand for it. But those people were wrong. The Emancipation Proclamation and the presence of Negro troops were two strong pillars of morale for the Union.

We were told, when the question arose of bringing Negroes into war plants, that "white workers won't stand for it." Mr. Gillmor of Sperry's said just that. Later he said that the resistance had never materialized. That has been the story in most plants where Negro workers have been introduced for the first time.

When the need for mixed crews was first broached in the marine industry, many people said: "The white seamen won't put up with it." Especially was this argument used against promoting Negroes to ships' captains. It was said that the problems of interracial association are sharper at sea than on land. You can't leave the ship: on ship you not only work with your fellows, but eat, sleep, bathe, study, and play with them.

But today there are four American merchant ships sailing under Negro captains with mixed crews; soon there will be more. Every ship organized by the National Maritime Union leaves port with a mixed crew.

What has become, then, of the theory that "white seamen won't stand for it?"

The Question of Job Security

It is argued, also, that white workers have a further objection to seniority modifications: they joined the union chiefly for job security. That is true. But job security rests upon union security, and union security rests upon harmonious relations among workers and the elimination of antagonisms within the working class. If whites and Negroes are thrown into a scramble for employment, where then is the security of the union or the job?

Now to a different problem. How does all this jibe with the plan for full employment after the war? Won't full employment render all these special measures superfluous?

The answer is that a prosperous post-war world is the best framework within which to tackle the problems of the Negro worker. But full employment is not the complete answer. The special problems will still be there.

First of all, full employment will not be attained at once. During reconversion, however brief it may be, we may lose the gains of the war years, unless we take special steps to safeguard them. We may lose that unity which is so essential to the very existence of the union, so essential to the achievement of adequate reconversion legislation. Enemies of the nation will exploit, for their own purposes, heightened racial tensions. Among the first casualties would be the trade unions. It has never been otherwise.

But even when full employment is attained, the problem of the Negroes remains. Factories will expand and contract their labor force. A man who is transferred from one factory to another has a job, yes. But can the Negroes always form that group, or the heaviest proportion of that group, which is so transferred? Must they remain forever on the fringe of industry, fired when production slows down here, hired again when production expands elsewhere? If so, they will be merely a marginal labor group, moving from one factory to another, from one community to another, always beginning over again at the lowest seniority rating. They would achieve none of the benefits that come with higher seniority—vacations, bonuses, upgrading, pensions, or choice of work, such as choice of runs in the transport industry. They would fail to establish themselves in the life of factory or union local. Their families would never become a permanent part of the community.

Another point: a program of full employment demands public works—the building of roads, houses, hospitals, at public expense. The Baruch-Hancock report to President Roosevelt, on the subject of full employment, speaks of the necessity of public works and federal jobs even in the best of circumstances. Can we afford to have a heavier proportion of whites in private industry, and a heavier proportion of Negroes on public works? That would mean a physical separation, on the job, and in the union local, which would harm the union.

Just how serious the problem is, can be seen from a study of war and post-war trends in the employment of Negroes, made by the United States Department of Labor.* Here are its conclusions:

1. The Negro has made his greatest employment gains in those occupations which will suffer the greatest cutbacks during the post-war period.

2. He has made his biggest advances in those industries—metals, chemicals, and rubber—which will experience the greatest post-war declines.

3. The greatest Negro gains have been in congested production areas where the most extensive readjustment of the labor force will be necessary.

4. In those occupations and industries in which the Negro has made the most advances, he was generally among the last to be hired. Therefore, under the usual seniority rules, he is more likely to be laid off than the average worker in these occupations.

Adjustment of seniority rules is by no means the only method of fighting discrimination. Fundamental to a solution is full, planned employment. Fundamental also is a permanent FEPC. Fundamental is an expansion of the excellent work done by some A. F. of L. unions, such as the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators, and Paperhangers, in counteracting Jim-Crowism, and the elimination of still existing discriminations in other organizations of the A. F. of L. Important, too, is the winning of over-all anti-discrimination clauses in union contracts, such as that already agreed upon between the International Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists, and Technicians, and Henry J. Kaiser's Permanente Metals Corporation, which operates the Kaiser shipyards.*

But seniority adjustments are also important. They will at least prevent our losing what we have already gained.

A New Emancipation Proclamation

There are demagogues of all races who predict that the war will be followed by racial strife, who declare that the Negroes are wanted by industry and by the unions only for the duration. We know this to be untrue. Seldom has there been a more heartening event than the passage of the resolution against discrimination at the last C.I.O. convention. That resolution might well be considered a second Emancipation Proclamation. It marks the binding of the Negro people to the labor movement. For the sake of those who have not read it, we reprint here, in its entirety, this magnificent document. We will add only that the C.I.O., at the same time, rejected a profferred amendment which would have prevented any adjustment of seniority rules by affiliated unions.

> "WHEREAS, The firm and unwavering policy of the C.I.O. against discrimination toward Negro and other minorities has been a cornerstone of the C.I.O., as expressed in our constitution and in subsequent declarations and actions.

"This policy has been of material aid to the Negro people and to people of other minorities and has been the basis of many of the material gains made by such peoples. It has further been of great aid in advancing our national war effort and the national unity that we have achieved in prosecuting the war.

"The advances made by the Negro workers through the Fair Employment Practices Committee, and the enlistment of many scores of thousands of minority people in war production, are also basically due to the anti-discrimination policy of the C.I.O., which has done most to bring these questions forward.

"Our policy has in addition helped in the closer integration of Negro soldiers, sailors and other service personnel in the armed forces, as shown in the various steps taken toward admitting them as active combatants in the Army and Navy and in the breaking down of restrictions in canteens, post exchanges, and the like; now, therefore, be it

"RESOLVED, that (1) the C.I.O. again reaffirms its unwavering opposition to discrimination against the Negro people or the people of any other minority.

" (2) The gains that have been achieved must not be lost in the post-war. The C.I.O. urges all affiliated unions to renewed vigilance against any form of racial discrimination, and to prevent anti-union employers from taking any steps which are designed to return to previous conditions of discrimination and thereby reduce the gains that all workers have won.

"We recommend that the C.I.O. unions seek the incorporation into collective bargaining agreements a provision that no person seeking employment shall be discriminated against because of race, creed, color, or place of origin.

"(3) The C.I.O. commends the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices for its splendid work and important achievements procured in spite of the opposition of its enemies. We call upon Congress to enact legislation that will make the Fair Employment Practices Committee a permanent institution and confer upon the agency authority to enforce its decision.

"(4) Out of this war must emerge a complete understanding and determination on the part of the American people that full political and economic equality must be accorded to all Americans. Jim-Crowism, the abominable poll-tax, and any other form of discrimination and bigotry must be excised from our national life. The struggle against these vicious practices would be the strongest weapon in forging real and effective national unity among all decent-minded Americans."

The National Negro Congress does not propose detailed plans for seniority adjustments. That is the job of the unions. It is they who must take the initiative.

Our studies have shown that the picture is not a uniform one. In each industry, in each factory, perhaps in each department, the plan will vary. But we do know that the unions whose white and Negro brothers and sisters have fought so splendidly for the Negro people, will take whatever measures are needed to maintain the gains of wartime. They will not let us down; of that we are assured.

LET'S FACE THE ISSUE

The National Negro Congress was organized in February, 1936, shortly after the organization of the C.I.O. One of the main objectives of the Congress, written into its constitution, was "to promote the cause of trade unionism among Negroes."

Large Negro memberships in the U.A.W., Tobacco Workers, and the Steel and Mine unions, show the success of some of our early efforts to integrate Negro workers into industrial unions.

The demonstrated political unity of the Negro people and labor, the increasing integration of Negro workers into unions, the healthy participation of many progressive unions in the whole struggle for Negro rights, these are the significant gains which the National Negro Congress has worked to establish during its eight years existence.

This pamphlet is designed to present one aspect of the post-war job situation with respect to Negro workers and to stimulate thought, discussion and action on this aspect of the problem. We have not attempted to set forth a formula to solve this particular problem, for indeed there is no one formula which will work in all situations.

We have confidence that the labor movement which has, to such a great degree, helped to establish equal job rights for Negroes during the war, will begin now to plan ways to maintain and extend those rights during reconversion and in the post-war period.

tion and discussion, brings it to the attention of the labor participation committee of the Council of Social Agencies or to the legislative and political action committees of the CIO Council, for consideration and disposition.

Social agencies have cooperated; they have furnished resource people, provided directories (an excellent one entitled "What's Your Problem?" has been published by the Council of Social Agencies of Metropolitan Detroit for 1945-46), promoted refresher courses (through monthly counselling clinics) and handled referrals.

It is this kind of cooperation that has given many union members, perhaps for the first time, an appreciation of the needs and problems of social agencies and social workers which can only bring them closer together.

Union members had little patience with social welfare workers in the past. Workers in need used to find themselves in the undignified and uncomfortable position of receiving handouts after first receiving the run-around. They still remember this vicious practice when, as union counsellors and as CIO representatives on agency boards, they meet social workers and participate in the deliberations and operations of the agencies. Here, they see a sincere group of serious-minded men and women caught in a net of conflicting social and economic forces, professional prejudices, antiquated traditions, financial limitations and governing boards known more for their deep sentimentalism and balanced budgets than for profound understanding and promotion of balanced communities.

The union counsellors and CIO board representatives talk these things over and usually arrive at the conclusion that the social worker and the social agency are themselves badly in need of assistance.

At the same time, the social worker and the social agency, reaching out of their strangling limitations and fierce frustration, find allies in the union counsellors and CIO board members. (Here it should be mentioned that union counsellors, by virtue of their training and experiences, often make the best CIO representatives on agency boards.)

CIO Helps

There are many progressive measures social workers know should be taken along legislative and political lines, which the agency, because of binding rules, cannot do itself. They soon discover they can always rely on CIO support to further such measures. Only recently they observed an active CIO campaign in support of the continuation of federal aid for child welfare centers.

They know, too, of the huge sums of money CIO members, as a group, pour into community chests. During the four war years alone CIO contributed more than $100,000,000 for community welfare work and foreign relief through the National War Fund, American Red Cross and Community Chests.

Social workers appreciate the significance of union counselling as a great interpretative force of their own problems, needs, hopes and aspirations, to thousands of citizens in the community who have never been reached before.

All this makes for common ground, for mutual understanding, for a sound foundation upon which a wholesome relationship can be established and extended in the common cause of furthering human welfare in a democratic and dignified manner.

SOMETIMES I think the price of Democracy is confusion.

I sat in on a veterans' committee meeting of a large east coast manufacturing plant the other day. The committee was representative of both management and labor. They were meeting to establish policy on the delicate question of veterans' seniority.

The union had a proposal that went right down the line of established CIO policy. Veterans should get seniority credit for the time they spent in the service, they said, but shouldn't be given super-seniority.

The company representatives didn't like super-seniority any more than the union did. They explained that, although they had a super-seniority clause "on paper," they "talked" to veterans before rehiring and told them these things:

1—They could have their old jobs back under the law, but,

2—It would mean bumping an older man with from ten to twenty years of experience in the plant, and,

3—The older man could have a leave of absence. At the end of a year he would be rehired. Since the veteran would no longer be under the protection of the Selective Service Act, he could then be displaced by the older man, so,

4—Would the veteran consider taking another job—one based on his original seniority plus the time he spent in the service?

The personnel man who was telling us this said that so far, veterans had listened and agreed with him. No good would come from super-seniority, they said. However, with a great number of servicemen returning, the personnel man felt it was time for a broad and open policy to be formed.

With unions, employers, and the veterans themselves declaring the falsity of super-seniority, why do we have a law of the land that insists on super-seniority? I'm wrong on that score. There is no such law, but there is an interpretation of the Selective Service Act by General Lewis B. Hershey that upholds super-seniority. Although the General's interpretation is merely an opinion which has been refuted by arbitrators and impartial judges throughout the country, and although it has no legal backing, many employers, unable to keep up with all the complex workings of Selective Service, are taking Hershey's opinion as law. They are following his directive for the simple reason that they don't know what else to follow.

In the case of the meeting I attended, a reasonable solution was found. Management agreed to give veterans accrued seniority for the time they spent in the service. The first step would be to try to place veterans in their original departments. If this failed because all men in that department had a higher seniority, then veterans would be given plant-wide seniority.

It was agreed that a joint statement of the rehiring plan would be issued by the company and the union and that all veterans now employed would be asked to vote on the plan.

This method will give the company, which is still a little timid about all this, the protection it is seeking, and at the same time assure veterans of a better long-term break and protection by the union in the days when Selective Service shrugs off its responsibilities toward ex-fighting men. One year from the date of discharge.)

Other plants juggling the hot seniority issue might take a tip from the above example.

Seniority

SENIORITY AND THE NEGRO WORKER

by Robert C. Weaver
Director of Community Services
American Council on Race Relations

I

THE NATURE OF SENIORITY

No discussion of the Negro in the postwar or of Negro-union relations progresses very far without reference to seniority. The fact that by 1945 unions had bargaining contracts covering almost two thirds of the workers in manufacturing industries and that in such important types of war production as aluminum, automobiles, nonferrous metal smelting and refining, shipbuilding and basic steel over 90 per cent of the workers were under union agreements makes consideration of the subject inevitable. While there is much generalization about seniority and Negro labor, there can be no sound conclusion which will cover all or a majority of possible situations. Seniority, as all devices relating to layoffs and re-employment, will have different effects in different industries and plants and from one worker to another.

What Seniority Is

In the simplest terms seniority is preference in employment based upon length of service. It is intended to offer maximum security and most desirable types of work to those who have rendered the longest service. Seniority was first developed in those industries where employment was fairly stable and by unions which were composed of skilled workers. As soon as the skilled workers on railroads had secured recognition and collective bargaining agreements, they pressed for seniority as a means of overcoming favoritism in an industry where employment tenure was interrupted by frequent transfers and layoffs. The printing trades unions also pressed for seniority early in their development. The Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported that in both instances seniority served to reduce greatly the number of craftsmen in the labor market. In less stable types of employment, such as building construction, clothing, and coal mining, there is an almost complete absence of seniority provisions in union agreements. Because a large part of the working force in these industries is simultaneously affected by slack work, most unions having jurisdiction in them have preferred work-sharing to seniority arrangements. No doubt the fact that many of the unions involved have traditionally received a large number of semiskilled and untrained recruits has also recommended the work rotation plan to them.

The development of work-sharing in coal mining and clothing has some interesting implications for the newer industrial unions. During the reconversion period many of these mass production unions will have a large part of their membership affected by slack work at one time . They, no less than construction, coal mining, and clothing, will have a large reserve of unemployed, trained operatives and unskilled workers on their rolls. It may be that in the next few years the desirability of seniority in these unions will be questioned. At the present, however, most unions have accepted and are championing application of seniority in layoffs and subsequent rehirings. No doubt the problem of the returning veteran, to whom some employers in a sudden burst of patriotism want to give job preference, has gone far to dictate the unquestioning acceptance of seniority during reconversion by the newer unions.

Although there are many types of seniority the following are the most important: (a) company or plant-wide seniority under which seniority is computed upon the length of service in the company or the plant, and transfers from job to job within the plant or company have no effect on seniority standing (b) departmental or occupational seniority under which there are separate departmental or occupational seniority lists; (c) various combinations of (a) and (b).

In each type of seniority it is customary to lay off those with the least amount of seniority first and to effect reemployment in reverse order to layoffs. Such a procedure is in accordance with "strict seniority," the norm around which all seniority agreements are developed.

Seniority and the Negro Worker

Were there no union seniority agreements hundreds of thousands of Negroes would be displaced from their wartime jobs during the reconversion. This would be true for many reasons. In the first place, in periods of large-scale unemployment workers new to an industry, a plant, or an occupation are usually let out as a group before employees with longer service records. This is a form of employers' seniority. It differs from union seniority in that it is open to many exceptions and affords the individual with long work experience no assured job security. For a group new to industrial employment, such as Negroes, however, it usually operates to effect general displacement when there is widespread unemployment. In the depression of the 1930's, for example, few Negroes in mass production industries (where most colored workers had been used) were affected by union seniority agreements; yet Negroes suffered great displacement.

Second, a large proportion of Negro war workers are concentrated in industries, such as shipbuilding, which will suffer extreme cutbacks in the near future. Many shipyards will close down completely, and all workers, white and black alike, will be displaced permanently. Seniority will have no bearing on this dislocation. Finally, a disproportionately large number of colored men and women have been in government establishments - on temporary appointments. At the end of the war, most of these workers will be discharged, and union seniority agreements will not influence this development.

In some industries and plants, union seniority will accelerate the displacement of colored war workers; in others it will operate to preserve the numerical gains in employment which Negroes have made during the war. For those workers who are fortunate enough to retain jobs in plants where they worked during the war, union seniority will have significant bearing on postwar occupational status. For all workers covered by seniority agreements, union seniority will establish objective factors determining job continuity, upgrading, or downgrading. The opportunity to retain a job, to remain in a skilled or semiskilled job, or to replace another worker at a lower level of skill will depend upon the worker's position on a seniority list rather than the whim of a foreman or the attitude of management. Under such an arrangement, the important factors are the rules for determining seniority lists, the regulations governing the operation of union seniority and the way management and unions carry out their agreements.

In general, it may be said that three over-all developments will determine the influence of union seniority upon Negro war workers. The first and all-important is the volume of employment. The second is the degree to which service men, formerly employed in a given plant, decide to return to their old jobs, and the third is the proportion of women (white) with longer seniority than Negro males who decide to stay on their wartime jobs. All of these are unknowns. It is, however, safe to assume (and fragmentary figures support this) that in a heavy and dirty industry, such as iron and steel, a smaller proportion of veterans will elect to take up their seniority rights than in a lighter, higher-wage industry, such as automobiles. Also, a larger proportion of veterans and women will elect to use their seniority in a light industry, such as electrical goods, than in a heavy, lower-wage industry, such as meat packing.

In many instances, however, the returning veteran will not have a chance to exercise his preference for certain types of work. One example will suffice to indicate the nature of this problem. Thousands of young men have been trained for aviation during the war; a large majority would like to remain in the industry,

But the predictable postwar employment level of aviation will afford job opportunities for only a small fraction of those who may want to go into aviation after the war, and if they have seniority rights in another industry, a large proportion will probably use them. The proportion will depend upon alternative work opportunities, and this will reflect the volume of employment in the nation.

Negroes have just recently been upgraded in some industries and in many plants. In such instances, the type of seniority - plant-wide, departmental, or occupational - will influence the extent to which these occupational gains are maintained. Where Negroes have long been employed in appreciable numbers and have recently been upgraded, plant-wide seniority will usually promote and assure their retention of better jobs, since it will permit them to bid for any and all types of work. In other plants where Negroes were concentrated in a few departments prior to the war and have recently been upgraded to lighter, cleaner, better-paying jobs in other departments, departmental seniority will accelerate their downgrading, since it will restrict their employment to a few types of work. In still other plants where Negroes have been recently upgraded, occupational seniority will have a similar effect. In addition, there are special types of seniority, such as the granting of plant-wide seniority to all workers with continuity of employment as of a given date (usually in the 1930's, when there were few Negro employees), and permitting such employees to use their seniority on a plant-wide basis in selecting any job for which they may be qualified. Where, as is often the case, colored workers were concentrated in only a few types of production jobs and in unskilled work before the war, such agreements will wipe out many of their recent occupational gains.

II

THE AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY

An analysis of seniority in the automobile industry of Detroit is instructive. In the first place, automobiles present the case of an industry in which there will be intense reconversion problems and temporary unemployment. Second, the automobile industry stands midway between those types of production in which there will be almost complete permanent shut-down of most plants and those in which the present volume of production and employment will expand; in the automobile industry there will be a decline in payrolls incident to reconversion but the estimated loss of employees is only 20 per cent of the wartime peak, and the postwar volume of employment is expected to be above any peacetime level.

By March, 1945, the 75,000 Negroes employed in automobile plants in Detroit constituted about 15 per cent of all the workers in the principal plants of the industry. The hiring of colored women was delayed until long after Negro men and white women had been accepted, but by the spring of 1945, colored women had entered the industry in sizable numbers. With, and as a necessary condition to this expanded employment of Negroes there came significant occupational advancement. True, Negroes have not achieved equal upgrading opportunities, but there had been sufficient changes in the industry's occupational color patterns to make the preservation of wartime gains an extremely important and desirable goal to the Negro worker and the Negro community.

The problem was complicated by many factors. At first certain spokesmen for the automobile industry stated that the industry contemplated employing every available man in the Detroit area for peacetime production. The Detroit City Plan Commission, however, has estimated that after reconversion unemployment in the city may range between 100,000 and 300,000; and interviews with employers in the spring of 1945 indicated that many contemplated sizable declines in payrolls when they returned to peacetime production. It appeared that the big three, General Motors, Chrysler and Ford, would certainly reduce their employment rolls in the peace, although it was impossible to secure an accurate estimate of the extent to which reductions would be made. The Briggs Manufacturing Company had announced a 50 per cent cut in employment after the war, and the Packard Motor Company contemplated a comparable contraction. Hudson contemplated reducing its labor force from 17,000 in March, 1945, to about 13,000 in the postwar period. The Kelsey Hayes Wheel Company expected a decline from 6,000 to 4,000. A few companies, such as Bohn Aluminum and Brass, and Ex-Cell-O, expected to expand in the postwar period. Some of the others, such as Packard and Vickers, expected to achieve postwar levels of employment higher than the prewar ones; many of the companies were thinking of returning to 1940 volumes of employment.

As early as the spring of 1945, layoffs were facing the automobile industry and harassing its employees. Estimates varied as to the extent of the displacement which would follow V-E day, but most competent observers put the figure between 250,000 and 400,000. On May 15, 1945, Murray Corporation of America, which had employed 11,000 during its wartime peak, reduced its payroll to 5,000. Workers hired as late as 1934 were included among those displaced. Total employment was reduced slightly over 50 per cent; Negro employment was reduced by about the same percentage.

Nowhere is the issue of veterans' treatment under union seniority more alive than in Detroit. Mr. W. Cronin, secretary of the Veterans' Committee of the Automotive War Production Council, speaking for the industry, has already demanded a change in seniority rules to permit the hiring of service men who have never been employed by the industry. He wants to provide for the employment of an equitable percentage of war veterans in the peacetime, proposing that veterans be placed "at least on equal footing with men and women who have entered the industry since the war began."

The UAW and many other unions have already agreed that all service men should be credited with employment seniority for the time they have spent in uniform. But this does not begin for the ex-service man without previous work experience in a plant until he gets a job, and it does not permit a newly hired veteran to displace a worker who has acquired seniority through employment in a plant since Pearl Harbor.

With such a sharp difference of opinion on this matter, seniority has become one of the most pressing issues in the automobile industry. The union takes the position that if it gives in on this matter, its existence in the industry is endangered if not lost. On the other hand, the union is conscious of the dangers which will arise if it is maneuvered into a position where it can be blamed for the continuing unemployment of service men.

It is in such a complex situation that the problems of Negro displacement and downgrading incident to seniority have arisen. Special treatment for the Negro worker who entered the industry after Pearl Harbor will certainly lead to additional pressure for special treatment for the veteran without past employment status. And, to add more confusion, these two groups are highly competitive; because if there is the type of postwar expansion in the automobile industry which a few prophesy (and many hope for) the new Negro worker and the new white worker would have less chance for a postwar job if the veteran without employment experience were "at least on equal footing" with them.

The Six-Point Transfer Agreement

The six-point agreement which governed the transfer of workers in the automobile industry from peacetime to wartime production in 1940 set forth the basic seniority principle which will govern employment patterns in the reconversion period. According to this agreement, the worker transferred out of a peacetime job accumulated seniority in that job regardless of what he did in war production. In only a few instances were there deviations from this basic principle, as in a small number of plants where labor-management contracts provided that a worker might take his peacetime seniority to his new department.

It may be well to pause and consider what the over-all seniority provision contained in the six-point transfer agreement means to Negro workers. At the outset it must be realized that it can mean different things depending upon the volume and nature of postwar production. In instances where a plant will expand in peacetime (an exceptional case in automobiles), such an agreement would limit the total employment and occupational diversification of Negro workers. This would follow because colored workers would accumulate seniority only in those few jobs in which they were employed in the prewar years. Since, however, most Negroes in automobile plants on V-E day were employed after 1942, most would have no seniority. For those with seniority there would be job rights only in the occupations (usually foundry, janitorial and service) or in those departments where colored workers were employed prior to the war. The situation would, in many respects, be similar to that at the time of conversion to war production, when, under existing seniority agreements, Negroes were not eligible for upgrading into production jobs.

Under conditions of lesser volume of employment in peacetime, the situation is more complex. There would be much displacement, and any type of union seniority (or the absence of union seniority) would involve the discharge of a large number of colored (as well as white) workers. In some instances, where management is favorable to Negroes, the extent of this displacement would be less without union seniority; in other instances, management might seize upon a loose labor market situation as the excuse for dismissing all Negroes, or the vast majority of them. Under the six-point transfer agreement a larger number of Negroes would probably remain on the payroll than under conditions of plant-wide seniority, since the older Negro worker would have the right to jobs in occupations which had traditionally been manned by Negroes. The older Negro employees would continue to work in a few departments, but they would lose most if not all of their wartime occupational advancement.

The Chrysler Motor Corporation

During peacetime production the Chrysler plants hired slightly less than 2,000 Negroes - all males; approximately 90 per cent of these were in the Detroit plants. In April, 1945, the corporation employed over 18,000 Negroes, and about 10,500 were in Detroit, where they made up over 15 per cent of the working force. No Negro women were employed prior to Pearl Harbor, but by April, 1945, there were over 5,000 colored women, who made up over 15 per cent of all female workers in Chrysler plants.

Occupational changes, too, have been important for Negroes in Chrysler. Negro men and women now work in each of the Detroit plants in nearly every production capacity and in every unskilled capacity. Some colored men are in skilled jobs. Colored women are engaged principally in aircraft manufacturing as riveters and kindred assembly operations, in maintenance as sweepers and cleaners, in truck assembly, and in core-making in foundry. Negro men, including a large number who in prewar days were janitors, yard laborers and foundry laborers, are working in many types of machine production, assembly, inspection and maintenance jobs.

The employment of male Negroes as semiskilled workers began early in 1941 and gave rise to the first work stoppages incident to Negro upgrading in the industry. Following the solution of this difficulty, the transfer and upgrading of Negroes with long seniority continued in various Detroit Chrysler plants; it was most prevalent in the Highland Park, Kercheral, and Jefferson plants.

Before the war and during the earlier phases of conversion, there were separate seniority lists for colored and white workers. These lists were based either on occupational or departmental classifications. When the industry converted to war production, such separate seniority lists were impediments to Negroes' upgrading and their utilization on war contracts; separate seniority lists were abandoned. This facilitated the transfer and upgrading of colored workers in accordance with seniority provisions. In Chrysler, as in other automobile companies, the amount of this upgrading depended upon the extent that

(a) Negroes intelligently requested upgrading;

(b) Unions insisted that they be upgraded and effected the approval, support or sufferance of white workers;

(c) Upgrading of Negroes would benefit the company;

(d) Company officials cooperated in facilitating Negro upgrading.

Once the ice was broken and the older Negro Chrysler employees had been placed in better jobs, it became easier to employ new Negroes in similar occupations. And this was important in Detroit because there was a sizable number of Negroes trained for production work.

At most Chrysler plants it is generally understood that all peacetime employees transferred to wartime occupations accumulated seniority in their peacetime jobs. It is also understood that there are and will be considerable variations among Chrysler plants as to the application of union seniority after the war. In addition to the master contract between the company and the Chrysler Department of the International Union of UAW-CIO, supplementary agreements have been negotiated between local unions and individual Chrysler plants. One of the most interesting of these covers the Chrysler Jefferson plant.

Early in May, 1945, officials of the Chrysler Jefferson local reached a supplementary agreement with management providing that plant-wide seniority will apply to all employees who had seniority prior to January, 1938. Prior to this date few Negroes were in the plant. But the few who were in janitor and laborer capacities may, under the terms of this contract, use their pre-1938 seniority to qualify for any job in the plant for which they have training. As a matter of fact, however, most of the Negroes with long seniority at the Chrysler Jefferson plant did not seek or secure training for production jobs. Consequently, the majority of the colored workers who have the longest seniority and the greatest opportunity to bid for the better jobs at the plant are not trained to perform these jobs and will not be able to benefit from the upgrading possibility which union seniority affords them.

Under the provisions of this proposed supplementary agreement, a few of the older Negro workers may be much better off occupationally after the war than they were before, and what is more, they may be better off after the war than they were during the war. At the same time, some Negroes hired before 1938 may be displaced since under plant-wide seniority they will be competing with all workers hired prior to 1938 rather than only with those workers in departments where Negroes were traditionally employed in peacetime production. White workers who under peacetime seniority could not bid for jobs outside their departments, will be able to compete for work as janitors and laborers, and many with long seniority, formerly in jobs for which there may be less demand than in prewar years, may displace individual Negroes from their prewar jobs. Since most of these prewar Negro jobs were unskilled, most whites will be qualified to perform them. The reverse of this, of course, is also true and may result in Negroes' displacing white workers. But since the proportion of Negroes at the Chrysler Jefferson plant with pre-1938 seniority and the number of postwar jobs they are qualified to perform are small, the net result will not be in the Negro worker's favor.

This supplementary agreement would also mean that all new workers hired during the war period will be reemployed on the basis of seniority and qualifications. Since, however, Negroes were not hired in significant numbers until late 1942, many of them have little seniority and would be in an unfavorable competitive position.

Other Automobile Plants

In general, the situation at Chrysler is typical of the automobile industry. Seniority will displace many Negro men and most Negro women. It will also accelerate the downgrading of Negro workers, although the extent of this downgrading will depend upon the prewar occupational distribution of Negroes, the type of seniority agreement, and the influence of supplementary agreements. A few tentative analyses of other firms will illustrate the nature of problems which lie ahead.

The Briggs Manufacturing Company

The Briggs Manufacturing Company contemplates a peacetime payroll of 14,000 which is the same size as the employment in January, 1941. At the latter date there were 1,500 Negro workers; in the spring of 1945, when there were 26,000 workers at Briggs, some 5,000 Negroes were employed. Prior to the war, colored workers were used principally as material handlers, body sanders, janitors and laborers. During the war they moved into many new and more desirable classifications.

In the spring of 1945, the company announced its intention to hire over a thousand veterans with less than 90 days or no seniority, 7,880 then on the company rolls with seniority as of May, 1940, or earlier, 610 not then working with the company but with seniority as of or before May, 1940, some 4,300 veterans with more than 90-day seniority, and 255 employees with seniority after May, 1940.

Since the majority of Negro war workers were hired after 1942, it is clear that practically none of the 3,500 Negroes recently hired would have any claim on a postwar job.

Even if the company is not successful in abrogating union seniority rules so as to hire over a thousand new veterans, the majority of new Negro employees will not have enough seniority to qualify for a postwar job. Whereas in some plants, the turnover of new white workers has been so great as to remove many from the seniority rolls and give the Negro a higher place on the list, it appears that at Briggs the date of entrance for the first Negro war workers to be hired is so recent as to remove this as an effective factor. It seems, therefore, that the volume of Negro employment, as the volume of total employment, will be about the same as the prewar level. Since, however, Negroes constituted 10 per cent of the workers at Briggs, it is doubtful if, even in the absence of seniority, they would be a much larger proportion in peacetime production.

Under the six-point transfer agreement, Negro workers at Briggs would lose most of their occupational gains. This would follow because workers would accumulate seniority in their original classification. There is, however, an additional factor operating to assure this. The officers of the Briggs local were among the first to negotiate a supplementary seniority agreement, and it specifically states that when war work is completed the employee returns to his former classification. This supplementary agreement and the terms of the six-point transfer agreement, if carried out, will assure the loss of most of the Negro's wartime occupational gains.

The Packard Motor Car Company

The Packard Motor Car Company, where management's and union's early passing the buck on matters of Negro upgrading occasioned a veritable crop of hate strikes, has announced that the volume of Negro employment and the occupational opportunities for Negroes will be appreciably better in the postwar period than in the prewar years. In 1940, Packard hired 10,000 workers, of whom less than four per cent were colored; these Negroes were concentrated in the foundry. In January, 1945, Packard had 38,000 on its payroll, of whom 17 per cent were Negroes; by March, employment had declined to 28,100, and Negroes made up 14 per cent of the total. Colored workers have been employed in many new occupations at Packard during the war.

The company plans to hire 18,000 workers in peacetime production, an increase of 8,000 over prewar levels. The union seniority agreements in force in the spring of 1945 provided for plant-wide seniority with the privilege to interchange with any similar classification or job in the company. In addition, turnover has been extremely high at Packard during the war (in 1944 the company hired 80,500 workers), and some colored workers with late entrance date have been able to advance on the seniority lists. Negroes with long seniority (of whom there are about 400) will be able to maintain their positions in skilled and semiskilled classifications by keeping wartime jobs or displacing workers on a job for which the colored worker has "the necessary skill and ability to perform."

As a result of this situation, the company has estimated that 1,800, or 10 per cent of its postwar labor force, will be Negroes. This may be over-optimistic, since there are some 8,000 veterans with seniority, and probably two thirds of them will demand their old jobs. These 5,300 veterans and a larger number of employees with seniority as of 1940 or earlier (of both groups, no more than four per cent Negroes can be expected) will fill the bulk of the available jobs. No more than five or six thousand workers with seniority as of 1940 or less will probably be retained. Even with this less optimistic estimate, it appears that plant-wide seniority at Packard, under conditions of a much higher volume of employment than before the war, could result in an appreciable increase in Negro employment and occupational advancement than existed in prewar production.

But there is a complicating factor. The reduction of the labor force at Packard from 38,000 to 18,000 will create a very complex situation in which jobs will be abolished, new ones created, and production greatly modified. In order for a worker to bid for a job in peacetime production, he must know where the job is or will be and something of the nature of the process involved. Also, the company will probably attempt to stabilize the working force by insisting that a large volume of these transfers be supported by grievance procedure. Consequently, the individual worker's chance to get a desirable job, even if he has the necessary seniority, will depend largely upon the support he gets from his shop steward or local union officials. The past record of the Packard local in handling Negro-white relations suggests that the Negro's post-war possibilities at Packard may be brighter in theory than in fact.

Negro Women

If only tentative conclusions can be drawn relative to the influence of union seniority upon Negro workers as a whole in the automobile industry, there are no similar limitations relative to Negro women. Female workers are paid the same wages and do similar work as men in automobile plants. Most women are in light and easy jobs, and it can be expected that high seniority males will demand jobs that women have held during the war. The heavier jobs occupied by these men during the war will, in turn, be filled with other men through upgrading as provided by union contracts. Negro women will share the same fate as all women; in addition, Negro women have the least seniority of any group in the automobile industry. Under any form of seniority, they will be largely let out; even if there were no union seniority, this would probably be true in the automobile industry.

III

THE MEAT PACKING INDUSTRY

The application of union seniority in the meat packing industry will be beneficial to the Negro worker. It will operate to sustain the occupational gains colored workers have made in recent years, and it will tend to perpetuate the widespread numerical participation of Negroes in the industry. These results will follow because of the current numerical concentration of Negroes in meat packing, their long record of employment, their occupational distribution, the nature of the labor force which the newer Negro workers have replaced, and the widespread participation of Negroes in the United Packinghouse Workers of America - CIO.

Negroes began entering the northern branch of the industry as early as 1881, but it was during the strikes of 1894 and 1904 that they first came in large numbers. World War I, when manpower shortages made packers receptive to employing them, was the occasion for the second large-scale entrance of Negroes; by 1918 colored workers made up 20 per cent of the labor force. In the ensuing years, Negroes, particularly Negro women, lost many jobs, although they remained an important part of the labor force in many centers of meat packing; by 1930 colored workers constituted slightly over eleven per cent of the total in the industry. During the subsequent depression, a large number of unemployed skilled building craftsmen and skilled workers in other industries sought job security in the relatively stable meat packing industry. Many of these workers, who were white, had, by 1941, acquired from eight to ten years seniority.

Soon after Pearl Harbor, the majority of the depression recruits to meat packing left the industry for more desirable and higher paying employment in their usual occupations. In doing this, they forfeited their accumulated seniority. At the same time, the vacancies they created and the new openings in the industry were often filled by colored workers. Widespread wartime employment of Negroes in meat packing, as elsewhere, was delayed until after 1942, and the use of Negro women to any appreciable degree has been even more recent. As a result of these developments the proportion of Negroes in the industry has about doubled in the period from 1940 to 1945; officials of the United Packinghouse Workers estimate that in the spring of the latter year, from 30 to 35 per cent of all the production workers in the industry were Negroes, and in Chicago the proportion was over 50 per cent.

Since many of these colored men and women have taken the place of workers who have lost seniority, a large proportion of the Negroes in the industry have little to fear from displacement if layoffs are determined by length of service. In addition, of course, many Negroes have long-time seniority. And Selective Service, while important, has not called as high a proportion of the industry's workers as in most other branches of manufacturing; this has been due principally to the age of workers who elected to remain in the industry and the large number of dependents which the younger men had.

Negroes while long excluded from certain operations, had achieved a degree of occupational advancement in meat packing prior to Pearl Harbor. Since that time, there has been additional occupational advancement and new departments and operations have been opened to colored workers. This has been due chiefly to two factors: the manpower needs of the industry, and the aggressive action of the United Packinghouse Workers for equal job opportunities and upgrading for all its members. Few unions have done a better job of education in intergroup relations among its membership; in few unions have Negroes been as active.

The postwar employment prospects in the meat packing industry are good. Despite wartime expansion, the industry will hardly experience a drastic reconversion. Every current indication suggests that the demand for meat will continue for some years to come, and that any serious diminution will be occasioned only by a breakdown of the economy and mass unemployment.

Most plants have contracts which call for departmental seniority. A few, such as Swift, have seniority provisions which stipulate that promotions and demotions (due to changes in the volume of production or technical changes in the manner of production) are to be made on the basis of departmental seniority. If, however, the former worker elects not to take a lower-paid or otherwise less desirable job, he may accept the layoff, and his departmental seniority continues to accumulate.

Union officials estimate that the number of veterans with accumulated seniority in the industry is much smaller than the number of workers with long seniority who left meat packing since Pearl Harbor. This fact will combine with the occupational distribution of Negroes, their period of service, and the probable postwar volume of employment to facilitate the continuing participation of Negroes at various levels of skills in the industry. Were there no union seniority, past experience suggests that general unemployment in other industries, due to reconversion (and possibly due to postwar levels of production), would occasion the displacement of many individual skilled Negroes by whites. This would probably be most prevalent in those departments which had been closed to Negroes until World War II. In the past, hostile, prejudiced, or extremely chauvinistic foremen had often taken the lead in effecting such downgrading. Similar developments and forces would probably lead to a real decline in the number and proportion of Negroes in meat packing in the postwar period.

Individual Negroes, as individual white workers, will be displaced once the labor market loosens. If union seniority can be maintained in meat packing, however, such displacement will be determined largely by the length of service and the attitudes and efficiency of the particular worker involved. Union seniority will offer real job protection and occupational status for the mass of Negro workers in the industry. And the United Packinghouse Workers of America have given ample evidence that they are ready and able to translate their nondiscrimination statements into fact.

IV

THE IRON AND STEEL INDUSTRY

Negroes have long participated in the processing and handling of iron and steel. As in meat packing, the early mode of entrance to the northern branch of the iron and steel industry was through strike breaking, and World War I accelerated the entrance of black labor into the industry. The influence of the latter factor is reflected in the following figures: the proportion of Negroes employed in blast furnaces and steel rolling mills increased from 4.5 per cent in 1910 to 8.5 per cent in 1930. At the latter date, Negroes made up 1.3 per cent of those in the standard skilled crafts (such as patternmakers, diemakers, and machinists), 4 per cent of those in skilled processing work, 6.5 per cent of the semiskilled workers, 11 per cent of the maintenance employees, and 16.5 per cent of the laborers.

Prewar Color Occupational Patterns

From the start, the iron and steel industry has established "Negro jobs" and "white jobs." The former, of course, are the heavier, dirtier and lower-paid. This racial occupational system was generally accepted in the North as well as in the South; yet, despite its existence, iron and steel as a heavy, dirty, hot industry, probably had a larger proportion of skilled workers than any other major type of manufacturing in the United States in 1930. In most instances, skilled Negroes were restricted to certain plants and a limited number of departments in those plants.

During the depression of the 1930's, there was a great decline in the output of steel. Unemployment was extremely intense in this capital goods industry, and although in the earlier phase of the depression Negroes retained their relative proportion of employment, the proportion of colored workers in skilled trades was quickly and materially reduced. The greatest displacement of skilled Negro workers was in the North and the West. Later there was disproportionately intense displacement of Negroes from the industry at all occupational levels, so that by 1940, colored workers constituted only 5.7 per cent of the workers.

Not reflected in these census data was the fact that although many Negroes were in the southern, middle Atlantic, and middle western branches of the industry, numerous plants hired either no Negroes or only an extremely small number in service and laboring capacities. This was most striking in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. Within a given steel corporation, it was not uncommon for certain plants to employ 10 or more per cent Negroes while other plants used few if any colored laborers.

Out of this background of racial employment three developments were inevitable in an expanding demand for workers during World War II. In the first place, if there were to be appreciable increases in the use of Negro labor in iron and steel, racial occupational patterns would have to change; there would have to be larger participation of Negroes in plants which had never used an appreciable number of colored workers, and new departments and occupations would have to be opened in many plants in the industry. Second, since the tradition of white men's jobs and black men's jobs had been established by the industry, it would be difficult to get supervisory staffs and the rank and file of white workers to effect these changes. Third, the new steel workers union of the CIO would have to face this problem since economic necessity, governmental pressure, and the demands of black members were constantly urging action.

World War II Developments

At the beginning of the defense program, there were increases in the number of colored workers in iron and steel. At first this found its expression in the employment of Negroes in traditional occupations in firms which had used Negroes in the past. Ordnance, which was a rapidly expanding branch of the industry, afforded Negro men and women production jobs from the start, chiefly in new war plants. As the labor market became tighter, additional steel plants opened unskilled and semiskilled jobs to Negroes. By the summer of 1942, the labor market developments and the nondiscriminatory executive orders were accelerating the process and about seven per cent of those employed by iron and steel (including ordnance) were Negroes. A year later over 11 per cent of the workers in iron and steel were Negroes, as were 7.5 per cent of those in ordnance. At the beginning of 1945, the corresponding figures were 11.5 per cent and 9.6.

When, in 1936, the Steel Workers Organizing Committee started the campaign out of which the United Steel Workers of America - CIO emerged, it realized that Negroes would have to be fully included if the new organization were to succeed. Negro response was, in general, about the same as white, and large numbers of colored workers embraced unionism for the first time. Little progress, however, was made in securing upgrading for Negroes until 1942. This was due principally to two factors: the traditional acceptance of certain types of jobs for Negroes with the resulting exclusion of colored workers from certain departments, and the general acceptance of departmental seniority by the new union. When, however, economic forces required a modification of the color occupational patterns, the United Steel Workers sometimes accelerated the process and secured upgrading for Negroes on the basis of their seniority. Thus, within departments where Negroes had worked in the past, the union has successfully pressed for their upgrading; in departments and plants from which Negroes had long been excluded, the union occasionally joined government in urging the acceptance of Negroes, or in some cases it has taken the initiative. The union has also been effective in overcoming the opposition of white workers to the entrance of Negroes into better types or new areas of work.

In iron and steel, as in many other types of production, the Negro has achieved numerical and occupational advancement during the period 1940-45. Because of the strong tradition of restricting Negroes to certain departments and occupations and the importance of older established plants in the total output of the industry (as contrasted to concentration of production in new plants in ordnance), the degree of upgrading has not been as great in steel as in many other war industries. Tradition had kept the Negro out of many jobs he might have filled and had the right to occupy in the prewar period; this same factor has made his progress slow as compared to the rapid strides he has made in other industries. Despite this fact, however, there is ample evidence that the Negro worker has entered many new types of work, many new plants, and many new departments during the past three years.

A distinction should be made between iron and steel and ordnance. As a relatively new branch of the industry, ordnance was not hampered by racial traditions and could, as it did, hire a sizable proportion of Negroes in new production jobs. This favorable racial occupational pattern was accelerated also by the fact that much of ordnance was carried on in government establishments, and a large proportion of the remainder was in government-owned and privately operated plants, where it was less difficult to enforce federal nondiscriminatory policies. Production of ordnance will be drastically reduced in the postwar period. The bulk of workers, black and white, male and female, will be displaced, and union seniority will have little influence upon the status of the Negro who will be let out regardless of the existence or absence of union agreements covering layoffs and reemployment.

In the iron and steel industry, exclusive of ordnance, such will not be the case. Union seniority will often protect and perpetuate the recent gains of Negroes. Both management and union officials expect most of the established iron and steel plants to maintain or expand their prewar payrolls. The return to the 40-hour week will tend to sustain such a development. In many instances, there may be some contraction from wartime levels, although the extent will vary from plant to plant. Where there are significant readjustments incident to reconversion, they are expected to be accomplished in a gradual manner. At the same time, steel is not a particularly attractive industry, and there has been tremendous turnover. Many white workers who have recently entered the industry have gone to other lighter and cleaner work soon after their recruitment. Negroes, too, have moved in and out of steel, but since the more desirable industries were less hospitable to them, a larger proportion of colored workers has remained in iron and steel. Those who have done so have obviously accumulated seniority, and the departure of whites who were employed earlier has advanced colored workers on seniority lists.

A large number of white and Negro steel workers entered the armed services. Of those, a fairly large proportion of the whites will look for other work and will not seek to exercise their job rights in iron and steel if they can get jobs in other areas. Negro veterans, on the other hand, will probably return to steel mills in relatively larger numbers. When they come back they will find that some of the jobs to which they had a right before the war and in which they could not get placement have been opened to Negroes.

Although there is some plant-wide seniority in iron and steel, most union contracts are on the basis of departmental seniority. In those plants where Negroes have recently been employed for the first time, they are usually concentrated in the least desirable departments. Whites previously employed in such work have often moved to other types of employment and have, consequently, lost seniority in their former areas of operation. Even the white veteran who had seniority in these departments will often not choose to take it up if he can find any other kind of work. As a result of these circumstances, the Negro worker new to certain iron and steel plants will find job security in the application of union seniority.

In those plants where Negroes have achieved promotion within given departments, the prevalent union seniority agreements will give job security and occupational status to the older Negro worker. He will have long seniority and for the first time this seniority will carry with it the right to some of the more desirable jobs.

Where Negroes have entered new departments and where they have the better jobs in these departments, departmental seniority may lead to their displacement. If there is a combination of plant-wide and departmental seniority, a worker so displaced may secure a job in another part of the plant. If there is no provision for such transfer, he may be displaced from the plant. His loss of a permanent job in the industry is highly probable in instances where his new job is desirable. The chief danger to him is the white veteran who has accumulated seniority in the department and elects to use it.

V

OTHER INDUSTRIES

In addition to the types of situations which the three industries described above cover, there will be another important category. It includes those types of production such as electrical equipment, engines and turbines, machinery, and scientific instruments, where Negro employment was negligible before the war, and in which gains have been made in recent years. Without resorting to detailed analysis it can be concluded that, in general, union seniority, regardless of type, will accelerate the displacement of colored workers and reduce, if not destroy, their occupational gains.

The generalization on the unfavorable influence of union seniority upon Negroes in these industries is based upon three factors: the newness of Negroes to the industry, the competition of white women, and the threat of the returning veteran. In almost all of these branches of production few if any Negroes were hired prior to the war; those who were on the payroll were in laboring and service capacities. The colored workers, therefore, except the few who had prewar job status, cannot accumulate much seniority. At the same time these industries greatly preferred women to Negroes, and in most plants white women have more seniority than Negro men. Also, a large proportion of white veterans from these industries will elect to use their accumulated seniority, at the same time that there will be few Negro veterans with seniority in these industries.

For the most part these industries will contract in the peace. There will, therefore, be a much lesser number of jobs than workers with seniority. A larger proportion of women will want to stay in many of these industries than in heavy or dirty production. Negroes, as a group, will have the shortest length of service. They will be the first laid off, and it is doubtful if on an industry-wide basis they will be able to achieve rehiring. In their case, union seniority will assure and accelerate a development which economic factors would occasion to a large degree.

VI

SENIORITY ADJUSTMENTS FOR NEGROES

The simplest solution to the seniority problem as it affects Negroes may seem to be the adjustment of the rules in those instances where injustice will result. Seniority lists and an estimate of postwar employment levels indicate the locale of such developments. And there is much to be said in favor of the end result. There are adjustments in seniority to permit the continuing employment of shop stewards and other union officials. And since the Negro's gains in some industries and many plants have been very recent, strict seniority would in many instances erase all or many of these gains. In such situations it is not the Negroes' fault that they are concentrated at the bottom of the seniority lists. A union which has expended much energy and effort to achieve the integration of Negroes certainly stands to lose if under its own seniority rules all colored workers are displaced, or the vast majority are relegated to the lowest paid jobs. For there are grave dangers to unions in mass production industries if Negro members are thrown out of work as a group and remain idle and anti-union in the labor market.*

While there is much merit to the argument for seniority adjustment, it is not consistent with the basic principles of the concept. Although adjustments in seniority may be desirable where they can be achieved with the full understanding and support of white and Negro membership and where the Negro workers realize and fully accept the temporary nature of the arrangement, as a practical matter, there are few unions which can or will take this step. In this connection it cannot be stressed too much that if there are adjustments in seniority for any group, and the rank and file of union members do not understand and approve the move, there will be resentment against the preferred group. If it happens to be composed of Negroes, those who have strong feelings about seniority (and the unions have been stressing its importance for some time) will be joined by those who are anti-Negro in opposing the move. The result will be intense anti-Negro sentiment in the union.

After all, union officials are elected. In the current war, only a very small fraction of the membership attends meetings and participates actively in union affairs. In many locals the proportion of Negroes among this minority of active members is small. This has two important implications. In few unions is there any machinery to reach the bulk of members and explain why group adjustments in seniority may be desirable for the union; in an even smaller number of unions are the Negro members active enough to give adequate political support (votes) to union officials who might try to effect such adjustments. Then, too, there is the ever-present pressure for relaxing seniority rules so as to give hiring preference to veterans with no job experience. Many unionists argue honestly, and with much logic to their position, that once group adjustments are made in seniority, there will be pressures for so many adjustments in so many directions that the whole system will break down.

Most Negro workers in war plants had from one to three years' seniority in the spring of 1945. Most white women in war work have slightly more seniority than colored males, and there are large numbers of veterans with at least four years' seniority. At the same time there is a vast number of young veterans who have no seniority but who will be attractive to some employers as individual workers and as a group which can weaken labor unions. Seniority adjustments for Negroes, if widespread, would probably become the basis for a drive to effect preferential employment for veterans without previous seniority. Many of the same arguments as are advanced in favor of special treatment for Negroes could be applied to veterans, and certainly a proposal for adjustments in favor of ex-service men would receive much more public support. If however, such a development should occur, and if in its wake unions were destroyed, it seems likely that much of the resentment against the destruction of these unions would be transferred from the veteran to the Negro.

Philip Murray, President of CIO, has set forth his organization's opposition to relaxations in union seniority agreements. In discussing this problem as it affects Negroes, he has rightly emphasized the fact that only in an expanding postwar economy can Negro workers hope for job opportunities and occupational status. Mr. Murray has pointed out that seniority eliminates favoritism in layoffs, rehiring, and upgrading, while its relaxation would create anti-Negro and anti-union attitudes on the part of white workers and "transfer the burden of discriminatory hiring policies of management to the labor movement, where it does not belong." Mr. Murray added, "If seniority principles are not equitably and justly applied, the remedy is to make it work, not destroy the vehicle which is the prime guarantee against discrimination within industry which is government by labor industry contracts."

In certain industries and plants where postwar production will require an equal or smaller number of workers than did war production, the union seniority problems of the Negro worker are a part of a larger issue. It is a conflict of interest between the older workers who have long departmental and plant seniority and the newer workers who have little tenure. Where, for example, there are supplementary agreements giving the older men plant-wide seniority, with the right to displace other workers in any department, the downgrading of most of the younger men is inevitable. But in many plants, the younger workers are numerically strong enough to defeat such agreements. To date, apparently, they have not been active in union affairs in large numbers; now that their job status is involved they may become active. The younger white and Negro workers who are displaced or downgraded by union seniority may yet get together on their common problems. The acceptance of supplementary seniority agreements affords a ready mechanism for effecting modifications in situations which present a threat to their future interests, and it would be the type of remedy suggested by Mr. Murray in instances where the principles of seniority are "not equitably and justly applied." In the case of both groups, however, this will involve infinitely more union activity than has typified them in the past.

In the spring of 1945 union problems of seniority were just beginning to appear. Even at that early date it was clear that they will present great difficulties. While it seemed that no appreciable relaxations in seniority can or will be made by unions during reconversion, it is possible that some relaxations may ultimately be required by events. In some mass production industries it is difficult to see how union strength and union contracts can be maintained if large reserves of experienced workers remain on the labor market at the same time that their former fellow workers remain in full employment. No doubt the membership which is employed will favor the termination of seniority after a short layoff period. This may precipitate another political battle within the union if it is proposed at a time when the laid-off workers are still affiliated in large numbers. If there is no appreciable opposition, it is difficult to see how the union will be able to retain the loyalty and support of members who have no seniority, i.e., right to a job; and in mass production industries it is extremely dangerous for unions to permit a large number of qualified workers in the labor market to be unaffiliated or anti-union.

The Negro is important in this picture because, seniority or no seniority, it will be difficult to convince him or the community from which he comes that he has not been discriminated against. It will be an exceptional employer who will not reply to his quest for work with the factual statement that union seniority regulations occasioned his dismissal. The same situation, without the complicating factor of race and color, will exist in relation to white workers similarly laid off. These workers - black and white alike - will form a dissatisfied pool of labor. Many of them will not look kindly at the unions. All of them will be a source of weakness to organized labor.

THE PROBLEM OF PREDICTING THE NUMBER OF VETERANS WHO WILL HAVE BUSINESSES OF THEIR OWN AFTER THEY LEAVE THE ARMY*

A Supplement to Information and Education Division Report No. B-130: "Soldiers' Plans to Own Businesses After They Leave the Army"

Administrators in several government agencies have requested current estimates of the number of enlisted men who will seek to own businesses after they leave the Army. Agencies whose function is to provide information to prospective entrepreneurs may be most interested in an estimate of the total number of men considering business ownership; agencies charged with administering loan programs or other programs designed to help the veteran, may be most interested in estimates of the total number of veterans likely to apply for aid and in the number of applicants who will be qualified to receive such aid; other agencies may be interested in estimating the number of veterans who will actually get started in business enterprises within any given period.

One element in making the needed estimates is to be found in the plans of the men in the Services. Plans indicate current interest. The extent to which they are sustained, the realism of the plans, and, most important, the extent to which current plans square with the economic opportunities which will exist after the war will determine their value in predicting the number of men who will actually start businesses.

The basic report -- "Soldiers' Plans to Own Businesses After the War" -- presented the finding that, as of summer 1944, seven per cent of all the men in the Army were definitely planning to own businesses after the war. Another four per cent of the men had tentative plans -- relatively less definite but still consistently expressed -- and yet another four per cent expressed vague plans for a business -- plans which they contradicted in discussing other job possibilities. Finally the report stated that another fifth of all men surveyed expressed some interest in owning a business but no immediate plans for achieving this objective.

* Business ownership as here defined involves operation of any non-agricultural enterprise, whether as employer or as own-account worker. An enterprise need not entail a recognizable place of business, although a majority of the men planning businesses do plan to maintain a recognizable place of business. Men who expect merely to hire out their services on a day to day basis are excluded, even though they may be considered self-employed. With this exception, usage in this report follows that of the Census of Population for "employers and own account workers."

Thus, one may say that at least a third of the men in the Army have some interest in owning a business. But one would certainly not predict that a third of the men are at all likely to own a business. Successful operation of a business requires adequate capital resources plus certain basic skills and experience, if not skill and experience in a particular field of enterprise. Many men who aspire to business ownership are not sufficiently equipped with either capital or experience to be regarded as likely prospects for business ownership in the near future. On the other hand, few men not strongly aspiring to business ownership can be expected to become proprietors. Initiative and hard work are required; one does not normally drift into opportunities in self-employment. Therefore, the number of men who will start businesses will certainly be less than the number planning businesses.

The basic report on soldiers' plans for businesses presented data on the previous experience of men planning businesses, on certain personnel characteristics (age, education, earnings before entering the service) and on plans for financing business enterprises. The problem of predicting post-war action from present plans was discussed in general terms, but because of the various contingencies involved, actual predictions were not ventured. The data presented were regarded as elements which might profitably be taken into consideration by those who were called upon to make predictions and who would have a much greater fund of knowledge about past trends and prospective opportunities in the field of small business. Since, however, there has been a tendency to regard the plans of the men as predictions by themselves, a somewhat more concrete treatment of the problem is here presented.

To assist the administrator who needs a prediction of the number of men likely to make a serious attempt at business operation after separation from the service, three aspects of the problem of predicting are discussed in the following pages:

1. The plans of the soldier.
2. The business opportunities likely to exist.
3. The problem of predicting for any phase of demobilization rather than for total demobilization.

1. The Plans of the Soldier

What is the likelihood that men with definite (or tentative, or vague) plans to own a business will actually attempt to set up shop after the war? What characteristics of the men in these groups are indicators of chances of success? A brief description will be given for each of the groups into which men have been classified with respect to their plans for a business. (The data are all contained in the original report).

a. Men with definite plans to own a business. (Seven per cent of company grade officers, seven per cent of white enlisted men and seven per cent of Negro enlisted men.) Most (82%) of the white enlisted men in this group have some relevant experience; two-fifths, in fact, were previously self-employed. Among the Negro enlisted men, however, relatively few (13%) have previous experience in self-employment, while nearly two-fifths have no relevant work experience. Of those men of either race who do not already have businesses, two-fifths do not expect to have as much as half of the capital they will need to get started -- and this despite the fact that many men are planning very small investments.

Therefore one might guess that from 20 to 40 per cent of the white emlisted men definitely planning business ownership and a considerably higher proportion of the Negro enlisted men with such plans are rather unlikely prospects for successful business operation. Real prospects would amount to about five per cent of all enlisted men. Some examples of men with definite plans, whose prospects for success seem dubious are cited in an Appendix to this memorandum.

b. Men with tentative plans to own businesses. (Three per cent of company grade officers, four per cent of white enlisted men, five per cent of Negro enlisted men.) The best indication of the prevalence of unrealistic planners and men merely aspiring to business ownership is the fact that Negro enlisted men, with the poorest prospect for self-employment (in terms of experience and capital) are most apt to express tentative plans for a business while officers, with the best prospects, are least apt to express such plans. Nearly half of the tentative planners among enlisted men lack any relevant work experience. Perhaps more important, approximately half of these tentative planners of businesses say that they may go back to their old jobs. In other words, while aspiring to a business of their own, they are sufficiently uncertain of their chances of succeeding in a business venture so that they are unwilling to predict flatly that they will actually try to set up shop.

Therefore, one might predict that only about half of the white enlisted men with tentative plans to own a business, and a somewhat smaller proportion of the Negro enlisted men with such plans will make a serious attempt to get into operation. In this case about another two per cent of the Army's male personnel may be added to the five per cent with definite plans who appear to be real prospects for business ownership.

c. Men with vague plans. (Two per cent of officers, three per cent of white enlisted men, seven per cent of Negro enlisted men.) Nearly all of the men classified as having vague plans to own a business express some other plans as their primary expectation. Some think they may start a business after they work for a while as employees; others are really saying: "I'd like to have a business of my own"; almost none have thought through plans for establishing a business. A large number of these men are basically undecided as to what they will do; their characteristics and background make it appear unlikely that they will establish businesses soon after they leave the Army. For predictive purposes, therefore, this group must be considered relatively unimportant.

d. Men with some interest in owning a business but no immediate plans for achieving this objective. (Roughly a fifth of all men surveyed.) Actually, it must be assumed that nearly everyone has some interest in owning a business. There seems to be little reason to assume that any appreciable proportion of this group will make serious efforts to get into business operation at all soon after they leave the Army.

In summary, then, it appears that not more than seven per cent of the men combined serious plans for a business with a fair show of the prerequisites for success.1/ One might predict that unless opportunities are very unfavorable, about seven per cent of the men will make determined efforts to get into operation. Another two to four per cent may be expected to make less determined efforts to set up shop, the exact percentage depending on alternative opportunities as well as on the outlook for the types of small business they have in mind. If opportunities for small businesses are very great, it may be that some of the less well-equipped planners will have a chance to succeed and also that some of the men with vague plans may actually try to set up shop. What are those opportunities likely to be?

2. Business Opportunities for Veterans

Several aspects of the problem which might profitably be investigated by those familiar with the field of small business are listed below:

a. How many new small businesses on a sound operating basis can be absorbed in our economy after the war? In what fields will the opportunities for small business be greatest; in what fields will they be most meagre?

b. How many proprietors of small businesses now in operation will want to (or are likely to) divest themselves of business ownership in the next few years?

c. Had there been no war, from what groups would the new proprietors of small businesses have been drawn? How many men among those now in the Armed Forces would have been expected to become proprietors of their own businesses over a period of say five years?

d. How much of a competitive advantage are the provisions of the G. I. Bill of Rights apt to give veterans who wish to start businesses over civilians who have some collateral capital and wish to start businesses?

1/ It must be remembered that these data relate to plans as of summer, 1944, when knowledge of the provisions of the G.I. Bill of Rights was not prevalent. Surveys to be conducted in the summer of 1945 will establish whether there has been any significant shift in the soldier's plans since the first survey was conducted.

The following discussion of these problems is intended to be merely suggestive of the consideration which specialists in the study of the trends and prospects of small business might give this subject.

a. From 1900 to 1941, except for temporary set-backs, the number of business firms in the United States increased at least as rapidly as did the total population. In September 1941, there were approximately 3,400,000 operating firms in the United States. 1/ During the first two years of the war, the number of business establishments showed a net decline of about 540,000. This decline was a result of a high rate of discontinuances of firms whose proprietors turned to war work or entered the Armed Services combined with a low rate of entry of new firms. By the end of 1943, the rate of discontinuance of operating firms had fallen to a very low level and the downward trend in the total number of firms was definitely halted.

Expert opinion is in general optimistic about the outlook for small business after the war. Bowen, for example, concludes from a review of pre-war trends and war-time changes in the business population:

> ..."It seems highly probable that a post-war resurgence of small business will occur with the removal of the obvious wartime obstacles to the opening of new firms, with the return of potential business men from the armed forces and war jobs, and with the restoration of the civilian economy."
> "The war may have speeded up trends favoring larger firms in certain industries but, on the other hand, the war has probably also been accompanied by the development of new opportunities for small business. In the past, small business has held its position not by maintaining its status within each kind of business but rather by ceaselessly developing opportunities in new fields."2/

1/ Source of data here cited on trends in the number of operating firms: Howard R Bowen, "Trends in the Business Population" Survey of Current Business, March 1944. The number of employers and own account workers as enumerated in the 1940 Census of Population exceeded the number of firms by about one million. This excess is a reflection both of partnerships -- two or more proprietors to the firm -- and of the fact that many own account workers did not maintain a recognizable place of business and were therefore not enumerated as firms. The discrepancy between the two sets of statistics would actually be somewhat larger were it not for the fact that salaried officers of corporations and executives are classified with employees in the Census of Population.

Estimation of the amount of potential increase in the business population for the five or ten years following the war is a problem for the expert analyst in this field. A fifteen per cent increase over the 1941 level would amount to approximately half a million firms (in addition to the deficit of more than half a million resulting from the war). On the basis of present information, this would seem to be a liberal estimate of the number of firms which might be added as a permanent increment by 1950.

In what fields will the opportunities for small business be greatest? The wartime declines have been relatively greatest in construction, the service industries or trades, and retail trade. (Approximately three-fourths of the men planning businesses expect to enter these fields, although construction beckons relatively fewer men than retail trade and the services.) The fields of greatest opportunity as compared with 1941, will not, however, necessarily be those that experienced the greatest war-time decline. For example, although the number of filling stations declined markedly (25 per cent) in the first two years of the war, it is doubtful whether in the post-war period much of an increase should be expected over the 1941 level. Analysis of the prospects for small business in particular fields would seem a prerequisite for evaluating the plans of soldiers who seek to establish enterprises after the war. It may be, however, that realistic analysis cannot be made except in terms of the communities where the men plan to set up shop. In any event, it is to be hoped that the evaluation of opportunities at the local level will be made as a basis for counseling the returned veteran who wants to go into business.

b. In the period immediately preceding the war about a seventh of the business firms operating at the beginning of any year were discontinued during the year, while approximately an equal number of new firms were formed during the year.1/ In addition, about one business in twelve experience a transfer of ownership. During the first two years of the war discontinuances occurred at a slightly higher rate, new firms were established at a lower rate, and transfers occurred at about the pre-war rate.

It may be assumed that after the war new firms will be established at a higher rate, discontinuances will temporarily decrease (although available data indicate that discontinuances are highest among new businesses, so that a considerable increase in new firms would probably lead to a considerable, though perhaps a lesser increase in discontinuances) and transfers may increase slightly (though this is a pure guess). While some of the older proprietors of small businesses may have postponed retirement awaiting the return of sons or other young men serving in the Armed Forces, the number of businesses which will become available to veterans in this way is likely to provide opportunities for only a small fraction of those planning business ownership.

c. Competing with the veteran for business ownership will be two major groups: (1) those former proprietors of businesses who closed shop because war shortages made them unable to obtain needed stock and equipment for their continued operation or because they saw greater temporary attraction in war industry and (2) those civilians who in normal times would have turned to self-employment during the war period.

Relatively few urban males become employers or own account workers before reaching the age of thirty or thirty-five. In 1940, for example, four-fifths of the urban males who were self-employed were 35 years old or over. Among employed men under thirty, less than five per cent were self-employed, while among those 45 and over, more than twenty per cent were self-employed.1/ If one applies the age rates of self-employment indicated by the 1940 Census to the Army age distribution (in each case for urban males), one can estimate the expected increase in the total proportion self-employed associated with a given increase in average age of the population. This, of course, assumes conditions comparable to those which prevailed just before 1940. With five years aging of the Army population as constituted in summer 1944, one would expect the addition of somewhat less than five per cent to the total proportion self-employed -- an addition of about 300,000 men.

In other words, had there been no war, and had economic conditions prevailed similar to those in the period preceding 1940, one would have expected that about 300,000 of the urban males now in the Army would have become self-employed during a five year period. A much larger group of somewhat older urban males (men who were not drafted) would have become self-employed during the same period. And, as earlier pointed out, several hundred thousand men who had operated businesses of their own before the war and gave up such businesses to enter war industry must be counted on to return to self-employment.

If normal conditions were to prevail, then, one would expect that considerably less than half of the new business proprietors in the next five years would come from the population now in the Army. With the former proprietors now in war industry considered, one might expect veterans to number not more than a fourth to a third of the men who become self-employed in the next five years, if it were not for added motivation and financial help under the G. I. Bill of Rights which may induce relatively more veterans to attempt to have their own businesses.

d. The consensus among those who have explored the probable effects of the loan provisions of the G. I. Bill is that most men who can qualify for business loans under the provisions of the bill could secure such loans without this legislation. The guarantee of minimum earnings of $100 a month may be a somewhat greater aid to the prospective enterpreneur. However, relatively few enlisted men have any considerable fund of savings for equity capital; a much larger group of civilians will have available capital adequate both for equity and for operating purposes, and in general the older civilians will have a greater amount of relevant experience. It would appear, therefore, that the provisions of the G. I. Bill will enable some veterans to start businesses which could not have been established without such aid, but that few veterans will secure from the Bill any lasting competitive advantage over non-veterans.

In summary, then, there may be opportunities for the establishment of nearly a million more small businesses than the number now in operation, but the veteran will have to compete with a large number of non-veterans with considerable business experience and with adequate capital to offset the advantages accuring to the veteran under the provisions of the G. I. Bill of Rights. Even if veterans are more highly motivated toward business ownership than non-veterans it seems unlikely that they will be able to compete successfully for as many as half of the available opportunities. If the above reasoning is correct, one would predict that, in the immediate post-demobilization period, the seven per cent of the Army's male personnel who have both plans for business ownership and a fair share of the prerequisites for success might represent a maximum estimate of the number who can hope to succeed in business ventures. If many more men try to establish new businesses, a high proportion of failures must be expected.

3. Problems of Predicting for the Early Phases of Demobilization

Predictions of what soldiers will do after demobilization, based upon their vocational plans as expressed in surveys of cross-sections of the Army, involve the assessing of numerous contingencies. Further, data secured from surveys thus far conducted cannot be used as a basis for predicting what men already discharged or currently being discharged will do, for two reasons: (1) the separatees differ markedly from a cross-section of the Army; (2) the economic situation into which men have thus far been discharged is extremely different from that which will be encountered by later separatees.

More specifically, with reference to prediction of self-employment, the men thus far discharged have on the average been older, less well educated and less well adjusted, physically and mentally, to Army life than men remaining in service. There is some indication (from a small survey conducted at a single separation center in October 1944) that separatees plan to be self-employed in smaller proportion than men remaining in the Army. (The men questioned were planning to return to their former jobs in much higher proportion than men comprising a cross-section of the Army. However, other surveys of separatees conducted by other agencies and not entirely comparable in approach with the Research Branch study, have reported that about two-fifths of these men planned to return to their old jobs, a figure quite comparable to that arrived at in cross-sectional surveys of the Army).

In any case, the conditions for starting a business are in general unfavorable at the present time. Machinery for making business loans under the G. I. Bill of Rights has not yet been perfected in many parts of the country. Rationing and priorities controls make difficult the establishment of new enterprises. Jobs in war industry are readily available at attractive wages. Therefore, men whose vocational objective is a business of their own are apt to be forced to postpone the carrying out of their plans or lured away from such plans by alternative opportunities available at less expenditure of effort.

A recent study of 300 veterans of overseas service who had been out of the Army from three to thirteen months revealed that a sixth of these men plan small independent businesses for their permanent employment although less than half of these have been able to establish themselves in business thus far. Other checks on the present employment of veterans of World War II reveal from two to six per cent self-employed in fields other than agriculture. It is probable that the differing results of such checks as have been made result from (1) biases (even on a local basis) in selection of the sample of veterans surveyed (2) differing definitions of self-employment (3) differences in time and place of the situations into which separatees have been released.

Until some of the restrictions on the availability of materials and supplies for small business and civilian consumption have been relaxed and until the flow of separatees begins more nearly to approximate in composition the Army as a whole, it will be difficult to assess the extent to which the plans expressed by a cross-section of the Army are predictive of post-separation behavior or to establish at all accurately from projections of current veteran behavior what future trends will be.

Appendix: Examples of Men Who Express Plans to Own a Business but Who Appear to Have Poor Prospects for Success in the Business Operation Planned

The following examples are not typical of most men who express definite plans to own a business. They are intended rather to illustrate the fact that a man can express fairly definite plans and yet appear to be a dubious prospect for success in the business planned.

All of these men checked:

a. "I expect to work for myself" (right after leaving the Army.)

b. "I am almost sure I will start a business" (soon after leaving the Army).

In addition, all of them indicated a plan to own a business in answer to the earliest question in the sequence on post-war job plans: "What kind of work do you think you will do right after the war?" For each example, this statement of plans will be quoted along with relevant information on background and plans for financing the proposed business venture.

1. A twenty-nine year old corporal with only sixth grade education, whose sole work experience has been in farming:

   "I intend to by myself a filling station and by my gas in thousands gallons at a time so to make a fair profit on it." Plans to invest $2000, of which he expects to have at least half.

2. A twenty-three year old high school graduate whose work experience was confined to clerking in a grocery store:

   "Will start a rest camp and summer resort." Does not know how much money he will need or where he will get it.

3. A twenty-one year old high school graduate who had been a shipping clerk:

   "Plan to own a liquor and food establishment". No plans for financing such an enterprise.

4. A twenty-nine year old grade school graduate who had been a sorting clerk in a post-office:

   "Will go into my own business (Beer tavern)." Has no relevant experience; plans to invest $2000 -- which he plans to borrow. Says elsewhere he may go back to post-office.

5. A twenty year old high school graduate, just out of high school when he entered the Army:

> "Light air transport business, hauling small freight and few passengers, as by using such as UC-64 or AT-18 r etc." (Apparently had done some flying before he entered the Army). Plans to put about $10,000 into such an enterprise, but doesn't know where he will get the money.

6. A twenty-two year old high school graduate who had been a factory operative:

> "Will operate my own night club." (No experience at all related). Plans to put $5000 into this enterprise, expects to have about half of this.

One cannot say of any one of these men that he is not going to try to start a business after he leaves the Army, or that he has no chance of succeeding if he does try to start a business. One can say, however, that these men appear to be unrealistic in their planning or at least relatively less well equipped for business operation than many of their competitors will be. This is true of a much larger proportion of the men with tentative or vague plans for business ownership.

THE GOVERNOR OF TEXAS HOLDS A MAN'S LIFE in his hands. Unless he intervenes, L. C. Akins will be put to death on October 6 because his skin is black. A factual study of the case is set forth in an article by George Clifton Edwards, a Dallas attorney, on page 253 of this issue of The Nation. The procedure of the Texas courts in bringing about a conviction for murder and imposing the death sentence is, unfortunately, not exceptional. What is almost impossible to understand is the action—with the honorable dissent of Justices Stone, Black, and Murphy—of the United States Supreme Court in attesting that no grounds existed for throwing out the conviction on the basis of special discrimination. It would almost appear that the court's predilection for permitting the states freedom to experiment in social legislation has been broadened to include freedom to experiment in refined forms of depriving United States citizens of their lives. We appeal to Governor Coke Stevenson to use his prerogative to free the state of Texas from the imminent guilt of legal murder. And we urge our readers, after they have carefully studied Mr. Edwards's analysis, to act in their capacity as American citizens committed to a belief in equal justice and wire the Governor. A man's life may yet be saved and the traditions of American justice vindicated.

PROSPECTS FOR A JOBLESS INSURANCE BILL THAT will see war workers through the reconversion period without severe hardship appear to be slight despite President Truman's urgent plea for such legislation. Since it is obvious that the federal government has a responsibility to the hard-working men and women whose jobs were suddenly terminated by the cancelation of war orders, the opponents of the bill have been careful not to oppose the principle of the proposal. Instead, they have raised the hoary slogan of states' rights to sabotage the Administration's plan for increasing unemployment benefits by federal grants-in-aid. One state official, testifying before the Senate Finance Committee, said that forty states have restrictions preventing them from increasing their unemployment benefits even if they receive federal aid. Behind this technicality—which could easily be removed by the state legislatures—lies the concerted opposition of the state bureaucracies to any move which challenges their political domination. Since the plan would be of great benefit to the persons they are supposed to serve, as well as to the nation as a whole, their attitude provides the strongest argument yet advanced for the abolition of state control over unemployment insurance and the creation of a unified federal system. If it is impossible under the present law to provide equitable benefits for our war workers regardless of the state in which they happened to work, no time should be lost in changing the law. Surely the country does not want to repeat the experiences of the early 1930's, when the states held out against the use of federal funds until millions faced starvation and the states themselves were on the brink of complete economic collapse.

THE DEATH OF VICE-ADMIRAL JOHN SIDNEY McCain within a few hours of his return home is tragic testimony to the terrible effects of modern war on the men who fight it. McCain did not die from a sniper's bullet or a battleship's salvo, but war killed him as surely and as mercilessly as it killed any man who fell in the front lines. Reporters at Pearl Harbor who interviewed him on his way home from Japan remarked the strain and fatigue in his face, and those who knew what ceaseless effort of concentration he brought to his job of commanding the fast carrier force cannot have been too surprised that the sudden release from enormous responsibility and overtaxing work was followed by the stopping of a very stout heart. McCain was one of those extraordinary men who can master a new trade late in life—he received his wings at fifty-two—and go on to become a leader in the field. His sinewy, calculating mind and his enthusiastic embracing of the new potentialities of the naval air arm made him an ideal commander of the spearhead of our Pacific power. An unusual and imaginative command arrangement allowed that power to be applied almost continuously, Halsey and McCain alternating with Spruance and Mitscher as heads of the great Pacific fleet and its fast carrier force. Halsey and McCain carried the fight from Leyte to Tokyo Bay, through the harrowing days of Kamikaze to the triumphant days of searing attacks on the Japanese home islands by our carrier-based aircraft. McCain's planes in the last three months of war sank more than a million tons of enemy shipping and destroyed nearly three thousand enemy aircraft. The strain of that performance cost McCain his life; its brilliance has won him a high place in the annals of American military leaders.

Baruch on the Veterans

THE country has now been given a most comprehensive, detailed, and thoughtful report on the problems of veterans' readjustment to civilian pursuits by Bernard M. Baruch. In the endless stream of articles, books, lectures, and radio programs devoted to the subject, the Baruch report shines like a bright deed in a naughty world. It should become a sort of bible for government officials, Congressmen, and all authorities charged with responsibility for carrying out this most important of America's immediate reconversion tasks. It should serve as a guide to all citizens interested in straight thinking about a subject which has hitherto been befogged in a high incidence of nonsense.

Mr. Baruch strikes to the heart of the matter when he says:

> The solution of the veterans' problems does not—cannot—proceed alone. During the period when our soldiers and sailors will be shedding their uniforms, six to eight million workers in strictly war industries will be shifting jobs or homes. The ultimate goal of any veterans' program must be to restore the returning soldier and sailor to the community—socially, economically, and humanely. This cannot be accomplished except as part of the larger program embracing the whole of human demobilization.

One terrible danger of failure may be to set the veteran off from the rest of the nation, cherishing the grievance of having been wronged, at odds with fellow-Americans, his feelings an explosive fuel ready to be ignited by some future demagogue.

These two paragraphs should be pasted in the hats of all who deal with veterans. They set forth the essential objective of veterans' demobilization and the devastating cost of failure.

Implicit in the whole Baruch report is the author's understanding of the central objective of an intelligent program for veterans: "to restore the returning soldier and sailor to the community." He discards the nonsense of attempting to "reward" men who have done deeds for which there can be no adequate reward except in terms of a healthy nation and a peaceful world. He rejects the sentimental theory that we must "do something for veterans" in favor of the sound theory of helping ourselves to achieve our national objectives by making sure the veterans will take their places in the community as productive citizens, not as professional ex-servicemen who are set apart from non-veterans by walls of false distinction—walls which may be built either by disproportionate preference for veterans or by inadequate or faulty assistance.

Central to the success of Mr. Baruch's plan is the appointment of a "single, unforgetful mind" to the post of work director in charge of the entire "human side of demobilization." This post, first suggested in the original Baruch-Hancock report on demobilization eighteen months ago, was formally created in an executive order of a year ago establishing a Retraining and Reemployment Administration. General Frank T. Hines, who was appointed to the post, was prevented by his duties as Veterans' Administrator from doing much in this broader field. General Omar Bradley, to whom the new Baruch report is addressed, has replaced General Hines in the Veterans' Administration, and Hines has now been appointed Minister to Panama. No successor is in sight for head of the Retraining and Reemployment Administration; presumably President Truman is looking for a man of the required caliber for the job. It is a vital appointment, for General Bradley, as Mr. Baruch said, cannot do his own work to best effect without this unifying force outside the Veterans' Administration.

The Baruch report contains six more major recommendations: a clean-cut division between medical and non-medical affairs in the Veterans' Administration, with the creation of a new veterans' medical service under an outstanding director; the establishment of an independent committee to survey every aspect of veterans' medical care and recommend changes to modernize that outdated system; substantial increases in salaries of medical personnel with promotion on the basis of professional ability as opposed to the current initiative-killing system of seniority, closer links with civilian medical centers, and encouragement of research; another committee to recommend simplification of non-medical routines in administration; amendment of the G. I. Bill of Rights to make loan provisions effective over ten years instead of two; and an incentive tax of 25 per cent less than the normal rate to veterans starting new businesses.

All these recommendations seem to us sensible and to the point. They are not entirely original with Mr. Baruch: reporters such as Albert Deutsch and Albert Q. Maisel, whose exposés contributed to General Hines's replacement, have suggested similar reforms in the medical field, and the American Veterans' Committee has proposed action paralleling Mr. Baruch's in all these fields for the past six months. But it is encouraging to have the voice of such a widely respected elder statesman add its authority to the views of a group of veterans of this war, and it is devoutly to be hoped that the President, General Bradley, Congress, and common citizens everywhere will listen to these voices.

Cross-Currents in Japan

DESPITE continued revelations of inhuman Japanese cruelty toward American prisoners of war, the first week after formal surrender passed without any notable stiffening of General MacArthur's policies toward the defeated enemy. Perhaps it is too soon to expect a drastic change. The occupation has been proceeding very slowly. Ten days after the first landings we still had only 32,000 men in Japan. The entry into Tokyo came nearly a week after the formal capitulation. The Japanese have played their cards skilfully to persuade MacArthur to leave their governmental and economic structure intact. No incident has marred the progress of the occupation. The Japanese government appears to have faithfully, if at times tardily, carried out all MacArthur's orders. In an obvious effort to prepare the people for the hardships of the occupation, Premier Higashi-kuni has finally told them that it was Allied power rather than the magnanimity of the Emperor that brought about the sudden end of the war. In his speech before the Diet he frankly admitted that the Japanese had been defeated even before the dropping of the atomic bomb and Russia's entry into the war, and that these events had made their situation impossible.

MacArthur appears to have attacked his new job with more zeal than understanding. He has shown a clear intention to crack down on the Japanese so as to impress upon them the fact of their defeat. He has imposed a curfew on Japanese civilians in the occupation areas, forbidden the sale of alcoholic beverages, announced severe penalties for the acquisition or use of American food or supplies, and ordered Japanese civilians to show a respectful attitude toward Americans. Tokyo Rose, the notorious radio propagandist, has been arrested. But in sharp contrast to these indications of a tougher policy, the Allied High Command has announced that it will use several thousand members of the Kampei-tai, the Japanese counterpart of the Gestapo, to assist the regular police in maintaining order. Presumably they have been chosen because they have police experience and can lift a heavy burden from the limited American occupation forces. Yet as Andrew Roth points out elsewhere in this issue, the chief function of the Kempei-tai has always been the suppression of liberal and democratic groups within Japan. Only if the secret police are wholly suppressed and their documents destroyed can we expect the progressive

The Members Meet . . . .

The recent annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council marked a forward step in the life of movements designed to make human relations democratic in the South. Paradoxical as it may seem race relations movements seldom have been democratic in their structure and function. In the past they operated in two ways: first, they relied very heavily upon the one-man type of leadership, one person being a spokesman for each race; second, they leaned very heavily upon the wisdom and wishes of a select few whose actions were either supported or repudiated. Today, more so than ever before, the wishes of the many become the foundation stone of action in the field of race relations. As we have implied, this is a very significant index to the changing character of movements in race relations, and if the Southern Regional Council's Member Meeting may be regarded as indicative of any trend at all it does reflect a growing desire on the part of people to face situations frankly, collectively, and fearlessly.

The executives of the Council were heartened by the courage and forthrightness with which chronic and acute problems of southern life were introduced. True, SRC members did not possess all of the information, hold to all of the beliefs, decide on every action that would make living utopian, but they did make a light for ways that have been dark. No phase of relations between the races was ignored in discussion. The members realized, however, the mighty potency of words and stultifying effect of fear in furthering or arresting any program they might undertake. Though our emotions were quickened with reports of "incidents" of sex and race, of injustices, of official lethargy and community inactivity, our reason was challenged with programs of correction, amelioration, even the complete undoing of ways that had perpetuated an undemocratic South. We met to find ways of doing something more about and with all of these people, communities, and problems. We stuck to our last.

Above all, perhaps, this achievement seems outstanding—we learned to discuss all of our ills without venom and emotional distress; we made new covenants and resolutions, openly arrived at. And though the SRC's diagnosis of the South is not yet complete, the organization's therapy for what is known continues. There is abundant life in the membership of the Southern Regional Council. That gives us hope.

Authorize . . . .

The Executive Directors, in their reports offered several suggestions and recommendations on the program of the Council during the coming year. The procedures authorized were:

1. The Organization of State Divisions of the Council

As soon as there are one hundred members of the Council in a given state, they will be organized as a nucleus for action on the state level. The by-laws and policies of such divisions would, of course, have to be in harmony with those of the Council.

2. A Series of South-wide Conferences

Within the limits of the budget and with the advice of the Executive Committee, the SRC will sponsor several important annual conferences. One would be a conference for the leaders of the state and local interracial committees. Another would be a strategy conference of the leaders of the major agencies working on problems of the South within the framework of the Council's interests. Still another would be a conference of religious leaders in programs of social action, with particular emphasis, perhaps, on the women's divisions of the various church bodies.

3. A Series of State-wide Race Relations Institutes or Forums

Each of these would run from three to five days and would attempt to reach a better cross-section of the public than is usually reached by such meetings. The Department of Race Relations of the American Missionary Association is preparing to promote a series of institutes and has asked the Council to share in their planning and sponsorship.

4. Special Visiting Committee

The officers of the Council, or such other groups as the Executive Committee might choose, are authorized to seek private conferences with as many Southern governors as possible in the next three months. Their discussions will not be confined to race relations, but will include the main problems of social and economic welfare in the South.

5. Civil Rights Committees

From time to time arise cases which the SRC might well handle for the protection of the civil rights of citizens in the region. The central staff cannot undertake to investigate personally all such cases. Therefore, the Council members approved the establishment of Civil Rights Committees in all our thirteen states. Each committee might be composed of five Council members and a legal advisor who may or may not be a member of the Council, and the duty of these Committees would be to advise the Executive Directors and the Executive Committee as to what action the Council should take in cases involving civil rights.

6. Youth Work

The Council authorized the taking of steps that would permit youth direct participation in the Council or the sponsoring of some sort of auxiliary or correlated youth division of the Council.

7. Study of Police Systems

One of the most urgent needs in the South is reform of police training and administration. Along with its program of promoting improvement wherever it can, the Council authorized the sponsorship of a comprehensive study of Southern police systems in cooperation with one or more universities. An approach of this sort would permit the Council to embark on a program which would not necessarily be tied in with the race question, yet would permit the treatment and analysis of a problem that is closely allied with race tensions.

8. Study of Segregation and Discrimination

The Council authorized the drawing of plans for a comprehensive study to be carried on throughout the South in the field of legal discrimination and segregation. It is proposed that ameliorative action be based upon a study of the facts as to the human and economic costs of segregation and discrimination. Such a study should provide useful material for molding public opinion on the question of equal opportunity. This study would be preceded by a conference on the subject of segregation and discrimination.

9. Primary Test Case

The Council authorized the Board of Directors to proceed with a legal test of the applicability of the Supreme Court decision in Smith vs. Allwright in the State of Georgia if it appears that no such case is already under way.

And Resolve for 1945

1. General Resolutions

We believe that every effort must be made to prepare the people of the South for the returning Negro and white soldiers. The problems which are arising already as they come back from active service or are demobilized into civilian life call for prompt and constructive action on local, state, regional, and national levels.

With a view to encouraging the returning Negro soldiers to have faith that the democratic principles for which they have fought are to be translated into reality, we recommend:

1. Employment of all persons on the basis of ability, with due regard for seniority rights.
2. Abolition of the white primary where it exists.
3. Extension of the growing practice of employing Negro policemen and firemen in Southern cities and equal treatment of members of both races by the police and the courts.
4. Equalization of educational opportunity and of pay for teachers of both races.
5. Extension of publicly financed low cost housing.
6. Increased publicly financed medical and dental care available to both races on an equal basis.
7. That equal accommodations for Negroes as provided under the law, be actually provided on all public transportation facilities, and that discriminatory practices now common in travel be abolished.

2. Post War Employment

The Southern Regional Council realizes the importance of encouraging and planning for an effective program of full employment in every Southern community.

We, therefore, urge that such planning include the initiation and maintenance of an effective public employment service which within its ranks and among employers will promote the effective utilization of all workers in terms of their skills and training, without regard to their race, color, or creed.

We recommend that equal and effective opportunities for the technical and vocational training of Negroes be made available.

We recommend the creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to promote the non-discriminatory use of manpower.

3. Education

In the seventeen states and the District of Columbia which require separation of the races in their public school systems, continuing and substantial differences in the public schools for white and Negro children prevail despite requirements of educational statutes, that separate and uniform school facilities be established and maintained. These differences are reflected in the buildings and equipment, in the length of the school day, in the teacher-pupil loads, in the per-pupil expenditure, in the investments in public school property, and in teachers' salaries.

Recognizing the necessity and continuing obligation to establish equality of educational opportunity for all in order to further the establishment of a sound economy in the Southern region, and recognizing the opportunities inherent in the post-war plans for school improvements now developing in communities within these states, we accept the principles that:

1. There should exist and be available for Negro children the same types of educational opportunities as there are for white children.
2. The teacher-pupil ratio in Negro schools should be as low as that in schools for white children.
3. The length of the school day should be the same for the Negro child as it is for the white child.
4. The same types of physical accommodations and facilities in the public schools should exist and be available for Negro children as are available for white children.

We recommend these principles for the consideration of all law-abiding citizens, and responsible school officials in Southern communities, and urge, in behalf of the common welfare, that action be taken to make these principles operative in all plans for public school improvements.

4. Homer P. Rainey and the University of Texas

The Southern Regional Council wishes to protest the dismissal of Dr. Homer P. Rainey as President of the University of Texas. The Council believes this is a startling infringement of personal and academic freedom, and a severe blow to those Southern persons and agencies working for democratic rights.

The Southern Regional Council believes in Dr. Rainey because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his close association with us in the formation of SRC which he now serves as Vice-President. The Council commends him for the stand he has taken, and applauds those Texas citizens and those students and faculty members at the University of Texas who gave him such unqualified support.

PART ONE

BENEFITS FOR DISCHARGED VETERANS

FOREWORD

In 1922, the General Assembly of Kentucky, at the request of the American Legion of Kentucky, created the Disabled Ex-Service Men's Board. The purpose of this State agency is to assist Kentucky's disabled veterans of all wars, and their dependents, in the proper preparation and prosecution of their claims for the benefits provided by the Federal Government to which they are legally entitled as a result of their military or naval service.

In accordance with the provisions of the law, the Disabled Ex-Service Men's Board is composed of the Lieutenant-Governor, Chairman, ex-officio; the Adjutant General, Member, ex-officio; and the Commander of the American Legion, Department of Kentucky, Member, ex-officio.

The offices of the Board are maintained at 209 Walton Building, Main and Esplanade, Lexington, 9, Kentucky, and at the United States Veterans Administration, also in Lexington, Kentucky.

Within the Lexington offices are located the Executive-Secretary of the Board and a staff of competent claims reviewers trained especially to advise and assist the veterans with their claims and rehabilitation problems. There are seven Field Secretaries travelling throughout the State assisting veterans in every county, in cooperation with the service officers of local American Legion posts and other service and civic organizations. These services are rendered, regardless of their nature, without charge.

To all the returning service men and women of Kentucky, who so nobly defended their country in time of need, the Disabled Ex-Service Men's Board offers its continued support and assistance in gratitude for their contributions to so great a task.

CLAUDE S. SPROWLS
Executive-Secretary

VETERANS' DIVISION
(KRS 36.060)

1. The Veterans' Division of the Department of Military Affairs shall:

   (a) Prepare in proper form, present and prosecute the claims of disabled ex-service men and women and their dependents with the United States Veterans' Administration and other Federal agencies;

   (b) Secure and expedite action on the claims;

   (c) Keep in contact with the United States Veterans' Administration so that the status of any claim may be known at any time.

   (d) Continue to survey the State to make certain that no disabled veteran or his dependents are neglected; and,

   (e) Perform such other duties as the Adjutant General directs.

2. "Veterans" and "ex-service men and women", as used in this section, include any individual who served on active duty in the army, navy or marine corps of the United States and who has received an honorable discharge from such service.

3. The Adjutant General shall exercise general administration of the work of this Division and shall direct the work in the light of advice from the Kentucky Disabled Ex-Service Men's Board. The board shall be composed of the Lieutenant-Governor, who shall act as Chairman, the State Commander of the American Legion, Department of Kentucky, and The Adjutant General, all ex-officio members. The members of the board shall serve without compensation, but shall be reimbursed for necessary travel expenses incident to their official duties.

EXEMPTION FROM FEES FOR BIRTH OR DEATH CERTIFICATES
(KRS 213.190 (3))

No fee or compensation shall be allowed or paid for furnishing certificates of birth, sickness or death required in support of any claim for compensation, insurance, back pay or other allowances for the benefit of any person who has at any time served as a member of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States.

EXEMPTION FROM CERTAIN NOTARY FEES
(KRS 64.300 (2))

No fee or compensation shall be allowed or paid for affixing the seal and signature of a notary public to any application, affidavit, certificate or other paper necessary to be filed in support of any claim for the benefits of Federal legislation for any person or his dependents who has served as a member of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States.

RECORDING AND INDEXING OF DISCHARGE PAPERS
(KRS 422.090)

All discharge papers given, executed or delivered to any person in the military or naval service of the United States, which evidence his discharge from the service of the United States, and show the unit or part of the department to which he was attached and from which he was discharged, may be recorded in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the person discharged is a resident. Upon presentation of such papers the county clerk shall record them, without charge therefor.

A certified or attested copy of such recorded discharge is admissible evidence in all proceedings in which such discharge may come in question or in which it might be used as legal evidence of any fact.

VETERANS' PENSION EXEMPT FROM STATE INCOME TAX (KRS 141.080 (11))

All income received from the Federal Government by an ex-service man or woman, or their dependents, by reason of war-time service in the United States Army, Navy, Marine, or Nursing Service of the United States Government, shall be deducted from the gross income of these taxpayers.

CERTAIN VETERANS EXEMPT FROM POLL TAX (KRS 142.020 (2))

Any honorably discharged soldier, sailor, or marine who has served ninety days or more in the military or naval forces of the United States, who was a resident of this State at the time of his induction into service, and who is totally disabled as evidenced by pension certificate or award of compensation, is exempt from all poll taxes.

BENEFITS FREE FROM INHERITANCE TAX (KRS 140.030 (2))

The proceeds payable under any United States Government Life Insurance policy or National Service Life Insurance policy issued by or through the Federal Government, whether payable to a designated beneficiary or to the assured, or to his estate, shall be tax-free, and shall not be considered in determining the value of any taxable transfer.

EXEMPTION OF BENEFITS FROM FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ARISING OUT OF WAR (KRS 140.015)

The payment of any gratuity pay, death compensation or other award or benefit, by the Federal Government, to the surviving spouse or heirs of any person by reason, or arising out of service by such person in the armed forces of the United States in time of war shall not be considered a taxable transfer. The amount paid shall not be considered in determining the value of any taxable transfer.

CERTIFIED COPIES OF RECORDS TO BE FURNISHED VETERANS ADMINISTRATION WITHOUT CHARGE (KRS 388.330)

Whenever a copy of any public record is required by the Veterans Administration to be used in determining the eligibility of any person to participate in benefits made available by such Veterans Administration, the official charged with the custody of such public record shall without charge provide the applicant for such benefits or any person acting on his behalf or the authorized representative of such Veterans Administration with a certified copy of such record.

CIVIL SERVICE RATINGS (KRS 78.060 (1) (3))

Any county containing a city of the second class and having a population of more than 80,000 may, by resolution, create a civil service commission to govern employment of employes, classify employes of the county and designate the classes of employes. Any applicant who served in the Army, Navy, or hospital service of the United States in time of War and who was honorably discharged shall be entitled to five percent increase in his examination grade.

REINSTATEMENT OR REEMPLOYMENT OF SCHOOL TEACHERS AND SUPERINTENDENTS (KRS 161.740 (3))

Any teacher or superintendent who has been or may be hereafter inducted into the Armed Forces of this country for service in the present war, shall at the expiration of such service be reemployed or reinstated in his or her former position as of the beginning of the next school year provided application is made at least thirty days before the opening of school, unless physically or mentally incapacitated. Any teacher or superintendent desiring reinstatement in his or her former position shall file application for same with the board of education within a period of sixty days immediately following discharge from the Armed Forces of the country. Vacancies created by military leaves shall be filled by teachers or superintendents employed by the board of education under limited contracts only.

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR VETERANS
(KRS 164.480)

Every person who was engaged in any branch of the military or naval service of the United States, prescribed and classified by the United States War Department as a part of such service, during the wars that were declared on April 6, 1917, and any wars declared thereafter, respectively, and who at the time of his enlistment was a resident of Kentucky, is entitled to a free scholarship in any state higher educational institution for white or colored persons, that he chooses for a period required for the completion of the course of study selected by him. The scholarship includes free tuition, enrollment and other fees, room rent, fuel and lights, and the advantages and privileges of the institution, but does not include free board. However, if the Federal Government provides for the education of veterans of any of the wars herein referred to, then this section shall not apply to such veterans.

(KRS 164.500)

Each applicant shall file his application for admission at least thirty days prior to the beginning of the semester of the school year at which he desires to enter. The application shall be accompanied by his certificate of honorable discharge from the service, which shall be returned to him upon admittance.

A veteran should first make application for training under Public Law 346, 78th Congress, better known as the "G.I. Bill of Rights". If he is not eligible for training under this bill, proper notification will be furnished by the Veterans Administration. Such notice will serve to prove that the veteran is not furnished training by the Federal Government.

Applications may be directed to any of the following state-owned colleges: University of Kentucky, Lexington, Kentucky; Eastern State Teachers College, Richmond, Kentucky; Western State Teachers College, Bowling Green, Kentucky; Murray State Teachers College, Murray, Kentucky; and Morehead State Teachers College, Morehead, Kentucky.

SCHOLASTIC REQUIREMENTS FOR SCHOLARSHIP
(KRS 164.490)

All veterans eligible for scholarships provided for by the State, shall meet the scholastic entrance requirements prescribed by the university or college for the course of study chosen by the applicant.

CONTRACTS OF INFANT WAR VETERANS
(KRS 384.090)

Enforceability of contracts of infants executed to obtain benefits of federal law providing for guaranteeing of loans to war veterans. When the repayment, by the borrower, of money advanced or to be advanced under a contract of loan or credit has, on application of the borrower, been guaranteed in whole or in part of the Federal Government or any agency thereof, under authority of federal laws enacted for the benefit of war veterans, the borrower shall not thereafter be entitled to avoid the contract on the ground that he was an infant when the contract was made, nor shall he or his spouse be entitled, on the ground of infancy, to avoid any mortgage or other instrument of encumbrance executed contemporaneously with such contract for the purpose of securing the same, nor any contractual transaction in connection with such contract of loan or credit pursuant to which the borrower acquired title to or an interest in the property encumbered to secure the loan or credit. For the purpose of any litigation seeking to enforce the contract of loan or credit, or any encumbrance securing the same; for the purpose of any contract or conveyance executed under a settlement or refinancing plan approved by the Federal authority by which the original guaranty was made; and for the purpose of making and executing any contract or conveyance necessary to the full realization of the rights, privileges and benefits intended to be conferred by the federal law pursuant to which the guaranty was made, including contracts necessary for the proper utilization of the property acquired with the proceeds of such contract of loan or credit; the borrower and his spouse shall be deemed to be of full age.

ROOMS FOR VETERANS
(KRS 36.100)

Each armory in which the Armories Division thinks it practicable shall contain a room suitable for meeting of associations of veterans of the Spanish-American War and the World War, and shall be available for such meetings under rules and regulations prescribed by the commanding officer of the National Guard units using the armory.

CONFEDERATE PENSIONS; PERSONS ENTITLED TO
(KRS 206.020)

1. Any Confederate veteran who has been an actual bona fide resident of this State since January 1, 1915, shall be paid fifty dollars per month upon proving that he:

(a) Did actual military service in the Confederate Army from the date of his enlistment to the close of the war, or until he was honorably discharged from the military forces of the Confederate States;

(b) Was prevented from serving until the close of the war or until he was honorably discharged by reason of wounds or disease contracted in line of duty, which rendered him unable to perform further military service; or

(c) Deserted or was discharged, but reenlisted or returned to service in the Confederate Army, and served until the close of the war or until he was honorably discharged or prevented from serving by wounds or disease contracted in line of duty disabling him from further military service.

2. The widow of any such Confederate veteran who would have been entitled to the pension, and which widow was living with him as his legal wife at the time of his death, has not remarried since his death, and who has been an actual bona fide resident of the State since January 1, 1915, shall be paid out of the State Treasury:

(a) Fifty dollars per month if married to the veteran before January 1, 1875;

(b) Forty dollars per month if married to the veteran prior to January 1, 1895, and subsequent to January 1, 1875;

(c) Thirty dollars per month if married to the veteran prior to January 1, 1915, and subsequent to January 1, 1895.

3. Payments under this section shall be made upon proof of the facts according to forms and regulations prescribed by the Department of Finance.

PART TWO

UNIFORM VETERANS' GUARDIANSHIP ACT

ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS IS NECESSARY PARTY
(KRS 388.200)

The Administrator of Veterans Affairs or his successor is and shall be a party in interest in any proceeding brought under any law of this state for the appointment of a guardian or committee for any minor or mentally incompetent beneficiary of the Veterans Administration on whose account benefits have been paid or are payable by said Veterans Administration, and the said Administrator or his successor is and shall be an interested party in any court proceeding pertaining to or affecting in any manner the administration of the estate of any such beneficiary on whose account such benefits are payable or whose estate includes assets derived from benefits paid by the Veterans Administration, its predecessor or successor. Written notice shall be given by registered mail, unless waived in writing, to the office of the Veterans Administration having jurisdiction over the area in which the court is located, of the time and place for hearing on any petition or pleading or in connection with any proceeding pertaining to or affecting in any manner the administration of the estate of any such beneficiary of the Veterans Administration. Said notice shall be deposited in the mails not less than fifteen days prior to the date of such hearing or other proceeding.

GUARDIAN OR COMMITTEE REPRESENTING FIVE OR MORE WARDS
NOT ELIGIBLE; EXCEPTIONS (KRS 388.220)

(1) Except as hereinafter provided, it shall be unlawful for any person to accept appointment as guardian or committee of any minor or mentally incompetent beneficiary of the Veterans Administration if such proposed guardian or committee shall at that time be acting as guardian or committee for five wards. In any case, upon presentation of a petition by an attorney of the Veterans Administration under this section alleging that a guardian or committee is acting in a fiduciary capacity for more than five wards and requesting his discharge for that reason, the court, upon proof substantiating the petition, shall require a final accounting forthwith from such guardian or committee and shall discharge such guardian or committee in said case.

(2) The limitations of this section shall not apply where the guardian or committee is a bank or trust company. An individual may be guardian or committee of more than five wards if they are all members of the same family.

PETITION FOR APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN OR COMMITTEE; WHO TO BE APPOINTED (KRS 388.230)

(1) A petition for the appointment of a guardian or committee for any minor or mentally incompetent beneficiary of the Veterans Administration may be filed in the court having jurisdiction by or on behalf of any person who under existing law is entitled to priority of appointment. If there be no person so entitled or if the person so entitled shall neglect or refuse to file such a petition within thirty days after mailing of notice by the Veterans Administration to the last known address of such person indicating the necessity for the same, a petition for such appointment may be filed by or on behalf of any responsible person residing in this state.

(2) The petition for appointment shall set forth the name, age, place of residence of such beneficiary, the name and place of residence of the nearest relative, if known, and the fact that such beneficiary is entitled to receive benefits payable by or through the Veterans Administration and shall set forth the amount of moneys then due and the amount of probably future payments.

(3) The petition shall also set forth the name and address of the person or institution, if any, having actual custody of such beneficiary, and the name, age, relationship, if any, occupation and address of the person proposed for appointment as guardian or committee. Notwithstanding any provision of existing law as to priority, the court may appoint a capable individual, bank or trust company as guardian or committee, if the person entitled to priority fails to apply, or if after hearing the court determines it is for the best interest of such beneficiary to appoint another.

(4) In the case of a mentally incompetent beneficiary, the petition shall show that such beneficiary has been rated incompetent by the Veterans Administration on examination in accordance with the laws and regulations governing the Veterans Administration.

CERTIFICATE OF ADMINISTRATOR IS PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE OF NECESSITY FOR GUARDIAN (KRS 388.240)

Where a petition is filed for the appointment of a guardian for a minor beneficiary of the Veterans Administration, a certificate of the Administrator of Veterans Affairs, or his authorized representative, accompanying such petition, setting forth the age of such minor as shown by the records of the Veterans Administration and the fact that the appointment of a guardian is a condition precedent to the payment of any moneys due the minor by the Veterans Administration, shall be prima facie evidence of the necessity for such appointment.

CERTIFICATE OF ADMINISTRATOR IS PRIMA FACIE
(KRS 388.250)

Notwithstanding the provisions of existing law for adjudication of incompetency and appointment of a committee upon the inquest of a jury, where a petition is filed for the appointment of a committee for a mentally incompetent beneficiary of the Veterans Administration under the provisions of this chapter, who is found within this state, whether or not a resident thereof, a certificate of the Administrator of Veterans Affairs or his duly authorized representative, accompanying such petition, setting forth the fact that such beneficiary has been rated incompetent by the Veterans Administration on examination in accordance with the laws and regulations governing such Veterans Administration, and that the appointment of a committee is a condition precedent to the payment of any moneys due such beneficiary by the Veterans Administration, shall be prima facie evidence of the necessity for such appointment. Provided, however, that some member of the Bar shall be appointed by the court to represent and protect the interests and rights of such incompetent beneficiary as provided under existing law, and further that the right of any such incompetent beneficiary to demand a trial by jury shall not be denied.

NOTICE OF PETITION FOR APPOINTMENT OF
GUARDIAN OR COMMITTEE(KRS 388.260)

Upon the filing of a petition for the appointment of a guardian or committee under the provisions as set forth, notice shall be given in like manner as is provided under existing law.

COURT TO APPROVE APPOINTMENT; BOND OF GUARDIAN OR COMMITTEE
(KRS 388.270)

(1) Before making an appointment under the provisions as set forth, the court shall be satisfied that the person whose appointment is sought is a fit and proper person to be appointed. Upon the appointment being made, the guardian or committee shall execute and file a bond to be approved by the court in an amount not less than the estimated value of the personal estate and anticipated income during the ensuing year. The said bond shall be in the form and be conditioned as required of guardians and committees appointed under the general guardianship laws of this state. The court shall have power from time to time to require the guardian or committee to file an additional bond.

(2) Where a bond is tendered by a guardian or committee with personal sureties, there shall be at least two such sureties and they shall file with the court a certificate under oath which shall describe the property owned, both real and personal, and shall state that they are each worth the sum named in the bond as the penalty thereof over and above all their debts and liabilities and exclusive of property exempt from execution. Notwithstanding such tender, the court may require additional security or may require a corporate surety bond, the premium thereon to be paid from the ward's estate.

ANNUAL ACCOUNTING; NOTICES AND INFORMATION TO BE GIVEN VETERANS ADMINISTRATION; HEARINGS
(KRS 388.280)

(1) Every guardian or committee who shall receive on account of his ward any moneys from the Veterans Administration shall file with the court annually, on the anniversary date of the appointment, in addition to such other accounts as may be required by the court, a full, true and accurate account under oath of all moneys so received by him, of all disbursements in his hands at the date of such account and how invested. The guardian or committee, at the time of filing his account, shall exhibit all securities or investments described therein to an officer of the bank or other depository wherein said securities are held for safe-keeping, or to an authorized representative of the corporation which is surety on his bond, or to the clerk or deputy clerk of a court of record in this state or to any other reputable person designated by the court upon request of the guardian or committee or other interested party, who shall certify in writing that he has examined such securities or investments and identified them with those described in the account; provided, that if such depository is the guardian or committee, such certifying officer shall be an officer other than the officer verifying the account, or the guardian or committee may exhibit such securities or investments to the judge of the court who shall endorse on the account and copy thereof a statement that the securities or investments shown therein as on hand were in fact exhibited to him and that those exhibited to him were the same as those shown in the account. Such certificate, and the certificate of an official of the bank in which is deposited any cash balance showing the amount on deposit shall be filed by the guardian or committee with his account. A certified copy of each such account and a signed duplicate of such certificates filed with the court shall be sent by the guardian or committee to the office of the Veterans Administration having jurisdiction over the area in which such court is located. A duplicate signed copy or certified copy of any petition, motion or other pleading which is filed in the guardianship proceedings, or in any proceedings for the purpose of removing the disability of minority or of mental incompetency, shall be furnished by the person filing the same, to the office of the

Veterans Administration concerned. The court, unless hearing be waived in writing by the Chief Attorney of the Veterans Administration, shall fix a time and place for the hearing on such account, petition, or other pleading, not less than fifteen days nor more than thirty days from the date of filing same unless a different available date be stipulated in writing, and written notice of the time and place of such hearing shall be given by the court to the aforesaid Veterans Administration office not less than fifteen days prior to the date affixed for the hearing. Notice of such hearing shall in like manner be given to the guardian or committee and to any others entitled to notice.

(2) The clerk shall mail said Veterans Administration office a copy of each order entered in any guardianship proceeding wherein the Veterans Administration is an interested party.

REMOVAL FOR FAILURE TO FILE ACCOUNTS OR FURNISH DOCUMENTS
(KRS 388.290)

If any guardian or committee shall fail to file with the court or the Veterans Administration, as required by this chapter, any account of the benefits received by him from the Veterans Administration on account of his ward within thirty days after such account is due, or shall fail to furnish the Veterans Administration a true copy of any account or of any petition or pleading as required by these provisions, such failure shall be grounds for removal.

COMPENSATION OF GUARDIAN OR COMMITTEE
(KRS 388.300)

Compensation payable to guardians or committees shall not exceed five percent of the income of the ward during any year. In the event of extraordinary services rendered by any guardian or committee, the court may, upon petition and after notice to the Veterans Administration and hearing thereon, autnorize reasonable additional compensation therefor payable from the estate of the ward. Notice of such petition and hearing shall be given to the proper office of the Veterans Administration in the manner provided. No commission or compensation shall be allowed on the estate received from a preceding guardian.

INVESTMENT OF FUNDS
(KRS 388.310)

All funds in possession of such guardian or committee shall be invested in such securities or other property in which the guardian or committee has no interest as allowed by law, which investment shall be first approved by the court; except that investments in direct interest-bearing obligations of the United States Government or of this state shall be permissible without an order of the court.

SUPPORT OF PERSONS OTHER THAN WARD
(KRS 388.320)

A guardian or committee shall not apply any portion of the estate of his ward for the support and maintenance of any person other than said ward, his minor children and his wife (if she and the ward be living together) except upon petition to and prior order of the court after a hearing, notice of which has been given the proper office of the Veterans Administration in the manner and within the time provided.

CERTIFIED COPIES OF RECORDS TO BE FURNISHED VETERANS ADMINISTRATION WITHOUT CHARGE
(KRS 388.330)

Whenever a copy of any public record is required by the Veterans Administration to be used in determining the eligibility of any person to participate in benefits made available by such Veterans Administration, the official charged with the custody of such public record shall without charge provide the applicant for such benefits or any person acting on his behalf or the authorized representative of such Veterans Administration with a certified copy of such record.

TERMINATION OF GUARDIANSHIP
(KRS 388.340)

Upon filing a petition, or certificate, showing that a minor ward has attained majority, or that an incompetent ward has been rated competent upon examination in accordance with the law, the court may order the guardian or committee to file a final account; and, upon hearing, after notice to the former minor or incompetent and to the Veterans Administration in the manner and within the time provided, and upon approval of the final account, the court may so adjudge, and discharge the guardian or committee and release the sureties from liability upon delivery to the former ward of the assets due him by the former guardian or committee, and may make such further order as may be lawful.

COMMITMENT OR TRANSFER OF INCOMPETENT TO CUSTODY OF VETERANS ADMINISTRATION OR OTHER FEDERAL AGENCY (KRS 388.350)

(1) Whenever in a proceeding for the trial and commitment of any person who appears to be of unsound mind it is determined that such person is either feebleminded, an epileptic, insane person or an idiot and ought to be committed for safe-keeping or treatment and it appears that such person is eligible for care or treatment by the Veterans Administration or other agency of the United States Government, the court of the county in which such person is found, having jurisdiction in such matters, upon receipt of a certificate from the Veterans Administration or such other agency showing that facilities are available and that such person is eligible for care or treatment therein, may commit such person to the Veterans Administration or other agency of the United States Government for care or treatment. Thereafter, such person, upon admission to any such facility, shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the Veterans Administration or other agency of the United States Government. The chief officer of any such facility or institution to which such person is committed under the provisions of this section shall be vested with the same powers as are exercised by superintendents of state hospitals for mental diseases within this state with respect to the retention, transfer, parole or discharge of the person so committed. Notice of such pending commitment proceedings shall be furnished the person whose commitment is sought and his right to appear and defend shall not be denied. The judgment or order of commitment by a court of competent jurisdiction of another state committing a person to the Veterans Administration or other agency of the United States Government, for care or treatment, shall have the same force and effect as to such person while in this state as in the state in which is situated the court entering such judgment or making such order.

(2) Upon receipt of a certificate of the Veterans Administration or such other agency of the United States Government that facilities are available for the care or treatment of any person heretofore committed to any hospital for the insane or other institution in this state for the care of persons similarly afflicted and that such person is eligible for such care or treatment, the superintendent of any such hospital or institution in this state is hereby authorized to cause the transfer of any such person to the Veterans Administration or other agency of the United States Government for care or treatment. Upon effecting any such transfer, the committing court shall be notified thereof by the transferring agency; provided, however, that no person shall be transferred if he be confined pursuant to conviction of any crime or misdemeanor, or if he shall have been acquitted of any such charge solely on the ground of insanity, unless prior to such transfer the court originally committing such person shall enter an order for such transfer after appropriate motion and hearing.

(3) Any person transferred as provided in this section shall be deemed to be committed to the Veterans Administration or otheragency of the United States Government pursuant to the original commitment the same as if he had been originally so committed.

PART THREE

BENEFITS FOR SERVICE MEN ON ACTIVE DUTY

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PERSONS IN UNIFORM PROHIBITED (KRS 432.090)

Any person who excludes from the equal enjoyment of any accommodation facility or privilege furnished by inns, common carriers or theaters or other places of amusement or resort any person lawfully wearing the uniform of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States because of that uniform shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars, or imprisoned for not less than nor more than sixty days, or both.

TIME EXTENSION FOR PAYMENT OF INCOME TAXES (KRS 141.225)

Every person in military service who is required by law to file an income tax return and pay income taxes to the State of Kentucky, shall not be required to file such return and pay such taxes, which would otherwise become due during his period of military service, until twelve months after the termination of his period of military service or twelve months after the termination of the War, whichever is earlier.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PAYMENT OF AD VALOREM TAXES (KRS 134.036)

When any person in the military service, or any person in his behalf, shall file with the sheriff or other officer whose duty it is to collect any ad valorem property taxes, an affidavit stating that he is a person in military service and by reason of such military service his ability to pay ad valorem taxes on his property is materially affected, an extension of time for the payment of all ad valorem taxes which would otherwise become due on the property of such person, and such taxes shall not become due until twelve months after the termination of his period of military service or twelve months after the termination of the War, whichever is the earlier.

EXEMPTION OF DRIVERS LICENSE
(KRS 186.420 (2) (3) (4))

Every person in the service of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, when furnished with an operator's permit from the United States, shall be exempt from an operator's license, when operating an official vehicle in the course of his service. During the period of National Emergency and six months thereafter which was declared to exist by proclamation of the President of the United States shall be permitted to operate a motor vehicle without the required operator's license. Any person in the armed forces of the United States who has in his possession a Kentucky operator's license which was issued on or after May 26, 1941, may have such license extended without cost for the remainder of the National Emergency which was declared by proclamation of the President of the United States dated May 26, 1941, and six months thereafter, by presenting in person or forwarding such license together with return postage to the circuit court clerk.

SUSPENSION OF RENEWAL FEES BY PHARMACISTS
(KRS 313.115)

All persons who are required to pay renewal fees to the Kentucky Board of Pharmacy as licensed or licensed assistant pharmacists shall not be required to pay such fees during the time such persons are actively serving the Armed Forces of the United States.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS ALLOWED NOTARY POWER
(KRS 384.080 (1) (2))

In addition to the acknowledgment of instruments and the performance of official acts in respect to instruments in the manner and form and as otherwise authorized by law, instruments may be acknowledged, documents attested, oaths administered, dispositions and affidavits executed, and other such official acts performed, before or by any commissioned officer in active service of the Armed Forces of the United States with the rank of Second Lieutenant or higher in the Army or Marine Corps, or with the rank of ensign or higher in the Navy or Coast Guard, or with equivalent rank in any other component part of the Armed Forces of the United States by any person who either (a) Is a member of the Armed Forces of the United States, or (b) Is serving as a merchant seaman outside the limits of the United States, or (c) Is outside limits by permission, direction or assignment of any department or official of the United States Government, in connection with any activity pertaining to the prosecution of any war in which the United States is then engaged.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR NOMINATION OF CANDIDATES SERVING IN ARMED FORCES
(KRS 119.010)

The name of such person shall be printed on the official ballot of his party for an office for which he is eligible in any primary election when an application has been filed on his behalf by two reputable electors of the party at whose hands he seeks the nomination. Such application shall be accompanied by a statement signed by the proposed candidate authorizing the action of the electors.

The application and the candidate's statement shall be filed in good faith and with the proper officer at the proper time, as provided for other candidates in primary elections.

The form of such application shall be similar to that of the affidavits required of electors in behalf of other candidates.

No certificate of nomination shall be given to any such successful soldier, sailor, or marine candidate until he has caused to be filed with the clerk of the county court, in the county of his legal residence, a statement that during the campaign for nomination or nominations he did not, and while a candidate for the office will not, knowingly violate any election law or any law relating to corrupt and fraudulent practice in campaigns or elections in the State, and if elected, will qualify for this office.

SERVICE MEN MAY MAKE NON-WRITTEN WILLS
(KRS 394.050)

A soldier in actual service, or a mariner at sea, may dispose of his personal estate by an unwritten will made within ten days of his death, and in the presence of two competent witnesses present at the same time, and called upon by him to witness his intention, if the testamentary words or their substance is reduced to writing and subscribed by one of the witnesses within sixty days next after they were spoken.

PROOF OF WILL WHERE WITNESSES UNAVAILABLE
(KRS 394.235)

When it appears to the court that a will cannot be proven as otherwise provided by law because one or more or all of the subscribing witnesses to the will, at the time the will is offered for probate, are serving in or present with the Armed Forces of the United States or as merchant seamen, or are dead or mentally or physically incapable of testifying or otherwise unavailable, the court may admit the will to probate upon the testimony in person or by deposition of at least two credible disinterested witnesses that the signature to the will is in the handwriting of the person whose will it purports to be, or upon other sufficient proof of such handwriting. The foregoing provision shall not preclude the court, in its discretion, from requiring in addition, proof of such other pertinent facts and circumstances as the court may deem necessary to admit the will to probate.

AFFIDAVIT BY ATTORNEY AS TO ABSENCE OF NOTICE OF DEATH (KRS 384.020)

An affidavit, executed by the attorney-in-fact or agent, setting forth that he has not or had not, at the time of doing any act pursuant to the power of attorney, received actual knowledge or actual notice of the revocation or termination of the power of attorney, by death or otherwise, or notice of any facts indicating the same, shall, in the absence of fraud, be conclusive proof of the non-revocation or non-termination of the power at such time. If the exercise of the power requires execution and delivery of any instrument which is recordable under the laws of this state, such affidavit (when authenticated for record in the manner prescribed by law) shall likewise be recordable.

REPORT OF "MISSING" NOT NOTICE OF DEATH (KRS 384.030)

No report or listing, either official or otherwise, of "missing", or "missing in action," as such words are used in military parlance, shall constitute or be interpreted as constituting actual knowledge or actual notice of the death of such principal or notice of any facts indicating the same, or shall operate to revoke the agency.

APPOINTMENT OF CONSERVATOR FOR PROPERTY OF MEMBER OF ARMED FORCES OR MERCHANT SEAMAN (KRS 384.050)

Whenever a person (hereinafter referred to as an absentee) serving in or with the Armed Forces of the United States, or serving as a merchant seaman, has been reported or listed as missing, or missing in action, or interned in a neutral country, or beleaguered, beseiged, or captured by an enemy, and such person has an interest in any form of property in this state or is a legal resident of this state and has not provided an adequate power of attorney authorizing another to act in his behalf in regard to such property or interests, the county court of the county of such absentee's legal domicile or of the county where such property is situated, upon petition alleging the foregoing facts and showing the necessity for providing care of the property of such absentee, made by any person who would have an interest in the property of the absentee were such absentee deceased, or on the court's own motion, after notice to, or on receipt of proper waivers from, the heirs and next of kin of the absentee as provided by law for the administration of an estate, and upon good cause being shown, may after finding the facts to be as aforesaid, appoint a conservator to take charge of the absentee's estate, under the supervision and subject to the further orders of the court.

QUALIFICATIONS OF CONSERVATOR: BOND: AUTHORITY
(KRS 384.060)

The court shall have full discretionary authority to appoint any suitable person as such conservator and may require such conservator to post an adequate surety bond and to make such reports as the court may deem necessary. The conservator shall have the same powers and authority as the guardian of the property of an infant or the committee of an incompetent, and shall be considered as an officer or arm of the court.

TERMINATION OF CONSERVATORSHIP
(KRS 384.070)

At any time upon petition signed by the absentee, or on petition of an attorney-in-fact acting under an adequate power of attorney granted by the absentee, the court shall direct the termination of the conservatorship and the transfer of all property held thereunder to the absentee or to the designated attorney-in-fact. Likewise, if at any time subsequent to the appointment of a conservator it shall appear that the absentee has died and an executor or administrator has been appointed for his estate, the court shall direct the termination of the conservatorship and the transfer of all property of the deceased absentee held thereunder to such executor or administrator, or to the person or persons otherwise entitled thereto under existing law.

PERFORMANCE OF NOTARIAL ACTS BY COMMISSIONED OFFICERS
OF ARMED FORCES (KRS 384.080)

(1) In addition to the acknowldgment of instruments and the performance of official acts in respect to instruments in the manner and form and as otherwise authorized by law, instruments may be acknowledged, documents attested, oaths and affirmations administered, depositions and affidavits executed, and other such official acts performed, before or by any commissioned officer in active service of the Armed Forces of the United States with the rank of second lieutenant or higher in the Army or Marine Corps, or with the rank of ensign or higher in the Navy or Coast Guard, or with equivalent rank in any other component part of the Armed Forces of the United States, by any person who either

(a) Is a member of the Armed Forces of the United States, or
(b) Is serving as a merchant seaman outside the limits of the United States, or

(c) Is outside said limits by permission, assignment or direction of any department or official of the United States Government, in connection with any activity pertaining to the prosecution of any war in which the United States is then engaged.

(2) Such acknowledgment of instruments, attestation of documents, administration of oaths and affirmations, execution of depositions and affidavits, and performance of other notarial acts, heretofore or hereafter made or taken, are hereby declared legal, valid or binding, and instruments and documents so acknowledged, authenticated, or sworn to shall be admissible in evidence and eligible to record in this state under the same circumstances, and with the same force and effect as if such acknowledgment, attestation, oath, affirmation, deposition, affidavit, or other official act, had been made or taken within this state before or by a duly qualified officer or official and under his appropriate certificate and seal of office as otherwise provided by law.

(3) In the taking of acknowledgments and the performing of other notarial acts requiring certification, a certificate endorsed upon or attached to the instrument or document, which shows the date of the notarial act and which states, in substance, that the person appearing before the officer acknowledges the instrument as his act or made or signed the instrument or document under oath, shall be sufficient for all intents and purposes.

(4) When the official signature of any such commissioned officer of the rank specified in subsection (1) of this section appears upon such instrument, document or certificate, it shall be prima facie evidence that the person making such oath or acknowledgment is within the purview of this section.

RIGHT OF ABSENTEES TO VOTE IN TIME OF WAR,
IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS (KRS 126.010)

In time of war every voter of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, who expects in the course of his business or duties to be absent from the county in which is situated his voting precinct or ward on the day of holding any special, general, or primary election, but who is otherwise eligible to register and qualified to vote in any election for electors of President and Vice President of the United States, United States Senators, and Representatives in Congress shall be entitled to vote for such officers in accordance with the provisions of KRS 126.010 to 126.130. Provided that such voter shall have registered, pursuant to the registration laws of this state now in force.

APPLICATION FOR BALLOT; TRANSMITTAL TO LOCAL REGISTRATION OFFICIALS (KRS 126.020)

Any absent voter, as definied heretofore, expecting to be absent from the county of his residence on the day of such election, may make an application in writing, at any time prior to such election, on the form hereinafter prescribed or on the form prescribed by Congress, to the Secretary of State of Kentucky for an absent voter ballot to be voted in such election, and the Secretary of State shall, after making a record of the name and residence of such applicant, transmit such application to the proper registration official of the residence of such voter, with all necessary instrucations to said local registration official as to his duties hereunder.

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR BALLOT; AFFIDAVIT
(KRS 126.030)

Applications for such ballot shall be signed and sworn to by the "absent voter" before a civil officer authorized by law to administer an oath, provided that if such "absent voter" is in the military or naval service of the Commonwealth of Kentucky or the United States, or serving in or attached to any branch of said services, he may swear to said application before any commissioned military or naval officer of the Commonwealth of Kentucky or the United States, or any branch of the Armed Forces. Said application shall be substantially in the following form:

"Secretary of State of Kentucky,

1945 General Assembly Provides Legal Basis For Many Forward Welfare Steps

North Carolina no longer stands alone among the states in having a connotation of charity in the official designation of its state social welfare agency. The 1945 General Assembly changed the official designation to "State Board of Public Welfare", thus giving the state administrative set-up its third name in 77 years of existence.

Following the War Between the States the State Constitution called for setting up a "Board of Public Charities" which operated under that designation until its reorganization and the entering upon its period of growth and expansion in 1917. In that year it became the "State Board of Charities and Public Welfare", remaining so through the even greater expansion of the social security programs until the present change in the statutes.

A new power and duty was added to the State Board's responsibilities with the enactment of legislation authorizing it to inspect and license boarding homes, rest homes and convalescent homes for aged and physically and mentally infirm persons not related by blood or marriage to the applicant for license, if a charge is made for such care. These aged or infirm persons must be supported in whole or in part by public welfare funds or must receive service from the county welfare department. Commercial hotels, regular boarding houses furnishing rooms and meals to the general public, and institutions operated by any unit of government are not included in the act.

This is in line with modern social work practice in many other states of the nation and the act was patterned after similar legislation in the more progressive northern and eastern states.

County Board Appointees

The 1941 modifications in the method of naming members to county boards of public welfare would result this year in two experienced members going off the boards, thus preventing overlapping terms among the three members. Hence new legislation was introduced and passed to provide for overlapping terms beginning with the new appointments effective April 1. Method of appointment of the members was not changed, with the State Board continuing to name one member, the county commissioners naming another, who could be one of their own body, and these two selecting the third member. In event of disagreement on the third appointee, the resident Superior Court judge of the district still is empowered to make the appointment. The board chooses its own chairman.

PUBLIC ASSISTANCE CHANGES

The state's public assistance law was brought more in line with the Social Security Act through numerous changes deleting unnecessary requirements such as the verification of citizenship for the aged and determining what is a "safe and proper home" for children. With North Carolina's population almost one hundred percent native-born, the time spent by county welfare staffs in carrying through this verification on applications could well be spent in other work. So, too, with the determination of what is a safe and proper home—it being clearly evident that if the home in which children for whom application for aid is filed is not a proper home, the logical procedure is to remove the children from the home. Also deleted is the necessity of apprehending a deserting parent before establishing eligibility of children.

The maximum amount payable in grants to needy aged was raised from $30 to $40 which is the maximum in which the federal government participates. In the case of dependent children grants the law was amended to set the maximum amount paid for each child as not in excess of the amount which will be matched by national funds. The provision in the state law requiring a child to be in school between the ages of 16 and 18 was eliminated. Both these latter two changes still remain to be made in the federal law, however, but if such changes are made any time within the next two years payments can be made accordingly under the North Carolina law. While the national government is considering eliminating the school attendance requirement and also is considering raising the amount in which the federal government will participate, North Carolina is prepared in advance to operate under the new plan.

County funds may be shifted between the old age assistance and the aid to dependent children budgets with the approval of the State Board of Allotments and Appeal.

When recipients of needy aged fund checks die on or after the first day of the month for which the check was issued without having endorsed the check, the endorsement by the clerk of court of the county in which they lived will be sufficient to enable the amount of the check to be paid to the surviving spouse or to the undertaker for funeral expenses.

The revision relating to administrative expenses simplified procedures. No longer will the State Board of Allotments and Appeal attempt to estimate the amount required in each county for administering the needy aged and dependent children programs. Instead the board will give consideration to the cost of administering the whole public welfare program, of which these two categories are only a part, and notify the county of the estimated amount of federal and state funds available for administration. After deducting the amount to be paid by the federal government, the state may pay up to one-half the balance of the administrative budget with the remainder being paid from county funds, the commissioners being empowered to levy taxes to produce the necessary amount.

Increased Funds

The appropriations committee granted increased funds for aid to dependent children $55,000 yearly above the original allotment, or a total of $580,000 for each of the next two years. This will enable higher grants for this category which long has been far too low. An increase of $200,000 in funds for the needy aged was recommended by the advisory budget commission and granted by the General Assembly.

Boards of county commissioners were given authority to levy special taxes not in excess of five cents for care of indigents not eligible for other funds, thus in effect setting a maximum of ten cents for this purpose when other special authorizations are included. Many counties asked for, and received, special limit maximums of as high as, in some cases, 15 cents for poor relief.

Restrictions on residence requirements were removed to the extent that persons eligible for assistance will not have to be returned to the county of residence but may receive funds where living regardless of the length of time they have been there

CHANGES IN MENTAL HEALTH LAWS

After years of effort and study North Carolina laws dealing with mental institutions and with those suffering from mental disease have been modernized and humanized. For many years the American Psychiatric Association and the National Committee for Mental Hygiene, as well as the commission appointed by Governor Ehringhaus in 1936 to study mental health in North Carolina, recommended changes. It was pointed out that the former laws were antiquated and unfair to the citizens affected and even to the state itself.

The modernizations embodied in the 1945 legislation were the result of continuous and intensive study covering a considerable period of time. Current psychiatric terminology has been substituted for the antiquated, outmoded terms placed in the statutes 75 years ago. The terms "mental disorder," "mental disease," and "mental illness" are now used for the older terms of "lunatic" and "insane," while the term "mental defective" has been substituted for "idiot." North Carolina was one of the few remaining states using these outmoded designations of mental illness or defect.

Formerly it was necessary to return to the county of residence any inebriate living in a state hospital before committing him again because of mental disorder. The new law makes it possible to retain the inebriate at the hospital without sending him back to the county of residence, thus insuring a maximum of safety both to the individual and to the community.

While under the old laws there were many loopholes, now better protection is given all individuals who might have anything to do with care and management of a patient suffering from mental disease. When a patient escapes from either a state or a private mental hospital, notification is send immediately to the sheriff and clerk of court of the home county as well as to the committing physicians. When an unusually dangerous person is admitted it is not possible now to discharge him without the approval of the commissioner of mental health and of the Hospitals Board of Control.

Simplified Commitment Procedure

The former cumbersome procedure of committing patients to state institutions has now been shelved for a more progressive system. It is now possible for two qualified physicians to examine the patient and recommend that he be committed, whereupon the clerk of court, without having to examine the patient himself, orders that the patient be committed for a 30-day period of observation. At the end of that time the patient is either finally committed, is discharged, or may be kept for a second period of 30 days for further observation. Under the 30-day observation provision many individuals with mental disorder will recover within that time so that names would not appear in court records as having been permanently committed. Sponsors of this legislation believe the new law will encourage many patients to seek treatment in mental institutions.

For years North Carolina has been criticized for keeping patients with mental disorders in its county jails. A recent survey by the State Board of Public Welfare showed 80 to 100 mentally ill persons in county jails each month. The revised law makes it possible for one physician or the clerk of the court to commit to a state, county, or private hospital for a period of 10 days a case of violent or sudden mental disorder and thus eliminates the necessity for confining them in the county jail because of lack of adequate facilities for confining them otherwise.

Voluntary commitment by the patient himself is a common practice in other states but has not been extensive in North Carolina because the former laws were unfair to the patient. Formerly a person voluntarily committing himself could be kept in the hospital for life in the discretion of the superintendent and the board of directors. Now he may leave the institution 10 days after notifying the superintendent of his intention to do so and, to be permanently committed, the procedure used for involuntary commitment must be followed including the testimony of two examining physicians.

Interstate Transfer Simplified

Mentally ill residents of other states formerly were denied the opportunity of treatment in North Carolina state hospitals and had to remain confined in county jails until they could be transferred to their own states. Now they may be received by the North Carolina institutions until such time as the transfer can be made. Similarly the old procedure of transferring North Carolina citizens from other states to institutions here was difficult. These mentally ill patients had to be brought back to their home counties—no matter how distant from the proper North Carolina hospital—and languish in jail until a place could be found for them in the institution. Now they may be returned from a mental institution in another state directly to one of the North Carolina institutions.

Where the mental health situation in North Carolina formerly was confused because many agencies participated without central direction, the newly established Mental Health Council will be charged with considering ways and means to promote mental health and to study needs for new legislation in that field.

Other modernizations in the new law provide for an escort for female patients being transferred to mental institutions and also make it possible for a relative of a prospective patient to withdraw the petition for commitment if he decides the patient should not be confined.

THE MEDICAL CARE PROGRAM

The 1945 Assembly took the initial step in providing a state-wide program of medical care and facilities for the indigent recommended by a commission appointed by Governor Broughton in 1943. While the first statutes setting up this program were not as inclusive as the original recommendations of the commission, it represents the beginning of state-supported health facilities for its citizens.

Under this law, with an initial appropriation for the first year of the biennium of $500,000, the state will provide one dollar of the cost of daily care of indigent patients in hospitals approved by the commission. The Duke Foundation, with a similar payment, leaves the balance of the hospitalization cost to the individual or to the county. This in all probability will be one dollar a day since it is generally considered that care of indigent patients amounts to about $3.00 daily. However, the $500,000 allocation is contingent upon the state first meeting all its other obligations.

The sum of $50,000 is set up to aid medical students accepted by standard four-year medical schools to complete their education provided they agree to practice at least four years in rural areas after graduation. Rural areas are defined as being communities having less than 2,500 population by the last census or the areas surrounding such communities. Interest on these student loans cannot exceed four percent.

Considerable early discussion centered around a proposed 400-bed hospital to be operated in conjunction with the medical school at the University of North Carolina which, under this law, will be expanded into a standard four-year school. As finally ratified, the act did not specify any particular location for the hospital but placed upon the commission the responsibility of surveying the state to determine the most useful location. Such a structure, of course, cannot be built until after the war.

Medical training for Negroes is authorized under the loan provisions with the further injunction to the board to make careful investigation of methods for providing necessary training for them. The development of group hospital insurance plans is also to be encouraged.

CHILD WELFARE

In the broad field of child welfare a number of measures were enacted to provide increased protection for the children of the state who require special care and attention. Birth certificates will automatically be sent the mother of each child after being recorded in the Bureau of Vital Statistics with the exception of illegitimate children. In adoption cases an altered birth certificate bearing the new name of the child will be sent to the county of the adoptive parents' residence. Two other changes in the adoption law clarify certain aspects of consent to the adoption and in the inheritance rights of the adopted child. Further economic protection for children born out of wedlock was provided through strengthening the law to require the father's support until the child reaches age 14.

Juvenile courts may now be established in any community having a population of 10,000 by the last federal census report instead of restricting such special courts to those communities having that population in 1920. These courts are in addition to the juvenile court as represented in each county by the clerk of Superior court. Until 1945 there were 12 special courts of this nature or special courts combined with a county court with a judge other than the clerk of Superior court.

The law relating to the separation of a mother from an infant under six years of age was changed to permit the county welfare superintendent or a representative of a licensed child-placing agency to consent to the separation in the case of illegitimate children. No consent is necessary for either legitimate or illegitimate children if the mother places her child with near relatives or in a boarding home or institution inspected or licensed by the State Board of Public Welfare.

The long-sought high school attendance age culminated in legislation raising the maximum age to 15 years for the year beginning July 1, 1945, and to 16 years thereafter. During the war and for six months afterwards the provisions of the act will not apply to children living on farms or engaged in commercial fishing or fisheries. For the same period the school superintendent or principal may excuse any male child between 14 and 16 years from attending school for the purpose of engaging in any gainful occupation permitted by the state's labor laws.

RECREATION

North Carolina this year became the first state in the country to set up a State Recreation Commission and consequently has already received considerable notice for this forward step.

The Commissioner of Public Welfare is an ex officio member of the new commission which will represent all sections of the state and the various interested groups in this field.

The commission will study and appraise recreational needs of the state, cooperate in promoting local recreational systems, aid in recruiting workers for the program, promote recreational standards, and cooperate with other agencies.

The legislation provides for a recreation advisory committee of 30 members who will serve for two-year terms and who will meet once a year with the state commission to make recommendations for advancement of the program and discuss its needs. Members of the advisory committee will represent, in so far as feasible, all groups and phases of beneficial recreation in the state.

Local Enabling Act

Communities were empowered under older legislation to set up their own recreational systems but this law was rewritten and modernized. Recreation is defined as those activities which are diversionary in character and which aid in promoting entertainment, pleasure, relaxation, instruction, and other physical, mental and cultural developments and experiences of a leisuretime nature. Units empowered to set up these systems are defined as any county, city or town, and any two or more units may cooperate in establishing joint programs and facilities. Systems set up under previous private acts are not affected by the new law.

The statute empowers the unit to accept gifts and donations, provide facilities, and special elections may be called on the question of providing for these facilities by a special tax. The program may be operated as any other work of the unit concerned, or a special recreation commission may be appointed. If such a commission is named to direct the program, one of its members must be affiliated with the welfare department of the locality concerned.

OTHER LEGISLATION

In an attempt to prevent hasty marriages a bill was introduced to require a waiting period of five days for out-of-state couples, but would not apply where one of the contracting parties was a North Carolina resident. The assembly looked with disfavor on this as a state-wide measure and restricted it to the counties of the First Senatorial District.

Divorce of an insane spouse is now permitted after a ten-year period during which the mentally ill person has been confined in a state hospital. Where the petitioning spouse has sufficient income, provision must be made for the care of the mentally ill spouse for the remainder of his or her life.

Where the insane spouse has not sufficient income to provide for care, the petitioner for divorce must make provision for the care of the husband or wife confined in the institution for the remainder of his or her life. Previously no divorce could be granted on these grounds under any circumstances.

Institutions for the care of spastic children and of feeble-minded Negro children were set up, thus adding these two classes to those for whom North Carolina provides facilities. Improvements and additions to the plant at Caswell Training School, however,

LEGISLATIVE ENACTMENTS

In this issue Public Welfare News presents the text of most of the bills affecting the public welfare program in North Carolina. The bills are arranged numerically according to the house in which they were introduced. Here is a list of those included in this issue:

will receive top priority rating in the state's program of building expansion after the war because of a resolution calling for first place for this institution.

Enabling acts to permit joint city-county programs of hospitalization of indigents were enacted. Forsyth county was permitted to receive senile dementia patients in its hospital. A commission was appointed to inspect the state's penal institutions and another named to study the structure of the domestic relations laws.

The name of the Farm Colony for Women at Kinston was changed to "Dobb's Farms".

A cancer control program will be administered by the State Board of Health for indigent and other low income groups suffering with this disease. The State Board of Public Welfare will work with the health agency in developing procedures for determining the needs of these groups for financial aid under the provisions of this act.

Several counties enacted special legislation providing payment in varying amounts for the services of welfare board members while attending meetings. In all probability permissive legislation of this type will be enacted as a state-wide measure in 1947.

Health controls were sought in better statutes preventing spread of tuberculosis and dealing with applicants for marriage license who have had venereal disease. License may be issued in the latter instance when the parties have completed treatment, agree to take corrective measures, the disease is in a noncommunicable stage, or when the applicant is pregnant and marriage is necessary to legitimate the offspring.

S. B. 36—An Act to Authorize the North Carolina State Commission for the Blind to Cooperate With the Federal Government Under the Provisions of the Act of Congress Known as the Barden Rehabilitation Act and to Supplement Chapter 111 of the General Statutes of North Carolina With Regard to Aid to the Blind, and to Make Provision for the Appointment of a Guardian for Incompetent Blind Persons.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. The North Carolina State Commission for the Blind is hereby authorized and empowered to make the necessary rules and regulations to cooperate with the Federal Government in the furtherance of the provisions of the Act of Congress known as the Barden-Rehabilitation Act (Volume fifty-seven, United States Statutes at Large, Chapter one hundred and ninety) providing for the rehabilitation of the blind.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of assisting blind persons to become self-supporting the North Carolina State Commission for the Blind is hereby authorized to carry on activities to promote the rehabilitation and employment of the blind, including the operation of various business enterprises suitable for the blind to be employed in or to operate. The Executive Budget Act shall apply to the operation of such enterprises as to all appropriations made by the state to aid in organization and the establishment of such businesses. Purchases and sales of merchandise or equipment, the payment of rents and wages to blind persons operating such businesses, and other expenses thereof, from funds derived from local subscriptions and from the day by day operations shall not be subject to the provisions of law regulating purchases and contracts, or to the deposit and disbursement thereof applicable to state funds but shall be supervised by the State Commission for the Blind. All of the business operations under this law, however, shall be subject to regular audits by the State Auditor.

SEC. 3. Whenever, upon examination at a clinic, hospital or other institution, or elsewhere by a physician, optometrist or other person examining eyes any person is found to have no vision or vision with glasses which is so defective as to prevent the performance of ordinary activities for which eyesight is essential, the physician, the superintendent of such institution or other person who conducted or was in charge of the examination shall within thirty days report the results of the examination to the North Carolina State Commission for the Blind.

SEC. 4. If any indigent blind person, who is receiving any moneys available to the needy blind, is unable to manage his own affairs, and this fact is brought to the attention of the clerk of the Superior Court of the county where said indigent blind person resides by petition of a relative of said blind person, or other interested person, or by the chairman of the county commissioners or by the State Commission for the Blind, it shall be the duty of the clerk to set a day for hearing the facts in the matter and to notify all interested persons. The indigent blind person shall be present at the hearing in person, or by representation, and the clerk of the Superior Court shall inquire into his condition. The hearing and inquiry shall be conducted in manner provided by the general guardianship laws of North Carolina. If, after the hearing, the clerk finds that such indigent blind person is unable to manage his own affairs, it shall be the duty of the clerk to appoint some discreet and solvent person to act as guardian for said indigent blind person to whom said moneys may be paid. No bond shall be required of, or fee paid to, the guardian where the amount of money received does not exceed fifty dollars ($50.00) per month. Such person so designated shall use and faithfully apply said moneys for the sole benefit and maintenance of such indigent blind person. The person so designated shall give a receipt to the officer disbursing said moneys and the clerk in his discretion, may require such person to render a periodic account of the expenditure of such moneys.

SEC. 5. All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified February 7, 1945.

S. B. 44—An Act to Change the Name of the State Board of Charities and Public Welfare, and to Change the Title of Chapter 108 of the General Statutes of North Carolina.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Section 108-1 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the words, "The State Board of Charities and Public Welfare" in lines two and three and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "The State Board of Public Welfare."

SEC. 2. Wherever in the General Statutes of North Carolina, or in any session law, public, public-local, private or special act of the General Assembly, or in any rule or regulation, a duty or obligation is imposed upon the State Board of Charities and Public Welfare, or any authority, privilege or power is granted to the State Board of Charities and Public Welfare, the same shall be construed as referring to the "State Board of Public Welfare."

SEC. 3. Wherever in the General Statutes of North Carolina, or in any session law, public, public-local, private or special act of the General Assembly, or in any rule or regulation, a duty or obligation is imposed upon a County Welfare Board or upon a County Board of Charities and Public Welfare, or any authority, privilege or power is granted thereto, the same shall be construed as referring to the "County Board of Public Welfare" which shall henceforth be the designation of any of said County Welfare Boards or County Boards of Charities and Public Welfare.

SEC. 4. The title to Chapter one hundred and eight of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby changed from "Board of Charities" to "Board of Public Welfare."

SEC. 5. All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified 2-3-45.

S. B. 87—An Act to Amend Chapter 153 of the General Statutes Relative to County Poor Relief So As to Eliminate Conflicts With the Provisions of the Old Age Assistance and Aid to Dependent Children Act and to Enable County Commissioners to Levy Taxes for Poor Relief.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Amend Section 153-152 by adding at the end of the first paragraph the following:

The board of county commissioners of each county is hereby authorized to levy, impose and collect special taxes upon all taxable property, not to exceed five cents on the one hundred dollars valuation, required for the special and necessary purposes set forth above in addition to any taxes authorized by any other special or general act and in addition to the constitutional limit of taxes levied for general county purposes, it being the purpose of the General Assembly hereby to give its approval for the levy of such special taxes for such necessary purposes.

SEC. 2. Amend Section 153-160 by adding at the end of said Section the following:

Nothing contained herein shall be construed to prevent any county from rendering assistance to needy persons living within the county even though such persons may not have lived in the county for the length of time required to establish legal settlement and if such needy persons are eligible for old age assistance, aid to dependent children or any type of general assistance in which State and Federal funds are involved, assistance may be granted, provided funds are available.

SEC. 3. All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 14, 1945.

S. B. 91—An Act to Amend Certain Sections of Chapter 108 of the General Statutes Relative to Old Age Assistance and Aid to Dependent Children So As to Provide for Full Conformity With the Provisions of the Social Security Act.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Chapter one hundred and eight of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended as follows:

(1) Amend the last paragraph of Section 108-21 by striking out in line ten the words and figures "thirty dollars ($30.00)" and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "forty dollars ($40.00)"; by striking out in line eleven the words and figures "three hundred sixty dollars ($360.00)" and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "four hundred eighty dollars ($480.00)"; by striking out in lines twelve and thirteen the words and figures "fifteen dollars ($15.00)" and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "twenty dollars ($20.00)"; and by striking out in lines thirteen and fourteen the words and figures "one hundred eighty dollars ($180.00)" and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "two hundred forty dollars ($240.00)".

(2) Amend Section 108-25 by changing the period at the end of the last sentence to a colon and adding the following proviso:

Provided, that if at any time during any fiscal year it appears to be necessary and feasible, the county may transfer with the approval of the State Board of Allotments and Appeal a portion of the amount raised by the county for old age assistance to the county aid to dependent children fund.

(3) Amend the third paragraph of Section 108-30 by striking out in lines seven and eight the words and figures "thirty dollars ($30.00)" and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "forty dollars ($40.00)"; by striking out in lines eight and nine the words and figures "three hundred sixty dollars ($360.00)" and substituting therefor the words and figures "four hundred eighty dollars ($480.00)"; by striking out in line eleven the words and figures "fifteen dollars ($15.00)" and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "twenty dollars ($20.00)"; and by striking out in line twelve the words and figures "one hundred eighty dollars ($180.00)" and substituting in lieu thereof the words and figures "two hundred forty dollars ($240.00)".

(4) Amend Section 108-32 by adding a new paragraph at the end thereof to read as follows:

In the event of the death of an old age assistance recipient during or after the first day of the month for which a grant was previously authorized by the county welfare board, any old age assistance check or checks payable to such recipient, not endorsed prior to such recipient's death, shall be endorsed by the Clerk of the Superior Court of the county on which the check was drawn and the proceeds thereof paid to the spouse of the deceased recipient. If there is no living spouse, the proceeds of such check or checks shall be applied to the funeral expenses of such deceased recipient.

(5) Amend Section 108-38 as follows:

(a) Strike out the words "of this article" in line eleven of the first paragraph and substitute therefor the words "of the public welfare program."

(b) Strike out the first two sentences of the second paragraph and substitute therefor the following: After being so determined, an amount not to exceed one-half of such costs shall be allocated and paid to the respective counties by the State Board of Allotments and Appeal from the appropriation made by the state for aid to county welfare administration. The balance of said county administrative expenses shall be paid by the respective counties.

(6) Amend Section 108-48 by adding at the end thereof the following:

Provided further, that within the limitations of the state appropriation the maximum amount per child may be increased not in excess of the amount which may hereafter be matched by the Federal Government.

(7) Amend Section 108-49 as follows:

(a) Strike out the words "under sixteen years of age or under eighteen years of age if regularly attending school" in lines three and four and substitute in lieu thereof the words "under eighteen years of age."

(b) Change the colon to a period after the word "support" in line twenty-five and strike out the remainder of the section.

(8) Amend Section 108-54 by changing the period at the end of the last sentence to a colon and adding the following proviso:

Provided, that if at any time during any fiscal year it appears to be necessary and feasible, the county may transfer with the approval of the State Board of Allotments and Appeal a portion of the amount raised by the county for aid to dependent children to the county old age assistance fund.

(9) Amend the third paragraph of Section 108-59 by changing the period in line seventeen following the word "forth" to a colon and adding the following proviso:

Provided further, that within the limitations of the state appropriation the maximum amount per child may be increased not in excess of the amount which may hereafter be matched by the Federal Government.

(10) Amend Section 108-66 by adding at the end thereof the following proviso:

Provided, that in the event any temporary vacancy should exist in the office of county welfare superintendent or in the office of chairman of the county welfare board, the signature of either remaining officer together with that of the county auditor shall be sufficient for the disbursement of such funds.

(11) Amend Section 108-67 as follows:

(a) Strike out in line nine of the first paragraph the words "of this article" and substitute therefor the words "of the public welfare program."

(b) Strike out the first two sentences of the second paragraph and substitute therefor the following:

After being so determined, an amount not to exceed one-half of such costs shall be allocated and paid to the respective counties by the State Board of Allotments and Appeal from the appropriations made by the state for aid to county administration. The balance of said county administrative expenses shall be paid by the respective counties.

SEC. 2. Subsection (b) of Section 108-21 and Section 108-50 are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 15, 1945.

S. B. 130—An Act to Amend Chapter 50 of the General Statutes Relating to Divorce and Alimony.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That Chapter fifty, entitled "Divorce and Alimony," of the General Statutes of North Carolina be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to Section 50-5 a new subsection to read as follows:

(6) In all cases where a husband and wife have lived separate and apart for ten consecutive years, without cohabitation, by reason of the incurable insanity of one of them, the Superior Court shall grant a decree of absolute divorce upon the petition of the sane spouse: Provided, the proof shows that the insane spouse has been confined in an institution for the care and treatment of the insane for ten consecutive years; and provided that proof of incurable insanity be supported by the testimony of two reputable physicians, one of whom shall be a staff member or the superintendent of the institution wherein the insane spouse is confined, and one regularly practicing physician in the community wherein such husband and wife reside, and a psychologist who has no connection with the institution in which said insane spouse is confined.

In all decrees granted under this subsection in actions in which husband is plaintiff, the court shall require him to provide for the care and maintenance of the insane defendant as long as she may live, compatible with his financial standing and ability, and the trial court will retain jurisdiction of the parties and the cause, from term to term, for the purpose of making such orders as equity may require to enforce the provisions of the decree requiring plaintiff to furnish the necessary funds for such care and maintenance. In the event of the feme defendant's continued confinement in an institution for the insane, it shall be deemed sufficient support and maintenance if the plaintiff continue to pay and discharge the monthly payments required of him by the institution, such payments to be in amounts equal to those required of patients similarly situated.

In all such actions wherein the wife is plaintiff and the insane defendant has insufficient income and property to provide for his care and maintenance, then in the discretion of the court, the court may require her to provide for the care and maintenance of the insane defendant as long as he may live, compatible with her financial standing and ability, and the trial court will retain jurisdiction of the parties and the cause, from term to term, for the purpose of making such orders as equity may require to enforce the provisions of the decree requiring plaintiff to furnish the necessary funds for such care and maintenance.

Service of process shall be had upon the regular guardian for said defendant spouse, if any, and if no regular guardian upon a duly appointed guardian ad litem and also upon the superintendent or physician in charge of the institution wherein the insane spouse is confined. Such guardian or guardian ad litem shall make an investigation of the circumstances and notify the next of kin of the insane spouse of the institution of the action and wherever practical confer with said next of kin before filing appropriate pleadings in behalf of the defendant.

In all actions brought under this subsection, if the jury finds as a fact the plaintiff has been guilty of conduct as has conduced to the unsoundness of mind of the insane defendant, the relief prayed for shall be denied.

SEC. 2. That if any section, clause or provision of this Act be declared unconstitutional or invalid by any court of competent jurisdiction, such decision shall not affect or invalidate the remainder of this Act.

SEC. 3. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified 3-12-45.

S. B. 140—An Act to Create a State Recreation Commission.

Whereas, the contribution of recreation to the health, education, economy and general welfare of the people has become universally recognized and accepted; and

Whereas, the lack of recreational opportunities for persons in the armed services, as well as civilians, became apparent shortly after the United States entered the war; and

Whereas, under authority of Public Laws one thousand nine hundred and forty-three, Chapter seven hundred and six, conferring upon the Governor certain emergency war powers, a recreation committee was established in June, one thousand nine hundred and forty-three, to meet this pressing need in North Carolina; and

Whereas, experience gained by this emergency committee has shown the immediate need for a state recreation commission: Now, therefore,

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Recreation Commission.—There is hereby created an agency to be known as the North Carolina Recreation Commission.

SEC. 2. Definitions.—(1) RECREATION, for the purposes of this Act, is defined to mean those activities which are diversionary in character and which aid in promoting entertainment, pleasure, relaxation, instruction, and other physical, mental, and cultural developments and experiences of a leisure-time nature.

(2) COMMISSION means the North Carolina Recreation Commission.

(3) COMMITTEE means the Advisory Recreation Committee.

SEC. 3. Membership of Recreation Commission; term.—(1) The Recreation Commission shall consist of seven members, appointed by the Governor, and the Governor, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Commissioner of Public Welfare and Director of the Department of Conservation and Development as members ex officio.

(2) In making appointments to the commission, the Governor shall choose persons, in so far as possible, who understand the recreational interests of rural areas, municipalities, private membership groups and commercial enterprises. The commission shall elect, with the approval of the Governor, one member to act as chairman. At least one member of the commission shall be a woman, and at least one member shall be a Negro. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum, but only when at least four of the appointed members are present.

(3) For the initial term of the appointed members of the commission, one shall be appointed for a term of one year, one for a term of two years, one for a term of three years, one for a term of four years, one for a term of five years, and two for a term of six years; and thereafter, the successor of each member shall be appointed for a term of four years and until his successor is appointed and qualified.

(4) Any appointed member of the commission may be removed by the Governor.

(5) Vacancies in the commission shall be filled by the Governor for the unexpired term.

(6) The commission shall meet quarterly in January, April, July, and October, on a date to be fixed by the chairman. The commission may be convoked at such other times as the Governor or chairman may deem necessary.

(7) Members of the commission shall receive reasonable travel and maintenance expenses while attending meetings, but they shall not be reimbursed for travel and maintenance expenses for longer than four days for any one meeting.

SEC. 4. Duties of the Commission.—It shall be the duty of the commission:

(1) To study and appraise recreational needs of the State and to assemble and disseminate information relative to recreation.

(2) To cooperate in the promotion and organization of local recreational systems for counties, municipalities, townships, and other political subdivisions of the State, and to aid them in designing and laying out recreational areas and facilities, and to advise them in the planning and financing of recreational programs.

(3) To aid in recruiting, training, and placing recreation workers, and promote recreation institutes and conferences.

(4) To establish and promote recreational standards.

(5) To cooperate with State and Federal Agencies, the Recreation Advisory Committee, private membership groups, and with commercial recreational interests, in the promotion of recreational opportunities.

(6) To submit a biennial report of its activities to the Governor.

SEC. 5. Powers of Commission.—The commission is hereby authorized:

(1) To make rules and regulations for the proper administration of its duties.

(2) To accept any grant of funds made by the United States, or any agency thereof, for the purpose of carrying out any of its functions.

(3) To accept gifts, bequests, devises and endowments. The funds, if given as an endowment, shall be invested in such securities as designated by the donor, or, if there is no designation, in those in which the State Sinking Fund may be invested. All such gifts, bequests, devises and all proceeds from such invested endowments, shall be used for carrying out the purposes for which they are made.

(4) To administer all funds available to the commission.

(5) To act jointly, when advisable, with any other State agency, institution, department, board or commission in order to carry out the recreation commission's objectives and responsibilities. No activity of the commission, however, shall be allowed to interfere with the work of any other State agency.

(6) To employ, with the approval of the Governor, an executive director, and upon the recommendation of the executive director, such other persons as may be needed to carry out the provisions of this Act. The executive director shall act as secretary to the commission.

SEC. 6. Advisory Committee.—The Governor shall name a Recreation Advisory Committee consisting of thirty members who shall serve for a term of two years. The Governor shall name one member to act as a chairman of the committee. Vacancies occurring on the committee shall be filled by the Governor for the unexpired term.

Members of the committee shall represent, in so far as feasible, all groups and phases of beneficial recreation in the State.

The committee shall meet once each year with the Recreation Commission at a time and place to be fixed by the Governor. Members of the committee shall serve without compensation.

The committee shall act in an advisory capacity to the Recreation Commission, discuss recreational needs of the State, exchange ideas, and make to the commission recommendations for the advancement of recreational opportunities.

SEC. 7 There is hereby appropriated for the purposes of this bill the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars ($7,500.00) for each year of the biennium one thousand nine hundred and forty-five—forty-seven out of the General Fund of the State.

SEC. 8. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof, is held invalid, such invalidity shall not affect other provisions or applications of this Act, and to this end the provisions of this Act are declared to be severable.

SEC. 9. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 19, 1945.

S. B. 148—An Act Providing for the Establishment of An Institution for the Care of Feeble Minded Negro Children in North Carolina

Whereas, pursuant to a joint resolution of the General Assembly of one thousand nine hundred and forty-three, the Governor appointed a commission composed of Honorable Thomas O'Berry, Chairman, Honorable K. A. Pittman, Honorable W. Frank Taylor, Honorable Robert P. Burns, and Honorable Charles F. Honeycutt, to inquire into the conditions, care, treatment, and training of the Negro feeble-minded in the Goldsboro State Hospital for the Insane, and other similar institutions of the State, with the view of recommending a program for the care and training of the feeble minded Negro children, to the end that they might be placed under the supervision of people skilled in giving the right kind of care and treatment to such children, and investigate the advisability and possibility of securing additional facilities for institutional care and treatment of such children; and

Whereas, the said committee, after having fully complied with the intent of said resolution, has made its report to the Governor, revealing that there are some one thousand feeble minded Negro children in the State in need of hospital care or training, and recommending that a suitable hospital for the treatment of such children be built near the site and in conjunction with the State Hospital for Negroes at Goldsboro, sufficient to take care of at least six hundred patients, reference to which report is hereby made for more detailed recommendations; and

Whereas, it is the desire of the General Assembly of North Carolina that the recommendations of said committee be substantially complied with as early as feasible: Now, therefore,

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That an institution, to be known and designated as, "The Negro Training School for Feeble Minded Children," is hereby created and such institution is authorized and empowered to accept and use donations and appropriations and do all other things necessary and requisite to be done in furtherance of the purpose of its organization and existence as herein set forth.

SEC. 2. The said institution shall be under the control of the North Carolina Hospitals Board of Control, and whenever the words, "Board," "Directors" or Board of Directors" are used in this Act with reference to the governing board of said institution, the same shall mean the North Carolina Hospitals Board of Control, and said board shall exercise the same powers and perform the same duties with respect to the Negro Training School for Feeble Minded Children, as it exercises and performs with respect to the other institutions under its control, except as may in this Act be otherwise provided.

SEC. 3. The board of directors, with the approval of the Governor and the Council of State, is authorized to secure by gift or purchase suitable real estate within the State at such place as the board may deem best for the purpose, and to erect or improve buildings thereon, for carrying out the purposes of the institution; but no real estate shall be purchased or any commitments made for the erection or permanent improvements of any buildings involving the use of State funds unless and until an appropriation for permanent improvements of the institution is expressly authorized by the General Assembly; but this prohibition shall not prevent the directors from purchasing or improving real estate from funds that may be donated for the purpose. However, the board is authorized and directed to have prepared the necessary plans and specifications for such buildings as may be deemed necessary to establish said school, incurring the necessary expense of employing engineers and architects which amount is hereby authorized to be paid out of the Contingency and Emergency Fund of the State.

SEC. 4. That in order to provide for the operation of the said institution prior to the time that permanent quarters can be established, the board of directors, with the approval of the Governor and Council of State, is authorized and empowered to enter into an agreement with any other State institution or agency for the temporary use of any State owned property which such other State institution or agency may be able and willing to divert for the time being from its original purpose; and any other State institution or agency, which may be in possession of real estate suitable for the purpose of the Negro Training School for Feeble Minded Children upon such terms as may be mutually agreed upon.

SEC. 5. The board of directors shall have the general superintendence, management, and control of the institution; of the grounds and buildings, officers, and employees thereof; of the inmates therein and all matters relating to the government, discipline, contracts, and fiscal concerns thereof; and may make such rules and regulations as may seem to them necessary for carrying out the purposes of this institution. And the board shall have the right to keep, restrain, and control the inmates of the institution until such time as the board may deem proper for their discharge under such proper and humane rules and regulations as the board may adopt. The board shall endeavor as far as possible to classify the inmates and keep the different classes in separate wards or divisions, so as to produce the best results in their rehabilitation.

SEC. 6. The board of directors shall appoint a superintendent of the institution, who shall be a person of professional training and experience in the care and treatment of feeble minded persons, and may fix the compensation of the superintendent, subject to the approval of the Budget Bureau and may discharge the superintendent at any time for cause.

SEC. 7. The purpose and aim of the Negro Training School for Feeble Minded Children is to segregate, care for, train, and educate, as their mentality will permit, the mental defectives among the Negro children of the State; to disseminate knowledge concerning the extent, nature, and menace of mental deficiency and initiate methods for its control, reduction, and ultimate eradication and to that end, subject to such rules and regulations as the board of directors may adopt, there shall be received into said school feeble minded and mentally defective children of the Negro race under the age of twenty-one years when, in the judgment of the board of directors, it is deemed advisable. Application for the admission of a child must be made by the father if the mother and father are living together, and if not, by the one having custody, or by a duly appointed guardian or by the superintendent of any county home or by person having management of any orphanage, association, society, children's home, or other institution for the care of children to which the custody of such child has been committed, in which event the consent of the parents shall not be required. The applications for admission must be approved by the superintendent of public welfare and the judge of juvenile court of the county wherein the applicant resides.

SEC. 8. The board of directors is hereby authorized and empowered to promulgate rules, regulations, and conditions of admission of pupils to the school and in cases in which the parents or guardian of a child are financially able, shall require such parent or guardian to transport the child to the school and make such contribution toward maintenance as may to the board of directors seem proper and just.

SEC. 9. Any child entered into the school may be discharged therefrom or returned to his or her parents or guardian when, in the judgment of the directors, it will not be beneficial to such pupil or to the best interest of the school to be retained longer therein.

SEC. 10. For the protection of the pupils residing in the school, it shall be unlawful:

(a) For any person to advise, or solicit, or to offer to advise or solicit, any inmate of said school to escape therefrom;

(b) For any person to transport, or to offer to transport, in automobile or other conveyance any inmate of said school to or from any place: Provided, this shall not apply to the superintendent and teachers of said school, or to employees or any other person acting under the superintendent and teachers thereof;

(c) For any person to engage in, or to offer to engage in, prostitution with any inmate of said school;

(d) For any person to receive, or to offer to receive, any inmate of said school into any place, structure, building or conveyance for the purpose of prostitution, or to solicit any inmate of said school to engage in prostitution;

(e) For any person to conceal an escaped inmate of said school, or to furnish clothing to an escaped inmate thereof to enable him or her to conceal his or her identity.

The term "inmate" as used in this section shall be construed to include any and all boys and girls committed to or received into, said Negro Training School for Feeble Minded Children under the provisions of the law made and provided for the receiving and committing of persons to said school; and the term "prostitution" shall be construed to include the offering or receiving of the body for sexual intercourse.

Any person who shall knowingly and wilfully violate subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined or imprisoned, or both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court; that any person who shall knowingly and wilfully violate sub-sections (c), (d) and (e) of this section shall be guilty of a felony, and shall be fined or imprisoned, or both fined and imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 11 That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

S. B. 170—An Act to Rewrite Articles One and Two of Chapter 122 of the General Statutes of North Carolina Relating to the Management of the State Hospital at Raleigh, the State Hospital at Morganton, the State Hospital at Goldsboro, and the Caswell Training School at Kinston.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That Section 122-7 of the General Statutes of North Carolina be and the same is hereby amended by rewriting said section as follows:

Sec. 122-7. Management of certain institutions by unified Board of Directors; Appointment; quorum; term of office.—The following institutions of this State shall be under the management of one board of directors composed of fifteen members, all of whom shall be appointed by the Governor of North Carolina: the State Hospital at Raleigh, the State Hospital at Morganton, the State Hospital at Goldsboro, and the Caswell Training School at Kinston. In order that all sections of the State shall have representation on said board, the Governor shall name one member from each Congressional District of the State and three members at large on said board. The board of directors to be named from Congressional Districts shall be divided into four classes of three directors each, the first class to serve for a period of one year, the second class to serve for a period of two years, the third class to serve for a period of three years, the fourth class to serve for a period of four years, and the three directors at large to serve for a period of four years, and at the expiration of their respective terms of office all appointments shall be for a term of four years, except such as are made to fill unexpired terms. Eight directors shall constitute a quorum.

Members of the board shall serve for terms as prescribed above, and until their successors are appointed and qualified. The Governor shall have the power to remove any member of the board whenever in his opinion it is to the best interest of the State to remove such person, and the Governor shall not be required to give any reason for such removal.

SEC. 2. That Section 122-11.2 of the General Statutes of North Carolina be and the same is hereby amended by striking out in line eleven of said section the word "two" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "six".

SEC. 3. That Section 122-11.3 of the General Statutes of North Carolina be and the same is hereby amended by striking out in line two of the second paragraph thereof the words "two years" and substituting in lieu thereof the words "six years".

SEC. 4. That Section 122-11.5 of the General Statutes of North Carolina be and the same is hereby repealed.

SEC. 5. That Section 122-14 of the General Statutes of North Carolina be and the same is hereby amended by inserting immediately after the word "Raleigh" in line two of said section the following: ", the State Hospital at Morganton".

SEC. 6. That Section 122-17 of the General Statutes of North Carolina be and the same is hereby amended by striking out in line three of said section the word "three" and by inserting in lieu thereof the word "five".

SEC. 7. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after April first, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

Ratified 3-20-45.

S. B. 178—An Act Providing for the Establishment of a Hospital for the Treatment of Children Affected With Spastic Ailments.

Whereas, in compliance with a request of the Governor of North Carolina, a commission composed of Dr. Lenox D. Baker, Dr. J. S. Gaul, Dr. W. M. Roberts, Dr. Ellen Winston, Honorable Thomas O'Berry, and Honorable George Ross Pou investigated the need of an institution for the treatment of children affected with cerebral palsy (spastic) ailments and has made their report to the Governor, recommending the establishment of such a hospital to be operated separate and distinct from any institution for the treatment of the feeble minded or insane; and

Whereas, it appears from said report that there are over one thousand children in the State suffering from spastic ailments and that the interest of the State would be best served by a hospital being established for the treatment of such cases: Now, therefore,

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That an institution, to be known and designated as, "The North Carolina Hospital for Treatment of Spastic Children," is hereby created and such institution is authorized and empowered to accept and use donations and appropriations and do all other things necessary and requisite to be done in furtherance of the purpose of its organization and existence as herein set forth.

SEC. 2. The Governor shall appoint a board of directors consisting of nine (9) members for said hospital, three of whom shall be appointed for two years, three for four years, and three for six years, who shall hold their office until their successors have been appointed. At the end of the term of office of each of said directors, their successors shall each be named for a term of six years. The Governor shall fill all vacancies occurring by reason of death, resignation, or otherwise.

SEC. 3. The Board of Directors, with the approval of the Governor and Council of State, is authorized to secure by gift or purchase, suitable real estate within the State at such place as the board may deem best for the purpose, and to erect or improve buildings thereon, for carrying out the purposes of the institution; but no real estate shall be purchased or any commitments made for the erection or permanent improvements of any buildings involving the use of State funds unless and until an appropriation for permanent improvements of the institution is expressly authorized by the General Assembly.

SEC. 4. That in order to provide for the operation of the said institution prior to the time that permanent quarters can be established, the board of directors, with the approval of the Governor and Council of State, is authorized and empowered to enter into an agreement with any other State institution or agency for the temporary use of any State owned property which such other State institution or agency may be able and willing to divert for the time being from its original purpose; and any other State institution or agency, which may be in possession of real estate suitable for the purpose of the North Carolina Hospital for Treatment of Spastic Children upon such terms as may be mutually agreed upon.

SEC. 5. The board of directors shall have the general superintendence, management, and control of the institution; of the grounds and buildings, officers, and employees thereof; of the patients therein and all matters relating to the government, discipline, contracts, and fiscal concerns thereof; and may make such rules and regulations as may seem to them necessary for carrying out the purposes of the institution. And the board shall have the right to keep, restrain, and control the patients of the institution until such time as the board may deem proper for their discharge under such proper and humane rules and regulations as the board may adopt.

SEC. 6. The board of directors shall appoint a superintendent of the institution, who shall be a person of professional training and experience in the care and treatment of spastic ailments, and may fix the compensation of the superintendent, subject to the approval of the Budget Bureau, and may discharge the superintendent at any time for cause.

SEC. 7. The purpose and aim of the North Carolina Hospital for Treatment of Spastic Children is to treat, care for, train, and educate, as their condition will permit, all spastic children of training age in the State who are capable of being rehabilitated; to disseminate knowledge concerning the extent, nature, and prevention of spastic ailments, and to that end, subject to such rules and regulations as the board of directors may adopt, there shall be received into said hospital, spastic children under the age of twenty-one years when, in the judgment of the board of directors, it is deemed advisable. Application for the admission of a child must be made by the father if the mother and father are living together, and if not, by the one having custody, or by a duly appointed guardian or by the superintendent of any county home or by person having management of any orphanage, association, society, children's home, or other institution for the care of children to which the custody of such child has been committeed, in which event the consent of the parents shall not be required.

SEC. 8. The board of directors is hereby authorized and empowered to promulgate rules, regulations, and conditions of admission of patients to the hospital, but in so doing shall not exclude any patient otherwise qualified for admission because of inability to pay for examination and treatment, and all indigent patients otherwise qualified for admission shall be received wtihout regard to their indigent condition when there is space and accommodation available for such patients. The board of directors shall require all patients who are able, including those having persons upon whom they are legally dependent who are able, to pay the reasonable cost of treatment and care and upon their refusal to do so, the said board of directors is authorized and empowered to institute action in the name of the hospital in the county in which it is located for the collection thereof: Provided, that if the amount is less than two hundred dollars ($200.00) the said action shall be instituted in the county where the defendant resides.

SEC. 9. Any patient entered in the hospital may be discharged therefrom or returned to his or her parents or guardian when, in the judgment of the directors, it will not be beneficial to such patient or to the best interest of the hospital to be longer retained therein.

SEC. 10. The board of directors shall further investigate and study the needs and requirements for establishing and equipping a hospital for the care and treatment of mentally normal cerebral palsy (spastic) patients and determine the annual per capita cost for the treatment of such patients, and cause to be prepared the necessary plans and specifications for providing and equipping a hospital with a capacity of fifty (50) beds. Said board of directors shall present to the next session of the General Assembly such plans and specifications together with its recommendations as to the establishment of such a hospital, including a site for its location. To meet the expense of preparing said plans and specifications and other incidental expenses of the board, there is hereby appropriated out of the Contingency and Emergency Fund of the State such an amount as the Governor and Council of State may consider necessary.

SEC. 11. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 13, 1945.

S. B. 179—An Act to Amend the Laws of North Carolina Relating to Persons With Mental Diseases and to Provide for Committing Such Persons to Institutions for Observation to Determine Their Mental Condition.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That Chapter thirty-five of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the title of said Chapter and inserting in lieu thereof "Persons with Mental Diseases and Incompetents."

SEC. 2. That Chapter thirty-five of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by adding thereto a new Section to precede immediately Section 35-1 to be numbered 35-½ and to read as follows:

SEC. 35½. Definitions.—The words "mental disease," "mental disorder" and "mental illness" shall mean an illness which so lessens the capacity of the person to use his customary self-control, judgment, and discretion in the conduct of his affairs and social relations as to make it necessary or advisable for him to be under treatment, care, supervision, guidance, or control. The terms shall be construed to include "lunacy," "unsoundness of mind," and "insanity."

A "mental defective" shall mean a person who is not mentally ill but whose mental development is so retarded that he has not acquired enough self-control, judgment, and discretion to manage himself and his affairs, and for whose own welfare or that of others, supervision, guidance, care, or control is necessary or advisable. The term shall be construed to include "feeble-minded," "idiot," and "imbecile."

SEC. 3. That Section 35-2 is hereby amended by striking out the word "idiot" appearing in lines two, seven, eleven, fourteen, twenty-two, twenty-five, thirty-two and forty-three, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mental defective."

That Section 35-2 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by striking out the word "lunatic" in lines two, eight, eleven, fourteen, twenty-two, twenty-six, thirty-two, and forty-three, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 4. That Section 35-10 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "idiot" in line three and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally defective."

That Section 35-10 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by striking out the word "lunatic" in line three and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 5. That Section 35-11 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "idiot" in lines two and seven and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally defective."

That Section 35-11 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by striking out the word "lunatic" in lines two and eight, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

That Section 35-11 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by striking out the words "nonsane person" in line seventeen and inserting in lieu thereof the word "person with mental disorder."

SEC. 6. That Chapter thirty-five of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by adding thereto a new Section to follow immediately Section 35-35 to be numbered Section 35-35.1 and to read as follows:

Sec. 35-35.1 Commitment of Inebriates for Mental Disorders.—Whenever an inebriate under a commitment to the State Hospital at Raleigh is found to be suffering from a mental disorder he may be committed as a mentally disordered person by having two physicians not connected with the State Hospital at Raleigh examine him at the request of the superintendent of the State Hospital at Raleigh, without removing said inebriate and alleged mentally disordered person from the State Hospital. If these two said physicians find that the inebriate is mentally disordered, they shall sign the usual affidavit for commitment of an individual as mentally disordered and forward same to the Clerk of the Superior Court of the county in which the inebriate is settled; whereupon the said clerk of court may declare the said person committed to the proper hospital as a mentally disordered person as provided in this chapter. Upon adjudication the superintendent shall notify the sheriff of the county in which the alleged mentally disordered person is settled, and it shall be said sheriff's duty to convey the mentally disordered person to the proper hospital.

SEC. 7. That Chapter one hundred twenty-two of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the title to said chapter and inserting in lieu thereof "Hospitals for the Mentally Disordered."

SEC. 8. That Section 122-1 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines two, five and eight and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 9. That Section 122-3 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines four, seven, sixteen and nineteen and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 10. That Section 122-5 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines two, three and six, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 11. That Section 122-6 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines ten and eleven, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 12. That Section 122-27 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-27. Superintendent to notify of escape or revocation of probation of inmate.—When any inmate of a State Hospital who has been released therefrom on probation has breached the conditions of his probation or when any inmate has escaped from a State Hospital, the superintendent of the hospital shall immediately notify the committing physicians and the sheriff and clerk of court of the county in which such inmate is located at the time of such escape or breach of the conditions of probation. Upon the receipt of such notice, it shall be the duty of the sheriff to return such inmate to the hospital from which he has escaped or has been released on probation. The expense of returning such inmate shall be borne by the county of such inmate's legal settlement.

SEC. 13. That Section 122-36 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-36. Persons entitled to immediate admission if space available.—Any resident of North Carolina who has been legally adjudged by a clerk of court or other properly authorized person in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter to be mentally disordered or a proper person to be committed to a State Hospital for observation shall, if space is available, be entitled to immediate admission in the State Hospital at Morganton, the State Hospital at Raleigh, or the State Hospital at Goldsboro, in accordance with the principles of division of race and residence prescribed in this Chapter. No resident of this State who has been legally adjudged mentally disordered or a proper subject for observation and who has been presented to the superintendent of the proper State Hospital for the mentally disordered as provided in this Article, shall be refused admission thereto if space is available, but nothing in this Article shall be construed to affect the discharge or transfer of patients as now provided by law.

Upon the admission of any such person, the superintendent of the institution shall notify the clerk of the superior court who has committed such person as mentally disordered, or as a proper subject for observation.

SEC. 14. That Section 122-37 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-37. Mental defectives admitted.—Any person with mental deficiency who in addition is suffering from epilepsy or a mental disorder may be admitted to the proper State Hospital for the mentally disordered. Mental defective delinquents and low grade idiots who are unable to look after their own persons may be admitted to the Caswell Training School.

SEC. 15. That Section 122-38 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the second sentence of said Section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

The Board of Directors may, if there be sufficient room, admit other than indigent patients, upon proper compensation, based upon the ability of the patient or his estate to pay. Where the clerk of court or the superintendent of the Hospital has doubt as to the indigency of the mentally disordered person, he shall refer the question to the County Department of Public Welfare for investigation.

That Section 122-38 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in line three and inserting in lieu thereof the word "persons."

That Section 122-38 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by striking out the word "inmate" in line ten and inserting in lieu thereof the word "patient."

SEC. 16. That Section 122-39 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines six and eight and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 17. That Section 122-40 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by rewriting the second sentence of said Section to read as follows:

If it is not possible to ascertain the legal residence of the alleged mentally disordered person and the clerk or the assistant clerk of court shall be of the opinion that the alleged mentally disordered person is a resident of this State, within the meaning of the law, and in all other respects would be a proper person to be committed as mentally disordered or for observation, he shall state that he was unable to ascertain the legal residence of the alleged mentally disordered person and shall commit him to the proper State Hospital in accordance with the principles of divisions as to race and residence prescribed in this Chapter.

That Section 122-40 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby further amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines two and four and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 18. That Section 122-41 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the words "as insane" in lines two and three and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for the mentally disordered."

SEC. 19. That Section 122-42 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-42. Affidavit of mental disorder to procure admission.—For admission into a State Hospital, the following proceeding shall be had: Some reliable person having knowledge of the facts shall make before and file with the clerk of the superior court of the county in which the alleged mentally disordered person resides or in which the alleged mentally disordered person is at the time affidavit is filed, an affidavit in writing which shall be substantially in the following form:

State of North Carolina, _____County.

The undersigned makes oath that he has carefully observed_____ and believes_____ to be a mentally disordered person, and to be, in the opinion of the undersigned, a fit subject for admission into a hospital for the mentally disordered.

The above affidavit may be sworn to before the clerk of superior court, the assistant clerk of superior court or the deputy clerk of superior court.

SEC. 20. That Section 122-43 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-43. Examination.—Whereupon the clerk of court shall direct two physicians, duly licensed to practice medicine by the State, to go to the alleged mentally disordered person or have him brought to them in order that the alleged mentally disordered person may be examined by the said two physicians to determine if a state of mental disorder exists and if it warrants commitment to one of the State institutions for the mentally disordered. If the said two physicians are satisfied that commitment of the alleged mentally disordered person is necessary, they shall sign an affidavit professing to same, which shall be substantially in the following form:

State of North Carolina, _____County.

The undersigned, licensed to practice medicine by the State of North Carolina, makes oath that he has carefully examined_____and believes him to be suffering from a mental disease, and to be, in the opinion of the undersigned, a fit subject for admission into a hospital for the mentally disordered.

The above affidavit may be sworn to before the clerk of the superior court, the assistant clerk of superior court, the deputy clerk of superior court, or a notary public.

SEC. 21. That Section 122-45 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby repealed.

SEC. 22. That Section 122-46 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-46. Clerk to commit to hospital for observation.—Whereupon the clerk of the court shall direct such mentally disordered person to be removed to the proper hospital as a patient for a period of not more than thirty days from the time of admission to the proper hospital for observation to determine the state of said person's mental health and to that end he shall transmit to the proper Board of Directors the examination of the witnesses and the statement of such facts as he shall deem pertinent to the subject matter. He shall make the following order and commitment to the proper State Hospital in substantially the following form:

State of North Carolina, _____County.

To the State Hospital at_____, N. C., Greetings:

Whereas, it has been made satisfactorily to appear to me, _____, clerk of the superior court of said county, that_____, a person having his legal settlement in this county, is mentally disordered, epileptic, or addicted to the use of drugs or alcohol (draw a pen through terms not applying), that he is a bona fide citizen of the State, and that he has a legal settlement in said county and is a fit subject for care and treatment in the State Hospital at_____, and that he, being at large, is injurious to himself and disadvantageous if not dangerous to the community:

These are, therefore, to command you to receive said _____into the State Hospital at _____for a period of observation, not exceeding thirty days, as provided for by the laws of this State. Given under my hand and official seal, this_____day of _____, 19____.

I, _____, Clerk of the Superior Court of the above county, do hereby certify that_____ _____is a poor person and has no estate nor property except_____ nor has anyone such property who is liable for his maintenance under Section 35-33 of the General Statutes.

Given under my hand and official seal, this_____day of _____, 19____.

Clerk Superior Court_____County.

If the patient is not indigent, the following should be filled out and accompany the commitment of the patient:

State of North Carolina, _____County

I, _____, Clerk of the Superior Court of said County, do hereby certify that_____ _____has property of his own and is financially able to pay for his maintenance, or has relatives who under Section 35-33 of the General Statutes are liable for his maintenance, who have adequate property to pay for the same in the State Hospital at_____, N. C.

Given under my hand and official seal, this_____day of _____, 19____.

Clerk Superior Court_____County.

The application for admission and commitment to a particular hospital shall be forwarded to such hospital, and immediately upon receipt of said application, if there shall be room for said patient in said hospital, the superintendent shall immediately notify the clerk of the court that the patient will be admitted at once. The receipt of said notice by said clerk of court shall constitute his authority to have conveyed said patient to said hospital for immediate admission: Provided, that nothing herein shall prevent the superintendent of said hospital from sending immediately a representative of said hospital to convey said patient thereto.

SEC. 23. That Chapter one hundred twenty-two of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section to follow immediately Section 122-46, to be numbered 122-46.1 and to read as follows:

Sec. 122-46.1. Clerk may make final commitment to hospital.—When such alleged mentally disordered person is committed to a State Hospital for observation, the Hospital authorities shall, at the expiration of thirty days, file with the clerk of the superior court of the county in which the alleged mentally disordered person resided, if known, if not known, with the clerk of the superior court who committed such alleged mentally disordered person for observation, a written report stating the conclusions reached by the Hospital authorities as to the mental condition of the alleged mentally disordered person. Upon the basis of this report, the clerk of the superior court of the county in which the alleged mentally disordered person resided, or if such mentally disordered person's residence is not known, the clerk of the superior court who committed him for observation is authorized to order said person discharged or to order him to remain at the Hospital as a patient, as the facts may warrant. Any person who has been committed to any State Hospital as mentally disordered as provided by law shall be and remain a charge of such State Hospital until he has been discharged from said Hospital or declared competent as otherwise provided by law.

At the end of the thirty day observation period the superintendent of the State Hospital in which the alleged mentally disordered person has been confined for a thirty day period of observation may signify in writing to the clerk of the court of the county in which the alleged mentally disordered person is settled that his observation of the alleged mentally disordered person has not been completed and that a second thirty day period of observation of the alleged mentally disordered person is requested. Whereupon the clerk of the superior court who committed the alleged mentally disordered person for observation is authorized to order said person to remain at the hospital as a patient for another thirty day observation period.

Sec. 24. That Sections 122-47, 122-48 and 122-49 of the General Statutes of North Carolina are hereby repealed.

Sec. 25. That Chapter one hundred twenty-two of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section, to follow immediately Section 122-49, to be numbered 122-49.1 and to read as follows:

Sec. 122-49.1. Withdrawal of petition.—The petitioner in a proceeding to determine the mental health or mental disease of an alleged mentally disordered person may, at any time before the adjudication that such alleged mentally disordered person is mentally disordered or mentally healthy, withdraw such petition by filing with the clerk of the superior court, in writing, a motion to this effect. The Clerk is authorized to allow such motion and shall incur no liability for such action. When such motion is allowed, the proceedings shall be deemed to be at an end.

Sec. 26. That Section 122-50 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in line two and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

Sec. 27. That Section 122-52 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by rewriting that portion of the first sentence preceding the semicolon to read as follows:

Whenever an alleged mentally disordered person shall be entitled to admission in any one of the hospitals of the State as prescribed by law, and the clerk of the superior court or other officer authorized by law to find such person mentally disordered or a proper subject for observation has so found, it shall be the duty of the clerk or other officer forthwith to notify the superintendent of the proper hospital, giving the name, race, sex and age of the patient.

Sec. 28. That Section 122-53 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines one, four and five and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

Sec. 29. That Section 122-54 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines two, five, nine and eleven and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

That Section 122-54 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

Each female mentally disordered patient must be accompanied to the hospital by a member of her family; if a member of her family is not available, she must be accompanied by a female designated by the county superintendent of public welfare of the county of the patient's settlement, the expense of said female attendant to be borne by the county commissioners.

Sec. 30. That Section 122-55 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in line two and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

Sec. 31. That Section 122-57 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-57. Commitment in case of sudden or violent mental disorder. Whenever any citizen or resident of this State or any other state becomes suddenly or violently mentally disordered, he may be committed to the proper State hospital for the mentally disordered, private hospital, county hospital, or other suitable place, until adjudication can be made or for a period not exceeding ten days upon the affidavit of one physician not related by blood to the mentally disordered person and licensed to practice medicine in North Carolina or by the order of the clerk of the superior court of the county in which the patient becomes suddenly or violently mentally disordered upon the application of a respectable citizen. The affidavit of the physician will be on a standard form provided by the State Hospitals Board of Control for this purpose. The physician's signature upon this form must be sworn to before a notary public or a deputy sheriff. The physician's notarized signature to the standard form provided by the State Hospitals Board of Control for the purposes enumerated in this section shall constitute authority for the temporary commitment of the alleged mentally disordered person who has become suddenly or violently mentally disordered without an order of the clerk of the superior court. Adjudication of a person temporarily committed under the provisions of this section may proceed without removing said person to the county of his residence.

Sec. 32. That Section 122-62 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-62. Commitment upon patient's application.—Any person believing himself of unsound mind or threatened with mental disorder may voluntarily commit himself to the proper Hospital. The application for commitment shall be in the following form:

State of North Carolina, County of_____.

I, _____, a resident of_____ County, North Carolina, being of mind capable of signifying my wishes, do hereby solicit admission as a patient in the State Hospital at_____. I agree in all respects to conform to the rules and regulations of said institution. I understand that I shall not be entitled to a discharge until I shall have given the superintendent ten days notice of my desire to be discharged.

Attest:_____.

This application shall be accompanied by the certificate of a licensed physician, which certificate shall state that in the opinion of the physician the applicant is a fit subject for admission into a hospital, and that he recommends his admission. The certificate of the clerk of the superior court need not accompany this application, and the medical director of the State Hospital shall notify the clerk of court of the county of residence of the patient of the discharge of the patient. The superintendent may, if he think it a proper application, receive the patient thus voluntarily committed and treat him, but no report need be made to the clerk of court of the county of his settlement. The superintendent and Board of Directors shall have the same control over patients who commit themselves voluntarily as they have over those committed under the regular proceedings hereinbefore provided except that a voluntary patient shall be entitled to a discharge after he shall have given the superintendent ten days notice of his desire to be discharged.

Final commitment of voluntarily committed patients must proceed through the same channels as in case of involuntary commitment of an allegedly mentally disordered person.

Sec. 33. That Section 122-63 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 122-63. Proceedings in case of mentally disordered citizens of another State.—If any person not a citizen or a resident of this State but a resident or citizen of another State of the United States shall be ascertained to be mentally disordered, the clerk of court shall commit such mentally disordered person to a hospital for the mentally disordered in this State. Upon the admission of such mentally disordered person the superintendent of the hospital shall notify the North Carolina State Board of Public Welfare that the mentally disordered person is a citizen or resident of another State in order that the State Board of Public Welfare can take steps to transfer such mentally disordered person to the State of his settlement. If the State of the mentally disordered person's residence shall not provide for the removal of the said person from this State to the State of his residence or citizenship within a reasonable time the superintendent of the State Hospital shall cause him to be conveyed directly from the State hospital to the State of which he is a citizen or resident and delivered there to the superintendent of the proper State hospital. The cost of such proceedings and conveyance away from the State shall be borne by the county in which the person shall have been adjudged to be mentally disordered.

SEC. 34. That Chapter one hundred twenty-two of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by adding thereto a new Section to follow immediately Section 122-63, to be numbered Section 122-63.1 and to read as follows:

Sec. 122-63.1. Transfer of mentally disordered citizens of North Carolina from another state to North Carolina.—A mentally disordered citizen of North Carolina who is confined in a State hospital for the mentally disordered in another State of the United States shall be transferred directly to the proper State hospital for the mentally disordered in North Carolina after the North Carolina State Board of Public Welfare has determined the settlement of the said mentally disordered citizen. Commitment of said mentally disordered citizen to the proper State hospital for the mentally disordered proceeds through the usual channels for commitment except that two physicians not connected with the proper State hospital for the mentally disordered and residing in the county of the said proper hospital may examine the said mentally disordered citizen as to the status of said citizen's mental health. Thereupon the affidavits of said physicians are to be forwarded to the clerk of court in the county in which the said alleged mentally disordered citizen is settled. On the basis of said affidavits the clerk of court may then declare the alleged mentally disordered person committed to the proper State hospital for the usual thirty day period.

SEC. 35. That Section 122-66 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the word "insane" in the catch-line and in lines four and eight and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

SEC. 36. That Section 122-67 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by rewriting the first sentence in said Section to read as follows:

Upon the superintendent's certifying the facts (a copy of which certificate shall be sent to the clerk of superior court of county of settlement) the superintendent may discharge or remove from the hospital any person admitted as mentally disordered when such person becomes or is found to be of sound mind, or when such person is incurable and in the opinion of the superintendent his being at large will not be injurious to himself or dangerous to the community, or the superintendent may permit such person to go to the county of his settlement on probation when in the opinion of the superintendent it will not be injurious to himself or dangerous to the community; and the superintendent may discharge or remove such person upon other sufficient causes appearing to him, and whenever any such person admitted as indigent may be so discharged or removed, it shall be the duty of the sheriff of the county of his settlement to convey such person to his county at its expense, and any such person discharged as restored or probated shall receive from such hospital a sum of money sufficient to pay his transportation to the county of his settlement, which sum shall be repaid by said county, and, if necessary, the hospital shall provide the patient with decent clothing.

That Section 122-67 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by striking out the word "insane" in lines thirty and thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-four, thirty-seven and thirty-nine and inserting in lieu thereof the words "mentally disordered."

That Section 122-67 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

Whenever a patient of a State hospital is discharged on probation or parole, the discharge shall contain the date on which it became effective. The superintendent of the hospital from which the person has been released on probation or parole shall have authority to revoke such probation or parole at any time, upon such grounds as may to him seem sufficient. When such probation or parole is revoked, the superintendent shall notify the sheriff of the county in which the person released on probation or parole is located, and it shall be the duty of the sheriff to return such person to the hospital from which released.

SEC. 37. That Section 122-68 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by striking out the following: "or until the next meeting of the board of three directors provided for in the preceding Section."

That Section 122-68 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is further amended by striking out the last sentence of said Section.

SEC. 38. That Sections 122-69, 122-70, 122-71 of the General Statutes of North Carolina are hereby repealed.

SEC. 39. That Chapter one hundred twenty-two of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by adding thereto a new Section to follow immediately Section 122-68, to be numbered 122-68.1 and to read as follows:

Sec. 122-68.1. Superintendent must notify Commissioner of Mental Health, and State Hospitals Board of Control of unusually dangerous mentally disordered patients. Whenever a person is found by the State hospital psychiatrist to be unusually dangerous to himself or others, the superintendent must notify the Commissioner of Mental Health and the State Hospitals Board of Control. Such a patient cannot be paroled without the agreement of the State Hospitals Board of Control and the Commissioner of Mental Health. If the Commissioner of Mental Health finds that any patient in one of the State hospitals is unusually dangerous to himself or to others he may place the patient under the rules of this Section.

S. B. 292—An Act Authorizing Counties of One Hundred Thousand Population or Over to Provide Hospital Facilities for the Sick and Afflicted Poor of the County in Conjunction With a City in Its Borders Having Seventy-Five Thousand Population or Over, and to Levy a Tax Therefor by Such County and City and to Create a Commission to Administer Such Facilities.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Authority is hereby granted to the board of commissioners of any county in the State now or hereafter having a population of one hundred thousand or over and a city within its borders now or hereafter having a population of seventy-five thousand or over to provide adequate hospital facilities for the care of the sick and afflicted poor of such county. The exercise of the authority hereby granted through the contracts herein referred to, and the appropriations and taxes for the construction, installation, and maintenance of such facilities are hereby declared to be for necessary expenses and for a special purpose within the meaning of the Constitution of North Carolina and for which the special approval of the General Assembly of North Carolina is hereby given, and shall be valid and binding without a vote of the majority of the qualified voters of the county, and are expressly exempted and excepted from any limitation, condition or restriction prescribed by the County Fiscal Control Act and acts amendatory thereof. The full faith and credit of any such county shall be deemed to be pledged for the payment of the amounts due under said contracts and the special approval of the General Assembly of North Carolina is hereby given to the execution thereof and to the levy of a special ad valorem tax not to exceed ten cents (10c) on the one hundred dollars ($100.00) value of property, in addition to other taxes for general purposes authorized by law, for the special purpose of the payment of the amounts to become due thereunder. The board of aldermen of any such city is also authorized to levy, for the purposes herein provided, a special ad valorem tax not to exceed ten cents (10c) on the one hundred dollars ($100.00) value of property, in addition to other taxes for general purposes authorized by law. The term "Board of Aldermen," as used in this Act, shall be deemed to include any governing body of any municipality coming within the provisions of this Act by whatever name designated.

SEC. 2. The authority hereby granted shall be exercised only by agreement between the board of commissioners of the county and the board of aldermen of the city upon a plan of hospital care for the sick and afflicted poor of the county as herein provided. Such plan shall be embodied in a resolution, adopted by a majority vote of each board before becoming effective, and may be enlarged, diminished or altered from time to time by a majority vote of each board not inconsistent herewith. The plan shall provide for (a) the time when it shall become effective, (b) the election of a City-County Hospital Commission to administer the hospitals covered by the plan, (c) the respective financial obligations of the county and the city with respect to the construction of any hospitals covered by the plan, and (d) such other arrangements, provisions, and details as may be deemed necessary, requisite or proper to provide adequate hospital facilities for the sick and afflicted poor of the county.

SEC. 3. If the governing bodies of any such county and city deem it advisable to include within the plan any existing municipal hospital or any new hospital which the city proposes to erect with the proceeds of a bond issue approved by the registered voters thereof, then in that event, the commissioners of such county are authorized to contract with the city for the construction of additional hospital facilities, over and above those to be paid for by the city with the funds derived from such bond issue and from other sources, for the hospitalization of the sick and afflicted poor of the county upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon and embodied in said plan by the governing bodies of the county and the city, provided the annual payments by the county to the city toward the cost of constructing such additional hospital facilities shall not exceed fifteen per cent of the total cost thereof, and provided further that the annual deficit, if any, in the operation of such hospital or in the operation of any other hospital covered by the plan for the treatment of the sick and afflicted poor of the county shall be borne and paid by the city and county in such proportion as may be agreed upon by their governing bodies. In no event shall the annual payment of the city exceed two-thirds of such annual deficit. In the event a new hospital is constructed as herein provided, it shall be located within the corporate limits of the city and the name of the hospital and site selected and all contracts for the construction thereof shall be approved by a majority vote of the governing boards of the city and county meeting in joint session, each body voting as a unit, but in the event of disagreement the majority vote of the board of aldermen of the city shall prevail. One-third of all beds in the hospitals covered by the plan shall be reserved for the treatment of the indigent sick.

SEC. 4. City-County Hospital Commission. Following the adoption of the agreement covering a plan of hospitalization for the sick and afflicted poor of the county, the county commissioners and the governing board of the city shall meet in a joint session in the county court house and elect a City-County Hospital Commission, to be composed of nine members, six of whom shall be residents of the city and three of whom shall be residents of other sections of the county. Three members of the commission shall be elected to serve for a term of two years, three for a term of four years, and three for a term of six years, and thereafter three members shall be elected biennially for a term of six years. Vacancies from any cause shall be filled by the two governing bodies meeting in joint session.

The mayor of the participating city shall be chairman and the chairman of the board of commissioners of the county shall be vice-chairman. At the first meeting, the commission shall elect a secretary who need not be a member of the commission. The commission shall meet at least once a month and special meetings may be called by the chairman at such other times as he may designate. It shall be the duty of the chairman to call a special meeting of the commission upon written request of a majority of the members thereof. The secretary shall keep written minutes of all meetings of the commission and report to the governing bodies. The members of the commission shall serve without compensation.

The City-County Hospital Commission shall make recommendations to the county commissioners of the county and the board of aldermen of the city regarding the operation of any hospital covered by the City-County Hospital plan or system and shall discharge such other duties as the county commissioners of the county and the board of aldermen may impose upon the commission. In addition, such commission shall have all powers and discharge all duties now vested in any hospital commission of any such city by the ordinances or charter thereof not inconsistent herewith.

Not later than June first of each year the City-County Hospital Commission shall prepare and submit to the governing bodies of the county and city a proposed budget for the operation and maintenance of each hospital covered by the plan agreed upon by the governing bodies of the city and county. On or before June fifteenth of each year, the county commissioners and the board of aldermen shall adopt in a joint meeting the budget under which the several hospitals covered by the plan shall operate during the next fiscal year.

SEC. 5. Superintendent of Hospitals.—At a joint meeting of the board of commissioners and the board of aldermen, at which the City-County Hospital Commission is elected, there shall also be elected a superintendent of hospitals to serve for a term of twelve months. The compensation of the superintendent and of the personnel of the several hospitals covered by the plan shall be fixed by the commissioners of the county and the board of aldermen of the city in a joint meeting. The superintendent shall be subject to removal by the commissioners and by the board of aldermen at will in joint meeting, provided two-thirds of the membership of both boards vote in favor of such removal.

The superintendent of hospitals shall have supervision of the operation of the hospitals covered by the plan and shall have the powers now prescribed by the ordinances of the city and he shall likewise enforce all rules and regulations prescribed by the governing bodies of the county and the city.

SEC. 6. Revenue.—The board of commissioners of the county and the board of aldermen of the city are hereby respectively authorized and empowered to levy a tax on property in addition to other taxes for general purposes, not to exceed ten cents (10c) on the one hundred dollars ($100.00) value of property annually, to provide hospital care for the sick and afflicted poor of the county and the city. All revenues so derived shall be carried by each governing body as a separate fund and expenditures for such purpose shall be charged respectively against such fund. Other revenues received from the operation of the hospitals covered by the plan shall be carried in the same funds. The funds of the county and the city for the operation and maintenance of such hospital facilities shall be applied by the governing bodies toward the payment of any annual deficit arising from the treatment of the sick and afflicted poor in any of the hospitals covered by the plan agreed upon by the governing bodies, subject to the limitations hereinbefore provided, and shall be disbursed by the finance officer of the city on vouchers approved by the superintendent of hospitals, provided appropriations for such expenditures have been made and a sufficient balance is available. All purchases shall be made through the purchasing department of the city. The portion of the funds charged to the county shall be paid not later than thirty days from the close of each fiscal year to the finance officer of the city, to be applied as hereinbefore provided.

The governing bodies of the county and the city meeting in joint session shall set aside each year out of the hospital plan revenues a sum not to exceed ten per cent of the original cost of the hospital plants covered by the plan, including land, buildings and equipment, for future expansion and modernization of building and appurtenances, the funds so set aside to be deposited with the sinking fund commission of the city and kept separate by it from other funds handled by it, and the investments of such funds to be governed by the laws pertaining to the city sinking funds. The expenditure of all or any part of said accumulated funds shall be made upon recommendation of the City-County Hospital Commission to both governing bodies, meeting in joint session.

In anticipation of the annual payments to be made by the county toward the cost of constructing the additional facilities hereinbefore referred to, the city is authorized to advance such additional funds and if necessary to issue its short-term securities for that purpose. If such short-term securities are issued by the city, interest thereon shall be paid by the county.

SEC. 7. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances be held invalid, such invalidity shall not affect any other provision or application of the Act which be given effect without the invalid provision or application, and to this end the provisions of this Act are declared to be severable.

SEC. 8. All laws and clauses of laws and all provisions of the charter of any participating city or clauses of such charter provisions in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed to the extent of such conflict.

SEC. 9. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 13, 1945.

S. B. 318—An Act to Amend Section 48-5 of the General Statutes of North Carolina Relating to Consent in Adoption Proceedings.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Amend Section 48-5 of the General Statutes of North Carolina by striking out the period appearing immediately after the word "part" in line thirty of said section and by inserting in lieu of said period a comma and the following: "or if the court finds as a fact there is no person or persons qualified to give legal consent as provided in this section the court may appoint some suitable person or the county superintendent of public welfare of the county in which the child resides to act in the proceedings as next friend of the child to give or withhold such consent."

SEC. 2. All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 19, 1945.

S. B. 320—An Act to Amend Section 48-6 of the General Statutes of North Carolina Relating to the Inheritance and Succession of Property in Adoption Proceedings.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Amend Section 48-6 of the General Statutes of North Carolina by adding a proviso at the end of said section which said proviso shall read as follows:

Provided that where an adoption proceeding has been instituted under the provisions of this Chapter and an interlocutory decree has been entered or a tentative approval and order of adoption has been entered as provided by Section 48-5 and the petitioner or one of the petitioners dies and in said proceeding it is sought to adopt the child for life then and in that event the said child shall have all of the rights of inheritance and succession of property to, through or from the deceased petitioner as is provided for in this section in cases where a final order granting letters of adoption has been entered or made.

SEC. 2. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 19, 1945.

H. B. 3—An Act to Amend Sections One, Seven, Eleven, Thirteen, Nineteen and Twenty-Six of Article I of the Constitution of North Carolina, and to Rewrite Said Sections Changing the Word "Men" to "Persons" Therein; To Provide Against Exclusion of Women From Jury Service On Account of Sex, and to Amend Section One of Article VI Thereof by Rewriting the Same Omitting the Word "Male," Limiting the Right to Vote in This State.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That Sections one, seven, eleven, thirteen, nineteen and twenty-six of Article I of the Constitution of North Carolina be rewritten so as to read as follows:

Section 1. The equality and rights of persons. That we hold it to be self-evident that all persons are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, the enjoyment of the fruits of their own labor, and the pursuit of happiness.

Sec. 7. Exclusive Emoluments, et cetera. No person or set of persons are entitled to exclusive or separate emoluments or privileges from the community but in consideration of public services.

Sec. 11. In criminal prosecutions. In all criminal prosecutions, every person charged with crime has the right to be informed of the accusation and to confront the accusers and witnesses with other testimony, and to have counsel for defense, and not be compelled to give self-incriminating evidence, or to pay costs, jail fees, or necessary witness fees of the defense, unless found guilty.

Sec. 13. Right of jury. No person shall be convicted of any crime but by the unanimous verdict of a jury of good and lawful persons in open court. The Legislature may, howeved, provide other means of trial, for petty misdemeanors, with the right of appeal.

Sec. 19. Controversies at law respecting property. In all controversies at law respecting property, the ancient mode of trial by jury is one of the best securities of the rights of the people, and ought to remain sacred and inviolable. No person shall be excluded from jury service on account of sex.

Sec. 26. Religious liberty. All persons have a natural and inalienable right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and no human authority should, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience.

SEC. 2. That Section one of Article VI of the Constitution of North Carolina be amended to read as follows:

Section 1. Who may vote. Every person born in the United States, and every person who has been naturalized, twenty-one years of age, and possessing the qualifications set out in this article, shall be entitled to vote at any election by the people of the State, except as herein otherwise provided.

SEC. 3. That these amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters in the State at the next general election, in the same way and manner, and under the same rules and regulations as provided in the laws governing general elections in this State.

SEC. 4. That the electors favoring the adoption of these amendments shall vote a ballot on which shall be written or printed the words "For Amendments Making the Constitution Equally Applicable to Men and Women."

SEC. 5. That the election upon these amendments shall be conducted in the same manner and under the same rules and regulations as provided by the laws governing general elections; and, if a majority of the votes cast be in favor of the amendments, it shall be the duty of the Governor of the State to certify the amendments under the seal of the State to the Secretary of State, who shall enroll the same amendments so certified among the permanent records of his office, and the same shall be in force and every part thereof, from and after the date of such certification.

SEC. 6. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with the provisions of this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

In the General Assembly read three times and ratified, this the 15th day of March, 1945.

H. B. 17 (as Amended by H. B. 826)—An Act to Amend Section 130-102 of the General Statutes of North Carolina So As to Require a Certified Copy of the Birth Certificate to be Supplied Each Child at Birth.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Section 130-102 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a colon and adding the following proviso:

Provided that upon the receipt of a certificate of birth as provided in Section 130-99, unless said child was born out of wedlock, the state registrar shall within three months forward a certified copy thereof for the child to the address of the mother, if living; and if not, to the father or person standing in loco parentis to said child. No fee shall be collected for supplying this certificate.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That Chapter 131 of the General Statutes of North Carolina be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding the following Articles and sections.

ARTICLE 12

Sec. 131-117. North Carolina Medical Care Commission. There is hereby created a State agency to be known as "The North Carolina Medical Care Commission," which shall be composed of twenty members nominated and appointed as follows:

Three members shall be nominated by the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina; one member by the North Carolina Hospital Association; one member by the North Carolina Dental Society; one member by the North Carolina Nurses' Association, one member by the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association, and one member by the Duke Foundation, for appointment by the Governor.

Ten members of said Commission shall be appointed by the Governor and selected so as to fairly represent agriculture, industry, labor, and other interests and groups in North Carolina. In appointing the members of said Commission, the Governor shall designate the term for which each member is appointed. Four of said members shall be appointed for a term of one year; four for a term of two years; four for a term of three years; five for a term of four years, and thereafter, all appointments shall be for a term of four years. All vacancies shall be filled by the Governor for the unexpired term. The Commissioner of Public Welfare, and the Secretary of the State Board of Health shall be ex-officio members of the Commission, without voting power.

The Commission shall elect, with the approval of the Governor, a chairman and vice-chairman. All members, except the Commissioner of Public Welfare, and the Secretary of the State Board of Health shall receive a per diem of seven dollars ($7.00) and necessary travel expenses.

Sec. 131-118. Commission Authorized to Employ Executive Secretary. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission is authorized and empowered to employ, subject to the approval of the Governor, an executive secretary, and to determine his or her salary under the provisions of the Personnel Act. The executive secretary may employ such additional persons as may be required to carry out the provisions of this Act, subject to the approval of the Commission, and the provisions of the Personnel Act. Office space for the Commission shall be provided by the Board of Public Buildings and Grounds, in Raleigh.

Sec. 131-119. Contributions for Indigent Patients. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission, in accordance with rules and regulations promulgated by it, is hereby authorized and empowered to contribute not exceeding one dollar ($1.00) per day for each indigent patient hospitalized in any hospital approved by it, provided the balance of the cost shall be provided by the county or city having responsibility for the care of such indigent patient, or from other sources. The Commission shall promulgate rules and regulations for determining the indigency of the persons hospitalized and the basis upon which hospitals and health centers shall qualify to receive the benefits of this section.

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is hereby appropriated from the General Fund to the North Carolina Medical Care Commission for the fiscal year ending June thirty, one thousand nine hundred forty-six, the sum of five hundred thousand dollars ($500,000.00), provided that the benefits of this section shall apply only to hospitals publicly owned, or owned and operated by charitable, non-profit, non-stock corporations, and provided further that these appropriations provided in this section shall not be available until all provisions of Section twenty-three one-half of the Committee Substitute for House Bill No. eleven, the General Appropriations Bill of one thousand nine hundred forty-five, relating to the emergency salary for public school teachers and State employees shall have been completely and fully provided for.

Sec. 131-120. Construction and Enlargement of Local Hospitals. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to begin immediate surveys of each county in the State to determine:

(a) The hospital needs of the county or area;

(b) The economic ability of the county or area to support adequate hospital service;

(c) What assistance by the State, if any, is necessary to supplement all other available funds, to finance the construction of new hospitals and health centers, additions to existing hospitals and health centers, and necessary equipment to provide adequate hospital service for the citizens of the county or area; and to report this information, together with its recommendations, to the Governor, who shall transmit this report to the next session of the General Assembly for such legislative action as it may deem necessary to effectuate an adequate State-wide hospital program.

The North Carolina Medical Care Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to act as the agency of the State of North Carolina for the purpose of setting up and administering any State-wide plan for the construction and maintenance of hospitals, public health centers and related facilities, which is now or may be required in order to comply with any Federal law and in order to receive and administer any funds which may be provided by an Act of Congress for such purpose; and the Commission, as such agency of the State of North Carolina with the advice of the State Advisory Council set up as hereinafter provided, shall have the right to promulgate such State-wide plans for the construction and maintenance of hospitals, medical centers and related facilities, or such other plans as may be found desirable and necessary in order to meet the requirements and receive the benefits of any Federal legislation with regard thereto. The said commission shall be authorized to receive and administer any funds which may be appropriated by any Act of Congress for the construction of hospitals, medical centers and related activities or facilities, which may at any time in the future become available for such purposes; said Commission shall be further authorized to receive and administer any other Federal funds, which may be available, in the furtherance of any activity in which the Commission is authorized and empowered to engage in under the provisions of this Act establishing said Commission, and in connection therewith the Commission is authorized to adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the intent and purposes of this Act; to adopt such reasonable and necessary standards with reference thereto as may be proper to fully cooperate with the Surgeon General of the United States with the approval of the Federal Advisory Council in the use of funds provided by the Federal government, and at all times make such reports and give such information to the Surgeon General of the United States as may be required.

That the Governor is hereby authorized and empowered to set up and establish a State Advisory Council to the North Carolina Medical Care Commission, to consist of five members, who shall each serve for a term of four years, with the right on the part of the Governor to fill vacancies for unexpired terms, said council to include representatives of non-government organizations or groups, and of State agencies, concerned with the operation, construction, or utilization of hospitals or medical centers, or allied facilities, which Advisory Council, when set up by the Governor, shall advise with the North Carolina Medical Care Commission with respect to carrying out the purposes and provisions of this Act.

That the North Carolina Medical Care Commission and the said State Advisory Council set up by the Governor as herein authorized, shall be fully authorized and empowered to do all such acts and things as may be necessary, to authorize the State of North Carolina to receive the full benefits of any Federal laws which are or may be enacted for the construction and maintenance of hospitals, health centers or allied facilities.

That none of the provisions hereof shall authorize the appropriation of any State funds for the purposes herein set forth except as the same may be specifically provided for in this Act.

Sec. 131-121. Medical Student Loan Fund. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission is hereby authorized and empowered, in accordance with such rules as it may promulgate, to make loans to students who may wish to become physicians and who are accepted for enrollment in any standard four-year medical school in North Carolina, provided such student shall agree, that upon graduation and upon being licensed, to practice medicine in some rural area in North Carolina for at least four years. Rural area, for the purpose of this section, shall mean any town or village having less than two thousand five hundred (2,500) population according to the last decennial census, or area outside and around such towns or villages. Such loans shall bear such rate of interest as may be fixed by the Commission, not to exceed four per cent per annum.

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is hereby appropriated from the General Fund for the fiscal year ending June thirty, one thousand nine hundred and forty-six, to the North Carolina Medical Care Commission the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00). The State Treasurer shall set up on his records an account to which shall be deposited said amount, and from which withdrawals shall be made upon vouchers made by the State Auditor upon request of the North Carolina Medical Care Commission. This appropriation shall not lapse at the end of any biennium, but shall remain available for the purposes herein stated.

Sec. 131-122. Expansion of Medical School of the University of North Carolina. In order to carry forward the Statewide plan of hospital and medical care, the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina, by and with the approval of the Governor and the North Carolina Medical Care Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to expand the two-year Medical School of the University of North Carolina into a standard four-year medical school. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission is authorized and directed to make a complete survey of all factors involved in determining the location of the expanded medical school, giving especial attention to the advantages and disadvantages of locating said school in one of the large cities of the State, and shall render a report of their findings to the Governor and Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina.

Provided that no action shall be taken under this provision of this section, other than the work of the Commission, until a survey has been made and a report submitted to the Governor and Medical Care Commission by the Rockefeller Foundation or some other accredited agency with experience in the field of surveying large areas in connection with medical education and medical care. The report of such agency is to be submitted to the Governor and the Medical Care Commission in a reasonable time in advance of the report of the Governor and the Commission to the Board of Trustees.

Sec. 131-123. Appropriations for Expenses of the North Carolina Medical Care Commission. In order to provide funds for the expenses of the North Carolina Medical Care Commission, there is hereby appropriated from the General Fund for the fiscal year ending June thirty, one thousand nine hundred and forty-six, the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00), and for the fiscal year ending June thirty, one thousand nine hundred and forty-seven, the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00).

Sec. 131-124. Medical Training for Negroes. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission shall make careful investigation of the methods of providing necessary medical training for Negro students, and shall report its findings to the next session of the General Assembly. In addition to the benefits provided by Section 116-110 of the General Statutes of North Carolina, the North Carolina Medical Care Commission is hereby authorized to make loans to Negro medical students from the fund provided in Section 132-131, subject to such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Commission may prescribe.

Sec. 131-125. Acceptance of Gifts, Grants and Donations. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to accept and administer gifts, grants, or donations which may be made by the Federal Government or by any person, firm, or corporation for the purpose of carrying out the objects of this Act, provided the acceptance of such gifts, grants, or donations shall be made without requiring the surrender of authority or control in the administration thereof by the North Carolina Medical Care Commission.

Sec. 131-126. Hospital Care Associations. The North Carolina Medical Care Commission is hereby authorized to encourage the development of group insurance plans, the Blue Cross Plan, and other plans which provide for insurance for the public against the costs of disease and illness.

SEC. 2. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this Act shall be in full force and effect on and after its ratification.

Ratified March 21, 1945.

H. B. 786—An Act to Provide for the Administration by the State Board of Health of a Program for the Prevention and Cure of Cancer and to Prescribe the Powers and Duties of Said Board in the Administration of Said Program.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. The State Board of Health shall administer a program for the prevention and cure of cancer to the extent specified in this act, and to that end shall have the powers and duties hereinafter set forth.

SEC. 2. The State Board of Health shall furnish to cancer patients and such other low income citizens who are legal residents of North Carolina who comply with the rules and regulations specified by the State Board of Health, such financial aid, within the appropriation made in this act, for diagnosis, hospitalization and treatment, as may be approved for said patients found by the State Board of Health to be entitled thereto. Such diagnosis, hospitalization and treatment shall be given said patients in any hospital in this State which meets the minimum requirements for cancer control established by the State Board of Health, and designated by the State Board of Health as the hospital where such diagnosis, hospitalization and treatment shall be given. In order to administer such financial aid in the manner which will afford the greatest benefit to said cancer patients and to the people of the State, the State Board of Health is hereby authorized to promulgate rules and regulations specifying the terms and conditions upon which cancer patients may receive such financial aid, and act upon such applications in the manner which in its judgment will best effectuate the purposes of this Act. The State Board of Health may develop with the State Board of Public Welfare procedures for determining the needs of indigent and other low income applicants for financial aid in carrying out the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 3. The State Board of Health is authorized to establish and designate minimum standards and requirements for the organization, equipment and conduct of cancer clinics or departments in general hospitals in this State to the end that said hospitals may intelligently prepare and equip their institutions adequately to diagnose, prevent and treat cancer. Provided, that any clinic, group, organization or department set up, established or sponsored by the State Board of Health as set forth by this Act shall,

1. Meet the minimum requirements of the American College of Surgeons for Tumor Clinics;

2. That each physician who shall staff such organization, board or clinic must be a diplomat of the American Board of the specialty of medicine in which he is engaged.

SEC. 4. The State Board of Health shall collect information relating to the prevention and cure of cancer and shall sponsor an educational program for the purpose of aiding and informing the people of the State, as well as physicians and hospitals, in the prevention and cure of cancer, in the early diagnosis of cancer, and in its proper treatment.

SEC. 5. The State Board of Health is authorized to receive gifts or donations of money, securities, radium, X-ray, or other equipment or supplies, real estate, or any other property of any kind or description which may be used in the program for the prevention and cure of cancer. Any funds or intangibles donated for such purposes are to be deposited with the State Treasurer and to be used in the cancer control work.

SEC. 6. The State Board of Health is authorized to acquire, by gift, purchase (within the limits of appropriations available for such purposes), devise or otherwise, such laboratories, hospitals, equipment and supplies, or any other property, real or personal, as said Board shall deem needful to afford proper treatment and care to cancer patients in this State, and to carry out the program for the prevention and cure of cancer.

SEC. 7. The State Board of Health shall compile, tabulate and preserve statistical, clinical, and other records relating to the prevention and cure of cancer.

SEC. 8. The State Board of Health shall assist general hospitals in the State in organizing and conducting cancer clinics as a part of the cancer control program, and shall assist physicians and hospitals in establishing the early diagnosis of cancer and in preparing themselves to render the most efficient service in the cancer control program.

SEC. 9. In formulating the plans and policies of the program for the prevention and cure of cancer, the State Board of Health shall consult with the cancer committee of the North Carolina Medical Society, which shall consist of one physician from each congressional district, to the end that the cancer control program shall most effectively serve the welfare of the people of the State, and such plans and policies shall be presented to and approved by said cancer committee.

SEC. 10. All laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 11. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after July first, one thousand nine hundred and forty-five.

Ratified March 21, 1945.

H. B. 828—An Act to Rewrite Article 12 of Chapter 160 of the General Statutes of North Carolina, Authorizing the Governing Bodies of the State's Political Subdivisions to Establish and Provide for a Recreation System.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. Article twelve of Chapter one hundred and sixty of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Art. 12. Recreation Systems and Playgrounds.

Sec. 160-155. Title.—This article shall be known and may be cited as the "Recreation Enabling Law."

Sec. 160-156. Declaration of State public policy.—As a guide to the interpretation and application of this article, the public policy of this State is declared to be as follows: The lack of adequate recreational programs and facilities is a menace to the morals, happiness and welfare of the people of this State in times of peace as well as in times of war. Making available recreational opportunities for citizens of all age is a subject of general interest and concern, and a function requiring appropriate action by the governing bodies of the several political and educational subdivisions of the State. The legislature, therefore, declares that in its considered judgment the public good and the general welfare of the citizens of this State require an adequate recreation program and that the creation, establishment and operation of a recreation system is a governmental function and a necessary expense as defined by Article VII, Section seven, of the Constitution of North Carolina.

Sec. 160-157. Definitions.—(1) Recreation, for the purposes of this article, is defined to mean those activities which are diversionary in character and which aid in promoting entertainment, pleasure, relaxation, instruction and other physical, mental, and cultural developments and experiences of a leisuretime nature.

(2) Unit, for the purposes of this article, means county, city and town.

Sec. 160-158. Powers.—The governing body of any unit, as defined in Section 160-157, may exercise the following powers for recreational purposes:

(1) Establish and conduct a system of supervised recreation for such unit.

(2) Set apart for use as parks or playgrounds, recreational centers or facilities, any land or buildings owned by or leased to such unit and may improve and equip such lands or buildings.

(3) Acquire lands or buildings by gift, purchase, lease or loan, or by condemnation as provided by Chapter forty, Eminent Domain, of the General Statutes.

(4) Accept any gift or bequest of money, or other personal property, or any donation to be applied principal or income for recreational use.

(5) Provide, construct, equip, operate and maintain parks, playgrounds, recreation centers and recreation facilities, and all buildings and structures necessary or useful in connection therewith.

(6) Appropriate funds for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this article.

Sec. 160-159. Funds.—If the governing body of any unit, as defined in Section 160-157, finds it necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this article, the governing body is hereby authorized to call a special election without a petition for that purpose as provided by Section 160-163, and submit as therein provided to the qualified voters of said unit the question of whether or not a special tax shall be levied and/or bonds issued for the purpose of acquiring lands for parks, playgrounds and buildings, and the improvement thereof, and for equipping and operating same.

Sec. 160-160. System conducted by unit or recreation board.—If a recreational system is established, it may be conducted by the unit as any other department of the unit is conducted, or if the governing body of the unit determines that it is for the best interest of the system that it be supervised and directed by a recreation board or commission, then such governing body may create such board or commission by ordinance or resolution to be known as the "Recreation Board or Commission of the unit", and may vest such board or commission with the authority to provide, maintain, conduct and operate the recreational system with authority to employ directors, supervisors and play leaders and such other officers or employees as may be deemed best within the budget provided for the commission or board by the unit or from appropriations made by it, or from other funds in the hands of the commission or board. The board or commission may be vested with such powers and duties as to the governing body may seem proper.

Sec. 160-161. Appointment of members to board.—The board or commission shall be appointed by the governing body of the unit and shall consist of at least five members, one of whom shall be affiliated with the government of the unit, one with the school system, one with the health department and one with the welfare department. The term of at least one member of those first appointed shall expire in each of the first five years and until successors are appointed and qualified. The members shall serve without compensation. Vacancies in the board or commission shall be filled for the unexpired term by appointment of the governing body of the unit. The recreation board or commission at its first meeting shall appoint a chairman and such other officers as may be deemed proper for the conduct of its business, and shall adopt rules and regulations to govern its procedure. Rules and regulations may be adopted from time to time for the purpose of governing the use of the parks, playgrounds, recreation centers and facilities.

Sec. 160-162. Power to accept gifts and hold property.—The recreation board or commission may accept any grant, lease, loan or devise of real estate or any gift or bequest of money or other personal property, or any donation to be applied, principal or income, for either temporary, immediate or permanent recreational use; but if the acceptance of any grant or devise of real estate, or gift or bequest of money or other personal property will subject the unit to expense for improvement or maintenance, the acceptance thereof shall be subject to the approval of the governing body of such unit. Lands or devises, gifts or bequests, may be accepted and held subject to the terms under which such land or devise, gift or bequest, is made, given and received.

Sec. 160-163. Petition for establishment of system and levy of tax; election.—A petition signed by at least fifteen per cent of the qualified and registered voters in the unit may be filed in the office of the clerk or other proper officer of such unit requesting the governing body of such unit to do any one or all of the following things:

(1) Provide, establish, maintain and conduct a supervised recreation system for the unit.

(2) Levy an annual tax of not less than three cents (3c) nor more than ten cents (10c) on each one hundred dollars of assessed valuation of the taxable property within such unit for providing, conducting and maintaining a supervised recreation system.

(3) Issue bonds of the unit in an amount specified therein and levy a tax for the payment thereof, for the purpose of acquiring, improving and equipping lands or buildings or both for parks, playgrounds, recreation centers and other recreational facilities.

When the petition is filed, it shall be the duty of the governing body of such unit to cause the question petitioned for to be submitted to the voters at a special election to be held in such unit within ninety days from the date of the filing, which election shall be held as now provided by law for the holding of general elections in such units, except in all such elections a special registration shall be provided.

If the proposition submitted at such election shall receive a majority vote of the qualified registered electors at such election, the governing body of the unit shall, by appropriate ordinance or resolution, put into effect such proposition as soon as practicable.

Sec. 160-164. Joint playgrounds or neighborhood recreation centers.—Any two or more units may jointly provide and establish, operate and conduct and maintain a supervised recreation system and acquire, operate, improve and maintain property, both real and personal, for parks, playgrounds, recreation centers and other recreational facilities and activities, the expense thereof to be proportioned between the units participating as may to them seem just and proper.

SEC. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed: Provided, that nothing in this Act shall have the effect of repealing Public-Local or Private Acts creating or authorizing the creation of any recreational system by a unit or relating to the management thereof.

SEC. 3. This Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 21, 1945.

H. B. 857—An Act to Amend Chapter 49 of the General Statutes of North Carolina Relating to Illegitimate Children.

The General Assembly of North Carolina do enact:

SECTION 1. That Section 49-4 of the General Statutes of North Carolina is hereby rewritten to read as follows:

Sec. 49-4. When prosecution may be commenced.—The prosecution of the reputed father of an illegitimate child may be instituted under this Chapter within any of the following periods, and not thereafter:

1. Three years next after the birth of the child; or

2. Where the paternity of the child has been judicially determined within three years next after its birth, at any time before the child attains the age of fourteen years; or

3. Where the reputed father has acknowledged paternity of the child by payments for the support thereof within three years next after the birth of such child, three years from the date of the last payment, whether such last payment was made within three years of the birth of such child or thereafter: Provided, the action is instituted before the child attains the age of fourteen years.

The prosecution of the mother of an illegitimate child may be instituted under this Chapter at any time before the child attains the age of fourteen years.

SEC. 2. That all laws and clauses of laws in conflict with this Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this Act shall be in full force and effect from and after its ratification.

Ratified March 21, 1945.

STATE ENABLING ACT SINCE 1923 AIDS MUNICIPALITIES IN PARK AND RECREATIONAL FACILITIES

Since 1923 North Carolina communities have had full legislative authority to provide playgrounds and other facilities for recreation, including the necessary supervisory boards and may even issue bonds to provide the needed funds for recreational work.

The statute defines "municipality" as any city, town, township, school district or county and applies equally to any and all of them in recreational work without impairing any power already existing in any locality, park or recreation commission.

Covered by sections 160-155 to 160-166 of the General Statutes of 1943, the legal authority for communities to erect recreation facilities is substantially as follows:

The city council of any city or town, the county commissioners or the board of trustees of any school district may set apart for public use as playgrounds and recreational centers any land or buildings owned or leased by the municipality and not used for any other public purpose. Land and buildings may be acquired for such purposes if none already are available and may be obtained by gift, purchase, lease or condemnation.

The municipality has power to establish, maintain and conduct a system of supervised recreation including playgrounds and recreation centers and may delegate such authority to a recreation commission. The municipality may appropriate funds for recreational systems.

Powers of acquiring land or buildings may be invested in the recreation commission by the municipality and two or more municipalities may join to provide and conduct the desired facilities. A recreation board may accept gifts of real estate and money for recreational purposes and the municipality may issue bonds to provide facilities and equipment.

Twenty-five percent of registered, qualified voters may petition the municipality for the establishment of recreational facilities and to levy an annual tax of not more nor less than an unspecified number of mills on the one-hundred-dollar valuation of property, the petition setting out the maximum and minimum amount of the proposed tax. The petition will require a special election on the question by the voters of the municipality without a new registration.

Upon approval of the proposition by the voters the municipality must levy the tax, provide facilities and annually thereafter levy and collect the specified tax in addition to the general tax and without scaling down under existing law.

FINK NAMED NEW HEAD OF SCHOOL OF PUBLIC WELFARE AT THE UNIVERSITY

Dr. Arthur E. Fink has been named as new head of the school of public welfare and social work at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill following the retirement of Dr. Roy M. Brown. The appointment is effective July 1.

Dr. Fink holds degrees from the University of Pennsylvania and the Pennsylvania School of Social Work. His broad experience includes teaching at the University of Pennsylvania. He has been psychiatric social worker with the Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic, headworker at the University Settlement House in Philadelphia, and professor of social work and director of social work training at the University of Georgia.

Recently Dr. Fink has been connected with the social protection program of the Federal Security Agency with headquarters in Washington.

RECENT STAFF CHANGES

Ada McRackan is the State Department's new director of field social work since the resignation of S. J. Hawkins to go with the U. S. Public Health Service. Miss McRackan formerly was supervisor of standards and procedures for the public assistance division and a former field representative.

Mrs. Nell B. Mills has been named as war emergency case work aide in Carteret county. Mrs. Katheryn McB. Alexander is now a war emergency case work assistant in Robeson county.

Mrs. Aleine Rudisill Martin and Mrs. Wilfred S. McConnell are now case work assistants in Lincoln and Buncombe counties respectively. Mrs. Gertrude F. Boone has joined the case work staff in Durham County. Rena Cathey is a new caseworker in Graham county and Mrs. Elizabeth Saylor Flocken in Catawba.

The following have resigned: Mrs. Louise O. Neikirk, Mecklenburg superintendent; Mrs. Lela B. Britt, Cleveland case aide; Mabel Pitzer, Forsyth caseworker; Frances Akerstrom, Guilford caseworker; Mrs. Thelma Warren, Wayne case aide; Mrs. Charlotte H. Dosier and Mrs. Elizabeth Wilkes, case work aide and caseworker respectively, in Mecklenburg county; Mrs. Katie Lee Regan Williamson, Robeson case work aide.

Wallace H. Kuralt, former field representative for the State Department and at present with the Social Security Board in the Atlanta region, will become superintendent of public welfare in Mecklenburg on July 1.

BOOK REVIEWS

Counseling Services for Industrial Workers, Mary Palevsky. New York; Family Welfare Association of America, 122 E. 22 St., New York 10, N. Y.; 51 pp.; price 60c.

This is a fifty page pamphlet discussing in-plant counseling, family agency counseling provided industrial workers, union counseling for industrial workers and what social case work has to offer in the field of industrial counseling.

Of interest to staffs of public welfare angencies is Chapter II, "The Family Agency Counsels Industrial Workers." Among the services normally available are counseling in regard to home management, work adjustment, physical or mental illness, personality disorders, marriage difficulties and problems with children and adolescents. Family agencies offer information concerning the resources of the community and make available social service exchange facilities to counselors in industry. They receive referrals from industrial plants and consult with their counselors. They plan for day care for children and sometimes lend staff members to a local industry.

Labor Laws of North Carolina

(Section numbers have reference to sections of General Statutes of North Carolina.)

I. Miscellaneous Provisions.

§ 14-355. Blacklisting employees.—If any person, agent, company or corporation, after having discharged any employee from his or its service, shall prevent or attempt to prevent, by word or writing of any kind, such discharged employee from obtaining employment with any other person, company or corporation, such person, agent or corporation shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars; and such person, agent, company or corporation shall be liable in penal damages to such discharged person, to be recovered by civil action. This section shall not be construed as prohibiting any person or agent of any company or corporation from furnishing in writing, upon request, any other person, company or corporation to whom such discharged person or employee has applied for employment, a truthful statement of the reason for such discharge. (1909, c. 858, s. 1; C. S. 4477.)

Intent of Section.—This section was intended to correct the abuse under the common law of statements made concerning a discharged employee out of malice, where damages for the loss of employment were difficult of admeasurement; and under the provisions of the act a statement made as to the standing of the discharged employee is not privileged, if made maliciously. Seward v. Receivers, 159 N. C. 241, 242, 75 S. E. 34.

Remedial Provisions.—The provisions of this and the following section are remedial and do not put the burden upon the plaintiff of showing either malice or actual damages. Goins v. Sargent, 196 N. C. 478, 146 S. E. 131.

What Constitutes a Violation.—Where an employer has discharged his employee for being a member of a lawful association of like employees, and has advised others, without a request from them, who would have engaged the services of such employee that he would not sell his product to them should they employ him, and thus has prevented the discharged employee from getting employment within the State, and forced him to obtain employment in another state, depriving him of his living at home here with his family, etc., the employee is entitled to recover damages in his civil action against his former employer, and a demurrer ore tenus to a complaint setting forth this cause of action is bad. Goins v. Sargent, 196 N. C. 478, 146 S. E. 131.

§ 14-356. Conspiring to blacklist employees.—It shall be unlawful for two or more persons to agree together to blacklist any discharged employee or to attempt, by words or writing or any other means whatever, to prevent such discharged employee, or any employee who may have voluntarily left the service of his employer, from obtaining employment with any other person or company. Persons violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, at the discretion of the court. (1909), c. 858, s. 2; C. S. 4478.)

Editor's Note.—See notes to § 14-355.

§ 14-357. Issuing nontransferable script to laborers.—If any person who employs laborers by the day, week or month shall issue in payment for the services of such laborers any ticket, certificate or other script bearing upon its face the word "nontransferable" or shall issue such ticket, certificate or other script in any form that would render it void by transfer from the person to whom issued, or shall refuse to pay to the person holding the same its face value, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than fifty dollars for each offense, or imprisoned not more than thirty days. (Rev., s. 3730; 1889, c. 280; 1891, cc. 46, 78, 167, 370, 456; 1895, c. 127; C. S. 4479.)

"Face Value" Defined.—The "face value" is the value expressed on the face of the writing in the commodity in which it is payable. Marriner v. Roper Co., 112 N. C. 164, 16 S. E. 906.

Rights of Assignee.—This section does not authorize the assignee of a ticket or scrip payable in merchandise to demand and receive payment in money instead of in merchandise. Marriner v. Roper Co., 112 N. C. 164, 16 S. E. 906.

44-16. For labor in loading and unloading.

Art. 1. Mechanics', Laborers' and Materialmen's Liens.

§ 44-1. On buildings and property, real and personal.—Every building built, rebuilt, repaired or improved, together with the necessary lots on which such building is situated, and every lot, farm or vessel, or any kind of property, real or personal, not herein enumerated, shall be subject to a lien for the payment of all debts contracted for work done on the same, or material furnished. (Rev., 2016; Code, s. 1781; 1901, c. 617; 1869-70, c. 206, s. 1; C. S. 2433.)

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

In General.—The Constitution requires the General Assembly to "provide by proper legislation for giving to mechanics and laborers an adequate lien on the subject-matter of their labor." Art. 14, sec. 4. And the statute gives the lien "for the payment of all debts contracted for work done on the same or material furnished." In the construction of this section it is declared, in Wilkie v. Bray, 71 N. C. 205, that "in order to create the lien, the circumstances must be such as first to create the relation of debtor and creditor; and then it is for the debt that he has the lien." The effect of this ruling, which makes the statutory lien an incident to and the offspring of the contract out of which the indebtedness springs, and confines it to the party to the contract, was followed by the enactment of article 2 of this chapter which was not intended to supersede the lien of the contractor for it in direct terms gives the lien in favor of subcontractors, laborers and materialmen a preference over "the mechanics' lien now provided by law," and provides that when notice is given, the aggregate of such liens shall not exceed the amount then due the original contractor. Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 605, 609, 8 S. E. 366.

The debt contracted becomes a lien, a charge upon the land, and that land may, if need be, be sold, or in some appropriate way applied to the payment of the debt secured by and constituting the ground of the lien. It makes no difference as to the ownership of the land if the debt for such considerations was lawfully contracted, because the land is benefited by the labor so done on or about it, or by the materials furnished. The intention is that the land shall be charged by a lien with the costs of the benefits so extended to it, whether the benefits arise from labor done in building or repairing houses, in cultivating the land, building fences, ditching, felling trees, or the like, or from the erection of mills of any kind on it, or from supplying machinery, fixtures or any "material furnished" for such purpose. This is a just and reasonable interpretation of the statute. McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Howland, etc., Water Co., 111 N. C. 615, 619, 16 S. E. 857.

This and the following sections under the topic of liens are remedial, and their clear purpose is to give contractors, subcontractors and laborers liens upon property as therein prescribed and provided, to secure the payment of money due for labor done or material supplied on or about the same. To that end its language, phraseology, and scope are broad and comprehensive. There are few, if any, express exceptive provisions in it, and, in the absence of them, exceptions and limitations affecting such liens cannot be allowed unless by necessary implication. The object is to give a lien on particular property deriving particular benefit in favor of classes of persons whose claims are supposed to have particular merit. Chadbourn v. Williams, 71 N. C. 444; Wooten v. Hill, 98 N. C. 48, 3 S. E. 846; Burr v. Maultsby, 99 N. C. 263, 6 S. E. 108; McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Howland, etc., Co., 111 N. C. 615, 617, 16 S. E. 857.

A mechanic's lien may be defined to be a claim created by law for the purpose of securing a priority of payment of the price and value of work performed and materials furnished in erecting or repairing a building or other structure, and as such it attaches to the land as well as the buildings erected thereon. Van Stone v. Stillwell, etc., Mfg. Co., 142 U. S. 128, 136, 12 S. Ct. 181, 35 L. Ed. 961.

Origin of Lien.—Mechanics' liens were unknown in common law and equity jurisprudence both of England and of this country. They were clearly defined and regulated in the civil law. Where they exist in this country they are creatures of local legislation. Canal Co. v. Gordon, 6 Wall 561, 571, 18 L. Ed. 894.

Priority of the Lien.—The lien created by this section is preferred to every other lien or encumbrance, which attaches upon the property subsequent to the time at which the work was commenced, or the materials were furnished. Lookout Lumber Co. v. Mansion Hotel, etc., R. Co., 109 N. C. 658, 660, 14 S. E. 35.

"Mechanics'" and "Laborers'" Liens Distinguished.—When the contractor undertakes to put up a building and complete the same, the contract is indivisible and his "mechanic's lien" embraces the entire outlay, whether in labor or material, being for "work done on the premises," i. e., for betterments on it. The "laborer's lien" is solely for labor performed. The mechanic's lien is broader and includes the "work done," i. e., the "building built" or superstructure placed on the premises. Broyhill v. Gaither, 119 N. C. 443, 445, 26 S. E. 31.

Contractor Need Not Himself Perform the Labor.—The constitutional provision for giving to mechanics and laborers liens for their work, and the statutes enacted in pursuance thereof, and also giving liens for materials furnished, extend to and embrace contractors, who do not themselves perform the labor or furnish the materials used, but procure it to be done through the agency of others. Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 605, 8 S. E. 366.

Mere Knowledge Not Sufficient.—"Mere knowledge that work is being done or materials furnished on one's property does not enable the person furnishing the labor or materials to obtain a lien, since there is no privity between the owner and the person furnishing the labor or materials." 3 N. C. Law Rev. 65.

Property Subject to the Lien Must Be Sold First.—The property to which the lien attaches is specially devoted to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, and hence it must be sold before other property may be resorted to. McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Howland, etc., Water Co., 111 N. C. 615, 621, 16 S. E. 857.

When Itemized Statement Unnecessary.—Where a materialman's lien under this section, is for a complete contract for a gross sum, it is not necessary that the statement be itemized as required in the case of divisible contracts for goods or labor. King v. Elliott, 197 N. C. 93, 147 S. E. 701.

Sufficiency of Itemized Statement.—Where the claimant has attached and made a part of his lien an itemized statement of his account for labor and material which he has furnished the owner of the building upon which he claims his lien under this section, showing on several specific dates "money advanced for payroll," "furnace contract, etc.," each in stated amounts, it is held a sufficient itemization of his claims as required by the statute. King v. Elliott, 197 N. C. 93, 147 S. E. 701.

Statement Presumed Correct.—Where a lien filed under the provisions of this section gives the date to each item of labor or material furnished in relation to the building upon which the lien is sought, it will be presumed, nothing else appearing, that the dates given in the statement are correct. King v. Elliott, 197 N. C. 93, 147 S. E. 701.

Affidavit.—An affidavit to a lien filed under this section that the "foregoing statement of account showing the goods sold, delivered, installed, and work done," etc., for a "furnace contract": Held, sufficient to show a complete contract for the furnace at the price itemized in the statement. King v. Elliott, 197 N. C. 93, 147 S. E. 701.

Priority of the Lien.—The lien for labor and material furnished to the owner of a building under the provisions of this section and notice filed as required by § 44-38, and § 44-39, where furnished under an entire or complete contract for the various items as a whole, relates back to the time of the first delivery and work done under the contract, and is superior to a mortgage lien subsequently given and properly recorded. King v. Elliott, 197 N. C. 93, 147 S. E. 701.

Jurisdiction.—Where materials of a value in excess of two hundred dollars are furnished under an entire and indivisible contract, and the material furnisher institutes suit in a justice's court to recover for part of the materials furnished and also institutes suit in the superior court on the same cause of action, defendant's motion to dismiss the action instituted in the justice's court for want of jurisdiction should be allowed, since plaintiff may not split up his cause of action for jurisdictional purposes and try it piecemeal in both courts. Allison v. Steele, 220 N. C. 318, 17 S. E. (2d) 339.

Finding that Contract Entire.—Where it has been agreed by the parties that the trial judge find the facts upon the trial of the question of the sufficiency of a lien filed for material and labor furnished for a building his finding that the contract was "to do certain work and furnish certain materials for a stated amount" under the evidence in the case is interpreted to mean that the contract referred to was entire. King v. Elliott, 197 N. C. 93, 147 S. E. 701.

Estoppel.—By electing to assert a lien as a subcontractor under § 44-6, plaintiff is estopped from thereafter asserting a lien as a contractor or material furnisher under this section and plaintiff is entitled to recover of defendant only the amount due the contractor by the owner on the date notice was given as a subcontracter or material furnisher. Doggett Lbr. Co. v. Perry, 212 N. C. 713, 194 S. E. 475.

When plaintiff is estopped by its election in asserting a lien under § 44-6, from asserting a lien under this section, and its action brought solely under this section is dismissed as of nonsuit because of such election, plaintiff's remedy is by instituting another action to recover for materials furnished the contractor and used in the construction of the building under § 44-6. Doggett Lbr. Co. v. Perry, 213 N. C. 533, 196 S. E. 831.

Cited in Atlas Supply Co. v. McCurry, 199 N. C. 799, 156 S. E. 91; First, etc., Nat. Bank v. Sawyer, 218 N. C. 142, 10 S. E. (2d) 656.

II. MATERIALS AND SERVICES CONTRACTED.

Meaning of "Materials Furnished."—The lien arises in favor of and to secure the payment of "any and all debts contracted for work done on the same or materials furnished." By the term "materials furnished," is meant something furnished to be appropriated, used and pertinently applied on the land, devoted to some purpose no matter what, so that the purpose be lawful. The purpose is to secure the debt contracted for materials furnished on or about or connected with the land in connection with the purpose to which it is devoted in whole or in part. McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Howland, etc., Water Co., 111 N. C. 615, 619, 16 S. E. 857.

Plans and specifications of the architect are not "material" within the meaning of this section. Stephens v. Hicks, 156 N. C. 239, 72 S. E. 313.

No Lien upon the Materials as Distinct from the Building.—Several of the states have lien laws very similar in phraseology to this section, and the construction put upon them has not been uniform. In some of them it has been held that there is a lien on the building, etc., for materials furnished for the purpose or with the understanding that they were to be used in the erection or repairing of a building, whether so used or not; in others, that the materialman had a lien for the materials furnished, with the understanding that they were to be used in the construction of a building, although they were not used for such a purpose; and in others, with lien laws more resembling our own, that no lien can be acquired upon materials furnished for a building, etc., as distinct from the building, but only upon the building, etc., in the construction or repairing of which they are used. The latter is the proper construction of this section. Lanier v. Bell, 81 N. C. 337, 338.

But in the case of construction of a municipal building, in order for the subcontractor or materialman to have a claim against the bond of the contractor, it is not necessary that the materials furnished should have been actually used in such building; it is sufficient if they were contracted for that purpose. See Annotations to sec. 44-14.

Under this section the "material furnished," must be such material as enters into and becomes a part of the property and adds to its value. Pocahontas Coal Co. v. Henderson Elect. Light, etc., Co., 118 N. C. 232, 235, 24 S. E. 22.

Service or Materials Must Have Bettered the Property.—This section is construed in Tedder v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 124 N. C. 342, 32 S. E. 714, as meaning that the "Legislature has provided a lien only when the service or labor is for the betterment of property on which it is bestowed, leaving the laborer in all other cases to secure himself as at common law"—i. e., by retaining in his possession any property on which he makes repairs until paid for the same. Glazener v. Gloucester Lumber Co., 167 N. C. 676, 679, 83 S. E. 696.

Meaning of Term "Contracted."—The lien is given for the amount due upon debts contracted. But in this connection it is permissible to give the term "contracted" the larger meaning—agreed to be paid—thereby giving a highly remedial statute an operation commensurate with its purpose. Ball v. Paquin, 140 N. C. 83, 95, 52 S. E. 410.

The existence of a debt arising out of contract, due by the owner of the property, is a necessary predicate to the existence of a lien for labor and materials. Brown v. Ward, 221 N. C. 344, 20 S. E. (2d) 324.

III. PERSONS ENTITLED TO LIEN.

Lien to "Laborers and Mechanics," Excusive.—In Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 340, it was held that this section gave a lien to "Mechanics and Laborers" exclusively, and that an "overseer" was not a laborer, and reference was made to 8 Pa. St. 168, where it is held that an engineer is not a laborer. Tommey v. Spartanburg, etc., R. Co., 7 Fed. 429, 433.

Whatever may be the law, as declared in other jurisdictions, it is the settled principal in this State, that a mechanic or laborer, within the meaning of the lien laws, is one who performs manual labor—one regularly employed at some hard work, or one who does work that requires little skill, as distinguished from an artisan. Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 340; Stephens v. Hicks, 156 N. C. 239, 240, 72 S. E. 313.

The provision of the Constitution requiring the General Assembly to provide liens for mechanics and laborers, and the acts passed to carry it into effect, were intended to give protection to that class of persons who were totally dependent upon their manual toil for subsistence. The law was designed exclusively for mechanics and laborers. Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 340, 341. See Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 605, 8 S. E. 366, where it is held that the contractor or materialmen need not themselves furnish the labor or the materials.

In Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 340, it was held that an overseer is not a mechanic or laborer under the lien law, and is not entitled to a lien on the building and premises, where his work is done or labor performed, for the price or value of his services. The case of Cook v. Ross, 117 N. C. 193, 23 S. E. 252, is also to the same effect. There it was held that one who, under a contract, assists the owner of a mill in purchasing machinery and superintends the installation of the same and the repairing of the mill, so as to put it in proper condition for the manufacture of yarns, was in no view justified by our statute, a mechanic or laborer. Stephens v. Hicks, 156 N. C. 239, 241, 72 S. E. 313.

Architect Not a Laborer or Mechanic.—An architect who furnishes plans and specifications for a building is not a mechanic or laborer within the meaning of this article and he has no lien thereon for the same. Stephens v. Hicks, 156 N. C. 239, 72 S. E. 313.

IV. PROPERTY COVERED.

Any Real Property.—The phraseology of this section and the purpose of it are comprehensive. The lien prescribed attaches, in the case provided for, to any real property, whether it be denominated "a lot or farm," or a storehouse site, a mill site, a water reservoir site, or the like. McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Howland, etc., Water Co., 111 N. C. 615, 619, 16 S. E. 857.

House and Lot.—Where a house is built by a contractor for the owner upon an undivided tract of 80 acres in the country, the mechanic's lien attaches to the whole tract, especially where it appears that the house alone, apart from the tract of land, would be of comparatively little value. The fact that a house and improvements, built by a contractor upon a tract of 80 acres belonging to the owner, are enclosed by a fence including about three acres is not a segregation or division of the house from the tract so as to confine the mechanic's lien to the enclosure. In such case, though the lien is upon the whole tract, it should be divided, if practicable and desired by the defendant, in making the sale, and the parts sold in such order as he may elect, so that, if possible, the lien may be discharged without exhausting the entire tract. Broyhill v. Gaither, 119 N. C. 443, 26 S. E. 31.

Lien on Personalty Is Dependent upon Possession.—While this section provides for a lien not only upon buildings and lots, but also upon "any kind of property, real or personal," other sections of the lien law provide the conditions upon which the lien is to come into existence and continue; and in case of personal property the lien is dependent upon possession and cannot be obtained by the filing of notice. Elk Creek Lbr. Co. v. Hamby, 84 F. (2d) 144, 147.

V. APPLICATION TO PUBLIC CONSTRUCTIONS.

Not Applicable to Public Buildings, etc.—The lien laws were not intended to be so construed as to embarrass property devoted, by the very terms of the contract, to a public purpose, and to be used by the sovereign State of any public or quasi public corporation in the exercise of its delegated sovereign powers. McNeal Pipe, etc., Co. v. Howland, etc., Water Co., 111 N. C. 615, 627, 16 S. E. 857.

The rights of laborers and materialmen to acquire liens against the property of the owner for work done upon it and for material furnished to the contractor in the erection of his building, etc., do not rest by common law but strictly by statute, and the provisions of the statute must be followed for its enforcement; and where the property is not subject to this lien, such as public buildings, etc., no duty or obligation is imposed upon the owner in respect to such claimants. Noland Co. v. Board, 190 N. C. 250, 129 S. E. 577.

Same—Courthouse.—A courthouse cannot be made subject to any lien for labor materials. Snow v. Board, 112 N. C. 335, 17 S. E. 176; Pratt Lumber Co. v. Gill Co., 278 Fed. 783, 787.

Same—Schools.—A building used for graded school purposes is a public building upon which no lien can be acquired, except with legislative sanction. Gastonia v. McEntie-Peterson, etc., Co., 131 N. C. 363, 42 S. E. 858; Snow v. Board, 112 N. C. 335, 17 S. E. 176; Morgantown Hardware Co. v. Morgantown Graded Schools, 151 N. C. 507, 66 S. E. 583.

Same—Highways.—One contracting to construct a highway has, under this section, no lien on the highway; nor have the subcontractors, laborers or materialmen. Pratt Lumber Co. v. Gill Co., 278 Fed. 783.

Same—Reason of the Rule.—The reason upon which the courts hold that the statutory lien given contractors, subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers upon buildings or other improvements upon real property for work, material, and labor does not extend or apply to public buildings is that such buildings, being held for public governmental purposes, cannot be sold under execution or other final process, and this reason applies with peculiar force to materials furnished or labor performed in the construction or repair of Public highways. Pratt Lumber Co. v. Gill Co., 278 Fed. 783, 788.

VI. APPLICATION TO RAILROADS.

Not Applicable to Railroads.—This section does not apply to railroads. Tommey v. Spartanburg, etc., R. Co., 7 Fed. 429, 433. This conclusion is supported by the intimation of the Supreme Court in Whitaker v. Smith, 81 N. C. 340. Id. But see Dunavant v. Caldwell, etc., R. Co., 122 N. C. 999, 29 S. E. 837, where it was held that where a contractor, who does work or furnishes materials for the construction of a railroad, is entitled to file a lien on the property of the company. See also sec. 44-13 as to the remedy of a laborer for a railroad contractor.

The Supreme Court of Iowa in Nelson v. R. R. Co. * * * construing a statute which resembles this section held that a railway was not a building within the meaning of their mechanic's lien law. Tommey v. Spartanburg, etc., R. Co., 7 Fed. 429, 433.

VII. WAIVER OF LIEN, HOMESTEAD, AND MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

Waiver of the Lien.—In an action brought to subject a vessel to a lien for materials furnished in its construction, it was found that, at or before the filing of the notice of lien, the plaintiff assented to a sale which was made to third parties and agreed to accept three notes secured by a second mortgage on the vessel as security. It was held that such agreement was a waiver of the lien, and the lienor was estopped to enforce his demand against the purchaser. Kornegay v. Styron, 105 N. C. 14, 11 S. E. 153.

As to whether one furnishing coal to a corporation used in the manufacture of its cotton products can claim his lien on the facts of this case, under the provisions of this section is a quaere, But his failure to enforce his asserted lien under the provisions of sec. 44-43, deprives him of whatever right thereto he may have had. Norfleet v. Tarboro Cotton Factory, 172 N. C. 833, 89 S. E. 785.

The homestead right is not affected by a lien for materials furnished and used in improvements upon land covered by homestead, and a statute which gives such lien is unconstitutional. Cumming v. Bloodworth, 87 N. C. 83. See also, Broyhill v. Gaither, 119 N. C. 443, 26 S. E. 31.

Priority of Homestead over Material Lien.—The "material lien" is by virtue of the statute only, and does not come under the constitutional priority given to the "mechanic's lien for work done on the premises" over the homestead exemption. Cumming v. Bloodworth, 87 N. C. 83; Broyhill v. Gaither, 119 N. C. 443, 445, 26 S. E. 31.

Contractor Agent of Owner—Rights of Materialman.—Where one has furnished the owner at the request of the contractor materials to be used in his building, and by the terms of the written contract the contractor is the agent of the owner for that purpose, the one so furnishing the material may acquire and enforce his lien upon the building, under the provisions of this section and secs. 44-38 and 44-39. North Carolina Lumber Co. v. Spear Motor Co., 192 N. C. 377, 135 S. E. 115.

Supervision by an architect of work done upon a building is not the character of work which falls within the intent of this section. Stephens v. Hicks, 156 N. C. 239, 72 S. E. 313.

Work Done, Materials Furnished under the Same Contract.—Where the work done on a house and furnishing the material were all in the same contract, which was entire and indivisible, the contractor is entitled to a lien for the whole amount. Isler v. Dixon, 140 N. C. 529, 53 S. E. 348.

Claim of Contractor to Proceeds of Insurance Policy.—The holder of a mechanic's lien has no claim on the proceeds of insurance policies taken out by the owner and payable to himself or to a mortgagee. Healey Ice Mach. Co. v. Green, 181 Fed. 890.

Fraudulent Misrepresentation that All Bills Paid.—In a prosecution for obtaining a mortgage loan by misrepresenting that bills for all labor and materials for the renovation of the building on the premises had been paid, such misrepresentation is material in view of the statutory liens of laborers and materials furnishers, and the fact that the mortgagee had the property appraised and obtained an attorney's certificate of title does not show that the mortgagee did not rely upon the misrepresentation, there being no notice of any unpaid bills for labor and materials on file of public record and there being testimony of the president of the mortgagee that it relied upon the misrepresentation. State v. Hawley, 220 N. C. 113, 16 S. E. (2d) 705.

§ 44-2. On personal property repaired. — Any mechanic or artisan who makes, alters or repairs any article of personal property at the request of the owner or legal possessor of such property has a lien on such property so made, altered or repaired for his just and reasonable charge for his work done and material furnished, and may hold and retain possession of the same until such just and reasonable charges are paid; and if not paid for within thirty days, if it does not exceed fifty dollars or within ninety days if over fifty dollars, after the work was done, such mechanic or artisan may proceed to sell the property so made, altered or repaired at public auction, by giving two weeks public notice of such sale by advertising in some newspaper in the county in which the work may have been done, or if there is no such newspaper, then by posting up notice of such sale in three of the most public places in the county, town or city in which the work was done, and the proceeds of the said sale shall be applied first to the discharge of the said lien and the expenses and costs of keeping and selling such property, and the remainder, if any, shall be paid over to the owner thereof. (Rev., s. 2017; Code, s. 1783; 1869-70, c. 206, s. 3; C. S. 2435.)

Cross Reference.—As to requirement that the Commissioner of revenue be given thirty days' notice of sale of a motor vehicle under a mechanic's or storage lien, see §§ 20-77, subsec. (c) and 20-114, subsec. (c).

In General.—This section is within the police power of the State and in addition to the common-law lien given artisans on personal property repaired by them, while in their possession, for the reasonable value of the repairs, provides for its enforcement by foreclosure in accordance with its stated terms. Johnson v. Yates, 183 N. C. 24, 110 S. E. 603.

To Whom Section Applies.—The requirement of this section, that the lien in favor of the artisan making repairs on personal property shall attach under the provisions of the statute, only where such repairs are made at the instance of the owner "or the legal possessor of the property," includes within its terms all persons whose authorized possession is of such character as to make reasonable repairs necessary to the proper use of the property, and which were evidently in the contemplation of the parties. Johnson v. Yates, 183 N. C. 24, 110 S. E. 603.

Same—Vendee of Car with Mortgage to Vendor.—Where the vendor of an automobile takes a purchase-money mortgage and transfers the possession to the vendee for an indefinite period, it is with the implied authority in the vendee that he may use the machine and keep it in such reasonable and just repair as the use will require; and where, at the vendee's instance, a mechanic has repaired the same, his reasonable charge for such repairs creates a lien on the automobile, retained in his possession, superior to that of the vendor's mortgage. Johnson v. Yates, 183 N. C. 24, 110 S. E. 630.

Retention of Possession Essential—At Common Law.—At common law where a laborer repaired a wagon and surrendered it to the owner before payment, the laborer has no lien. Possession is absolutely necessary to the existence of the lien. Tedder v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 124 N. C. 342, 32 S. E. 714; McDougall v. Crapon, 95 N. C. 292.

Same—Under this Section.—The lien on personal property given by this section applies when possession is retained by the mechanic. Glazener v. Gloucester Lumber Co., 167 N. C. 676, 83 S. E. 696. If the mechanic or artisan surrenders possession of the property, he loses his lien. Tedder v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 124 N. C. 342, 344, 32 S. E. 714; Block v. Dowd, 120 N. C. 402, 27 S. E. 129; McDougall v. Crapon, 95 N. C. 292. Glazener v. Gloucester Lumber Co., 167 N. C. 676, 678, 83 S. E. 696; Elk Creek Lbr. Co. v. Hamby, 84 F. (2d) 144, 147.

Thus where a wagon was repaired by a laborer, who surrendered it to the owner before payment was made, it was held that the laborer had no lien on the wagon, either at common law or under the statute for his work done and materials furnished in making the repairs. McDougall v. Crapon, 95 N. C. 292.

The mechanic or artisan may exercise his common law right to retain the property, and this section, recognizing the right, authorizes him to advertise and sell and pay himself, after the specified period of possession. It is a necessary consequence that the lien is lost when possession is given up to the owner, as well as the statutory method of enforcing it, since these rights are incident to and dependent on possession, both at common law and under the provisions of this section. "The pledgee," in the words of a recent author, "certainly loses the benefit of his security, whenever, by a complete out and out delivering back to the pledgor, he voluntarily places the property beyond his own reach." Schou. Pers. Prop., 515; McDougall v. Crapon, 95 N. C. 292, 296.

Where a mechanic repairs certain personal property at the request of the lessee, and without request or knowledge on the part of the owner, and the mechanic never has possession of the property, but possession is returned to the owner by the lessee upon the termination of the lease, the mechanic may not hold the owner liable for the reasonable value of the repairs, this section being applicable only where the mechanic retains possession of the property. Broadfoot Iron Works v. Bugg, 208 N. C. 284, 180 S. E. 62.

Where the purchaser of an automobile gives the seller a title-retaining contract to secure the balance of the purchase price, and thereafter gives a second lien on the car to another, and later the second lienor takes possession from the purchaser without legal process and has the car repaired, the second lienor is not the owner or legal possessor of the car within the intent and meaning of this section, and the one making the repairs obtains no lien therefor under the statute and is not entitled to possession as against the first lienor. Willis v. Taylor, 201 N. C. 467, 160 S. E. 487.

Possession of Automobile Obtained from Mechanic by Fraudulent Representations.—Under the common law and the provisions of this section, one who repairs personal property loses his lien thereon by voluntarily surrendering possession to the owner, but where an automobile has been repaired and the artisan or mechanic is induced to part with possession upon false and fraudulent representations made by the owner that his check for the payment of the repairs was good and that he had sufficient funds in the bank for its payment, and the mechanic relies thereon and surrenders possession of the car, he does not do so voluntarily and unconditionally within the intent and meaning of the statute, and the mechanic does not lose his lien for the value of the repairs done by him. Reich v. Triplett, 199 N. C. 678, 155 S. E. 573.

Filing Notice Not Required.—This section is a self-executing enactment, conferring upon the mechanic or artisan the means of making his debt out of the property by his own act, in selling after thirty days' retention without the intervention of judicial proceeding, either in the superior court or that of a justice of the peace; and section 44-39, which, for the preservation of the lien, requires notice of it to be filed within six months after completing the labor, cannot have been intended for a case in which as under this section a resort to any court is unnecessary, and a complete and efficient measure of relief is committed to, and may be obtained by, the party's own act. McDougall v. Crapon, 95 N. C. 292, 295.

The enactments as to filing notice must have been intended for cases where possession is not in the mechanic or artisan, and where an action is necessary for his relief. Id.

Lien on Timber Manufactured into Lumber, etc.—Under this section, one who cuts timber and manufactures it into lumber for a corporation before a receiver is appointed therefor has the right to retain the possession of such lumber until his lien is discharged by payment. Huntsman Bros. & Co. v. Linville River Lumber Co., 122 N. C. 583, 29 S. E. 838. See next section.

One who enters into a contract to cut, haul and raft logs after the standing timber upon lands has been felled for the purpose, has, while the logs are in his possession, a lien thereon for the services thus performed, under the provisions of this section, the timber after its severance from the land being regarded as personalty. Thomas v. Merrill, 169 N. C. 623, 86 S. E. 593. See next section.

Sale Restrained Where Mechanic's Claim Controverted.—Where one, who has the right under this section to retain possession of and to sell personal property for the purpose of defraying his charges, is made a party to an action in the nature of a creditor's bill against the owner in which the nature and amount of claimant's debt are in dispute, he will be restrained from making a sale of the property until such contentions are settled. Huntsman Bros. & Co. v. Linville River Lumber Co., 122 N. C. 583, 29 S. E. 838.

Priority of Lien.—The lien created by this section is superior to a vendor's lien, or to a mortgage lien. Johnson v. Yates, 183 N. C. 24, 110 S. E. 603.

A mechanic's lien is given preference under this section to a mortgage lien though the latter be prior in point of time. Johnson v. Yates, 183 N. C. 24, 110 S. E. 603. For a note upon this case, see 1 N. C. Law Rev. 127 where the reasons of holding are discussed.

This conclusion arrived at by the court is analogous to liens in admiralty where every hypothecation of the vessel which is effected to preserve it from deterioration or loss is held to be superior to other liens prior in point of time, on the theory that except for such preservation the prior lien would be worthless. Ed. Note.

Cited in Goodrich Silvertown Stores v. Caesar, 214 N. C. 85, 197 S. E. 698.

§ 44-3. Laborer's lien on lumber and its products.—Every person doing the work of logging or of cutting or sawing logs into lumber, or of getting out wood pulp, acid wood or tan bark, has a lien upon the said logs or lumber for the amount of wages due him, and the said lien shall have priority over all other claims or liens upon said lumber, except as against a purchaser for full value and without notice thereof: Provided, any such laborer whose wages for thirty or less number of days performed are due and unpaid shall file notice of such claim before the nearest justice of the peace in the county in which said work has been done, stating the number of days of labor performed, the price per day, and the place where the lumber is situate, and the person for whom said labor was performed, which said statement shall be signed by the said laborer or his attorney, and the said laborer shall also give to the owner thereof, within five days after the lien has been filed with the justice of the peace, as aforesaid, a copy of said notice as filed with the said justice of the peace. If the owner cannot be located, then notice shall be given by attaching said notice on the logs or lumber, wood pulp, acid wood or tan bark upon which the labor sued for was performed, and any person buying said lumber or logs, wood pulp, acid wood or tan bark after such notice has been filed with the nearest justice of the peace, shall be deemed to have bought the same with notice thereof, but no action shall be maintained against the owner of said logs or lumber, wood pulp, acid wood or tan bark or the purchaser thereof under the provisions of this section unless same is commenced within thirty days after notice is filed with the justice of the peace by such laborer, as above provided. (1913, c. 150, s. 6; 1929, c. 69; C. S. 2436.)

Local Modification.—Avery, Mitchell, Yancey: 1941, c. 129.

Editor's Note.—The Act of 1929 added the word "logging" in the second line and "logs" in the third line of this section.

Under the provision of this section, prior to the amendment of 1929, persons who cut and logged timber to a mill under a contract to do so at a fixed price were not entitled to a lien for such services, this interpretation of this section being strengthened by the fact that the amendment of 1929 included within the meaning of the statute those who were engaged in logging to the mill. Graves v. Dockery, 200 N. C. 317, 156 S. E. 506.

Reason for Enactment of Section.—It was because a lien could not be obtained for labor performed in the manufacture of lumber unless the party claiming it retained possession, that the Legislature enacted this section. Elk Creek Lbr. Co. v. Hamby, 84 F. (2d) 144, 147.

Work Done Directly by Claimant in Betterment of Property.—Under this section the work must have been done directly by the claimant in betterment of the property upon which the lien is alleged to rest, thus one who aided in making the lumber by taking the boards from the saw as they were cut, is entitled to a lien, but one who is employed in the blacksmith shop as repairer of cars used as part of the plant, and one, who worked on the car track and repaired the bridges are not so entitled. Thomas v. Merrill, 169 N. C. 623, 627, 86 S. E. 593.

Compliance with Statutory Requirements Necessary. — In an action to establish a laborer's lien upon manufactured lumber, under the provisions of this section, the plaintiff must show compliance with the various statutory requisites; and a charge as to notice that the jury should return a verdict for the plaintiff should they find that he attached "the notice to the lumber" on the defendant's yard, is deficient and erroneous in leaving out the question as to whether the defendant had been served with a copy of the claim within five days after filing the lien with the justice of the peace, or that he could not be found. Bryson v. Gennett Lumber Co., 171 N. C. 700, 89 S. E. 26.

Laborer Has No Lien unless He Complies with Section or Retains Possession.—A laborer who engages in the manufacture of lumber has a lien thereon under section 44-2, for his just and reasonable charges so long as he retains possession of the lumber. A laborer, even though he does not retain possession, is entitled to a lien for wages for not exceeding thirty days if he gives the notice required by this section. But he obtains no lien unless he complies with this section or unless he retains possession so that he may assert a lien under § 44-2. Elk Creek Lbr. Co. v. Hamby, 84 F. (2d) 144, 147.

Preferred Lien Only When Section Strictly Complied with.—This section gives to laborers engaged in logging, sawing, etc., a lien on the lumber of their manufacture, which is superior to all other claims thereon, except that of a purchaser for value without notice. It gives this preferred lien, however, only for the wages of not exceeding thirty days labor, and only on condition that the provisions of this section be strictly complied with. Elk Creek Lbr. Co. v. Hamby, 84 F. (2d) 144, 146.

Right of Employee of Contractor against the Owner. — Where a laborer in the manufacture of lumber employs another laborer to assist him in his work, and the latter seeks to enforce the lien given by this section, for the value of the work he has done, it must be made to appear that the owner owed his own contractor, for the lien claimed can only be enforced to that extent, the object of the statute being to protect the laborer against any transfer of the lumber by the owner, who while indebted to his contractor, and insolvent, might otherwise pass the title to a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice of the lien. Bryson v. Gennett Lumber Co., 171 N. C. 700, 89 S. E. 26.

Repairing Railroad Track or Equipment. — Under contract, one of the defendants agreed to operate a large lumber plant, including a railroad equipment for handling the logs owned by the other defendant, and assumed the payment of all employees, several of whom filed liens against logs and lumber sawed, in a justice's court, for the nonpayment of wages. It was held that work done in repairing the track, equipment, etc., was not in contemplation of this section, so as to give those performing these services a lien on the logs and lumber used or manufactured by the plant; nor was a lien upon the plant held, for the material had not been used in its construction as betterments. Glazener v. Gloucester Lumber Co., 167 N. C. 676, 83 S. E. 696.

Priority of Lien.—The lien given to the person "doing the work of cutting or sawing logs into lumber," etc., by this section is superior to the lien given to the contractor therefor, or any other person. Glazener v. Gloucester Lumber Co., 167 N. C. 676, 83 S. E. 696.

§ 44-4. Lien for processing certain goods. — All persons, firms, partnerships and corporations engaged in the business of finishing, bleaching, mercerizing, manufacturing, dyeing, weighing and printing or otherwise processing cotton, wool, silk, artificial silk or goods of which cotton, wool, silk, or artificial silk forms a component part, shall be entitled to a lien upon the property and goods of others, which may come into their possession for work, labor, and materials furnished in any of said processing and said lien shall extend to any unpaid balance on account for work, labor and materials furnished in the course of any of said processing in respect to any of said goods of the same owner whereof the lienor's possession is terminated. The word "owner", as used in this and the following sections shall include a factor, consignee, or other agent entrusted with the possession of the goods held under said lien or with the bill of lading consigning the same to him with authority to sell the same or to deliver them to the lienor for the purpose of being processed. (1931, c. 48, s. 1.)

§ 44-5. Sale of goods at public auction. — If any part of the amount for which goods are held under said lien remains unpaid for a period of sixty days after the earliest item of said amount became due and payable the lienor may sell such goods at public auction first publishing a notice of the time and place of said sale once in each of two successive weeks in a newspaper published in the town, if any, otherwise in the county, in which the said goods are situated, or if no newspaper is published in said county, then in a newspaper published in an adjoining county and having general circulation in the county where the sale is to take place, and at the court house door, the last publication not to be less than five days prior to the sale, and also giving five days' notice of said sale by posting in five or more public places in said county, one whereof shall be in the town or city ward in which said goods are situated, and, if the residence or past address of owner of said goods is known or can be established, sending by registered mail a copy of said notice to said owner at said address at least five days before the date of sale: Provided, that if said goods are readily divisible no more thereof shall be so sold than is necessary to discharge the underlying indebtedness and to cover the expenses of the sale. The proceeds of sale shall be applied to payment of said indebtedness and said expenses, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the owner or person entitled thereto. The remedy herein provided to enforce said lien shall be in addition to any other provided by law. (1931, c. 48, s. 2; 1943, c. 543.)

Editor's Note.—The 1943 amendment inserted the provision as to a newspaper published in an adjoining county.

Art. 2. Subcontractors', etc., Liens and Rights against Owners.

§ 44-6. Lien given subcontractors, etc., on real estate.—All subcontractors and laborers who are employed to furnish or who do furnish labor or material for the building, repairing or altering any house or other improvement on real estate, have a lien on said house and real estate for the amount of such labor done or material furnished, which lien shall be preferred to the mechanics' lien now provided by law, when notice thereof shall be given as hereinafter provided, which may be enforced as other liens in this chapter, except where it is otherwise provided; but the sum total of all the liens due subcontractors and material men shall not exceed the amount due the original contractor at the time of notice given. (Rev., s. 2019; Code, ss. 1801, 1803; 1880, c. 44, ss. 1, 3; C. S. 2437.)

In General.—Soon after the enactment of section 44-1 et seq., it was held by the Supreme Court that no right to a lien was conferred by the statute unless there was a contract, express or implied, with the owner, creating the relation of creditor and debtor (Wilkie v. Bray, 71 N. C. 205), and as a result, subcontractors were excluded from its benefits, because they had no express contract with the owner, and none could be implied from the use of the materials as they were furnished to the contractor, and under the express contract between him and the owner. This led to the enactment of this and the following sections relative to the subcontractor's lien. Morganton Mfg., etc., Co. v. Andrews, 165 N. C. 285, 292, 81 S. E. 418.

The injustice of permitting the labor and material of one man to be used to enhance the value of the property of another without compensation, and also that the owner ought not to be required to pay the contractor and then have to pay for labor and material when he had not agreed to do so, led to the enactment of this and the following sections in an effort to adjust the rights of the parties along lines that would be just to both. Charlotte Pipe, etc., Co. v. Southern Aluminum Co., 172 N. C. 704, 706, 90 S. E. 923.

Definition of Subcontractor. — Mr. Phillips in his book on Mechanics' Liens, sec. 44, describes a subcontractor: "One who has entered into a contract, express or implied, for the performance of an act with the person who has already contracted for its performance." And Mr. Kalland in his book on the same subject, sec. 3, uses language of similar import, and says: "Although the original contractor may sublet his entire contract, and neither himself performs labor or furnishes materials in a literal sense, yet he will be entitled to a lien, for each subcontractor is an agent for the performance of a portion of the entire contract, and the act of the agent is in law the act of his principal." Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 605, 611, 8 S. E. 366.

Persons employed by an agent of the principal contractor to perform certain work on the premises may not under this section recover of the owner for the value of such labor merely upon a showing that they performed the work and that the owner received the benefit thereof. Price v. Asheville Gas Co., 207 N. C. 796, 178 S. E. 567.

Contractor's Lien Though Subordinated, Not Lost. — It is quite manifest that our statute gives to the contractor, under whom his employees and agents work, the lien provided in section 44-1 and though subordinated to the lien of the latter under this section, and only displaced when its enforcement would be prejudicial to them, when these are paid the contractor's lien becomes absolute and unconditional. Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 605, 610, 8 S. E. 366.

Contractor's Lien Not Superseded. — The lien given by this section was not intended to supersede the lien of the contractor, for it in direct terms gives the lien in favor of subcontractors, laborers, and materialmen a preference, "the mechanic's lien now provided by law," and provides that when notice is given, the aggregate of such liens shall not exceed the amount then due the original contractor. The legislation is intended to extend the remedy to those who work or furnish materials from which the owner derives a benefit in the improvement of his property, even where there are no contract relations between them and the owner, and enables them to secure the payment of what is due them, indebtedness due from the debtor to the contractor. Morganton Mfg., etc., Co. v. Andrews, 165 N. C. 285, 293, 81 S. E. 418; Lester v. Houston, 101 N. C. 605, 8 S. E. 366.

Relation of Debtor and Creditor between the Owner and the Subcontractor.—It is declared in many cases that the basis for mechanics' liens is the relation of creditor and debtor between the owner and sub-contractor and materialmen, Boone v. Chatfield, 118 N. C. 916, 24 S. E. 745; Weathers v. Borders, 124 N. C. 610, 32 S. E. 881; Charlotte Pipe, etc., Co. v. Southern Aluminum Co., 172 N. C. 704, 90 S. E. 923, and that the general principle of the lien laws is that the relation of debtor and creditor must exist and that there can be no lien without a debt.

It is evident that the statute does not in express terms create this relation between these parties and that such a relation must be inferred by implication. The basis of such implication may be traced to the fact that the contractor is obliged or intended to deal with the subcontractor and materialmen in doing work and securing materials, and that the principal contractor is an agent of the owner for the purpose of creating valid debts. 3 N. C. Law Rev. 64.

Whatever may be the basis of the inference that there exists the relation of debtor and creditor between the owner and the subcontractor, it is apparent that this section does not, even by implication, create a relationship of debtor and creditor except as to the extent of liens acquired in accordance with its provisions. Morganton Hdw. Co. v. Morganton Graded Schools, 151 N. C. 507, 66 S. E. 583. Ed. Note.

No privity of contract between the owner and the subcontractor is established by this section, so as to enable the former to sue the latter for a debt; but it merely confers upon the materialman a lien upon the property, if the property is subject to lien, but not if he fails to acquire a lien by the laches of himself or of the contractor, whose negligence will be imputed to him when he fails to protect his own interests in the way prescribed by the statute. Morganton Hdw. Co. v. Morganton Graded Schools, 151 N. C. 507, 511, 66 S. E. 583.

Statute Furnishes Double Security. — The statute (this section and section 44-11) furnishes a double security to those furnishing material, etc., to the contractor and who give the statutory notice to the owner in giving them a lien upon the property if enforced by suit within six months, and, also, an interest in the trust funds in the hands of the owner and due to the contractor, which funds are to be distributed pro rata among the claimants thereto entitled, the latter security not being in strictness a lien, but a right to have an accounting in an ordinary civil action and judgment for the amount due by the owner to the contractor. Charlotte Pipe, etc., Co. v. Southern Aluminum Co., 172 N. C. 704, 90 S. E. 923.

Subcontractor Substituted to the Rights of Contractor. — Where the lien arises under the provisions of this section, it does so by substituting the claimant to the rights of the contractor, enforceable against any and all sums which may be due from the owner at the time of notice given or which are subsequently earned under the terms and stipulations of the contract. In well-considered cases it is said to amount to an assignment pro tanto of the amount due or to become due from the owner to the principal contractor, and this regardless of the state of the account between the principal contractor and the subcontractor, who may be the debtor of the claimant. Atlas Powder Co. v. Denton, 176 N. C. 426, 432, 97 S. E. 372.

Lien Enforceable though Principal Contractors' Contract Not Completed.—A subcontractor may enforce his lien for labor or materials, as prescribed by this and the following sections, against the owner of the property though the contract with the principal contractor has not been completed, or even if it has been abandoned. Lookout Lumber Co. v. Mansion Hotel, etc., R. Co., 109 N. C. 658, 14 S. E. 35.

Where the furnisher of material to a subcontractor has notified the owner and perfected his lien as required by this section and section 44-7 and it appears by admission in the pleadings in an action to enforce the lien that the owner of the building is still indebted, to the principal contractor in a sufficient sum, this sum is applicable to the plaintiff's demand regardless of the state of accounts between the contractor and the subcontractor. Borden Brick, etc., Co. v. Pulley, 168 N. C. 371, 84 S. E. 513; Powell v. King Lumber Co., 168 N. C. 632, 84 S. E. 1032.

Time and How Subcontractors' Right Determined.—The right of one, who furnishes materials to a subcontractor, to a lien upon the building does not depend upon the state of the account between the contractor and the subcontractor, but upon the amount due the contractor by the owner at the time of the proper filing of the notice in the manner and form required. Atlas Powder Co. v. Denton, 176 N. C. 426, 97 S. E. 372.

Amount Due from Owner a Trust Fund for Subcontractor. —The amount due the contractor and subject to the claims of materialmen who have filed their statutory notice is not a debt due by the owner to the materialmen in the ordinary sense, but a fund held in trust for them strictly arising from the operation of the statute, in conformity with its terms; and the statute imposes no duty upon the owner when the materialmen have not filed the required notice or acquired their lien accordingly. Charlotte Pipe, etc., Co. v. Southern Aluminum Co., 172 N. C. 704, 90 S. E. 923.

Priority over Subsequent Liens.—The lien of the subcontractor, when duly filed, has precedence over all other liens attaching to the property subsequent to the time the work was commenced or the material furnished. Lookout Lumber Co. v. Mansion Hotel, etc., R. Co., 109 N. C. 658, 14 S. E. 35.

Elements Essential to Recovery.—To recover under this section, plaintiff must prove: (1) his subcontract; (2) work done and labor performed in fulfillment thereof; (3) a balance due; (4) notice to the owner as required by statute prior to payment of the contract price to the principal contractor; and (5) a balance due the contractor. Upon such showing the law requires the owner to apply the unexpended contract price due the contractor to the payment of amounts due subcontractors and materialmen of whose claims the owner has received notice, pro rata if necessary. Schnepp v. Richardson, 222 N. C. 228, 22 S. E. (2d) 555.

The principal contractor is a necessary party to an action to enforce the lien of a subcontractor, but a trustee in a conveyance subject to the lien is not an essential party. Lookout Lumber Co. v. Mansion Hotel, etc., R. Co., 109 N. C. 658, 14 S. E. 35.

No Lien on Public Buildings.—Neither by the enforcement of a lien, nor by anything in the nature of an equitable proceeding, nor directly by sale under execution, was it the intent of the Legislature to subject one of its public corporations, organized as necessary to the administration of its governmental affairs, to the privation or loss of its buildings for public school purposes. Morganton Hdw. Co. v. Morganton Graded Schools, 151 N. C. 507, 66 S. E. 583.

No Lien on Highway.—Under this section subcontractors and materialmen have no lien upon a highway they have constructed. Pratt Lumber Co. v. Gill Co., 278 Fed. 783.

Liability of Municipality—No Lien against It.—Though no lien can be filed against a municipality, yet it will be liable to laborers and materialmen, and for labor done and material furnished to the extent of any balance due the contractor and unpaid at the time of the notice. Scheflow v. Pierce, 176 N. C. 91, 93, 97 S. E. 167. See section 44-14.

Estoppel to Assert Lien under Section 44-1.—By electing to assert a lien as a subcontractor under this section, plaintiff is estopped from thereafter asserting a lien as a contractor or material furnisher under § 44-1, and plaintiff is entitled to recover of defendant only the amount due the contractor by the owner on the date notice was given as a subcontractor or material furnisher. Doggett Lbr. Co. v. Perry, 212 N. C. 713, 194 S. E. 475.

When plaintiff is estopped by its election in asserting a lien under this section, from asserting a lien under § 44-1, and its action brought solely under § 44-1 is dismissed as of nonsuit because of such election, plaintiff's remedy is by instituting another action to recover for materials furnished the contractor and used in the construction of the building under this section. Doggett Lbr. Co. v. Perry, 213 N. C. 533, 196 S. E. 831.

Cited in Piedmont Electric Co. v. Vance, etc., Electric Co., 197 N. C. 495, 149 S. E. 858.

Art. 3. Liens on Vessels.

§ 44-15. For towage and for supplies at home port. — Every vessel, boat, scow, lighter, flat raft or other water craft is subject to a lien for the payment of towage done by any steamboat or tugboat; and every vessel and boat is subject to a lien for debts due for materials and supplies furnished to such vessel or boat in her home port. These liens shall be filed and enforced as is provided for other liens. (Rev., s. 2040; 1893, c. 357; 1909, c. 147; C. S. 2446.)

Engine as "Material Furnished." — Under this section, which gives a lien on a vessel for all debts contracted for work done on the same or material furnished, one who furnished an engine to be installed in a gas boat, relying on the credit of the vessel, is entitled to a lien therefor as "material," on compliance with the statute as to recording; and it is immaterial that by the contract it reserved title to the engine until paid for. The Pearl, 189 Fed. 540.

§ 44-16. For labor in loading and unloading.— Every vessel, her tackle, apparel and furniture, is subject to a lien for all labor done by contractors or others in loading or discharging the cargo of such vessel, and also for all labor done by any subcontractor or laborer employed in discharging or loading any such vessel, when such labor is done under contract with a contractor or stevedore who may be employed by the master, agent or owner of such vessel. (Rev., s. 2041; Code, s. 1804; 1881, c. 356, s. 1; C. S. 2447.)

Miscellaneous Provisions.

§ 55-136. Wages for two months lien on assets. —In case of the insolvency of a corporation, partnership or individual, all persons doing labor or service of whatever character in its regular employment have a lien upon the assets thereof for the amount of wages due to them for all labor, work, and services rendered within two months next preceding the date when proceedings in insolvency were actually instituted and begun against the corporation, partnership or individual, which lien is prior to all other liens that can be acquired against such assets: Provided, that the lien created by this section shall not apply to multiple unit dwellings, apartment houses, or other buildings for family occupancy except as to labor performed on the premises upon which the lien is claimed. This section shall not apply to any single unit family dwelling. (Rev., s. 1206; 1901, c. 2, s. 87; 1937, c. 223; 1943, c. 501; C. S. 1197.)

Editor's Note.—The 1937 amendment inserted the words "partnership or individual" twice in this section. Before this amendment it had been held that the section did not apply to the employee of an insolvent individual but only to the employee of an insolvent corporation. See In re Reade, 206 N. C. 331, 173 S. E. 342.

The 1943 amendment added the proviso.

An Ancillary Remedy.—This section, giving to laborers of insolvent corporations a specific lien upon the assets of the company for two months' wages at least, was not intended to militate against rights that they might otherwise have under the existing law for debts due them, but gives them a special lien for certain wages. Union Trust Co. v. Southern Sawmills, etc., Co., 106 Fed. 193, 204.

Clear Expression of Intent.—The language used in this section is admirably fitted to give expression to the legislative intent with respect to the favored class of creditors to which it undertakes to accord preferential treatment in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent corporation, and small latitude is afforded for speculation. The favored creditors are "laborers and workmen and all persons doing labor or service of whatever character in the regular employment of certain corporations." Phoenix Iron Co. v. Roanoke Bridge Co., 169 N. C. 512, 513, 86 S. E. 184.

Prior Lien Holders Protected.—Property acquired by a private corporation subject to a valid and registered mortgage does not become an asset of the corporation except as subject to the prior lien; and the lien given to laborers on the assets of an insolvent corporation for work done under the conditions stated in this section cannot affect the vested rights obtained by the prior lien holders. Roberts v. Bowen Mfg. Co., 169 N. C. 27, 85 S. E. 45.

When Mortgagee Takes Subject to Laborer's Lien.—One who takes a mortgage upon corporation property for money loaned to operate it or to secure other debt does so with the knowledge that the lien of his mortgage is subject to be displaced in favor of laborers' liens . . . in case of insolvency. Humphrey Bros. v. Buell-Crocker Lbr. Co., 174 N. C. 514, 93 S. E. 971.

Contractor Not Included.—A contractor, furnishing his own teams, labor, etc., in hauling materials for the building of a bridge by a corporation, which has since become insolvent, within the two months next preceding the date of the institution of the proceedings in insolvency, is not engaged in doing labor or performing "service of whatever character" within the meaning of this section. Phoenix Iron Co. v. Roanoke Bridge Co., 169 N. C. 512, 86 S. E. 184.

Agent Having Authority to Deduct Salary.—Under this section an agent with authority to make collections and to deduct his salary and expenses from the sums collected, has no lien for claims for salary and expenses owing before his appointment to the position. Cummer Lumber Co. v. Seminole Phosphate Co., 189 N. C. 206, 126 S. E. 511.

Notice Need Not Be Filed.—Under this section the laborer is not required to file a notice of his claim. Walker v. Lumber Co., 170 N. C. 460, 87 S. E. 331.

Service after Receivership.—This section is not intended to destroy the lien for such wages and services performed after the company goes into the hands of a receiver. The word "within" means "subsequent," that is, that after 60 days prior to the insolvency the laborers and workmen shall have a first lien for their wages. Walker v. Lumber Co., 170 N. C. 460, 462, 87 S. E. 331.

§ 60-55. Railroad employees to be paid twice a month.—All persons, firms, companies, corporations, or associations owning, leasing, or operating any railroad or railroads, wholly or partially within this state, shall pay and settle with their employees engaged or employed in shops, round-houses, or repair shops within this state at least twice in each month, which settlements shall not be less than two weeks nor more than three weeks apart, and shall, in such settlements, pay such employees the full amounts due them for their work and services up to the date of the preceding settlement, and such payment shall be made in lawful money of the United States, or by check or cash order redeemable by the maker thereof for its face value in lawful money of the United States upon demand of or presentation by the lawful holder thereof: Provided, this section shall not apply to repair shops where less than ten employees are engaged. (1915, c. 92; C. S. 6558.)

Editor's Note.—This section seems to be the only North Carolina enactment of its kind. 15 N. C. L. Rev. 266.

III. Mines and Quarries.

Art. 1. Operation of Mines and Quarries.

Sec.
74-1. Lessor not held partner of lessee.
74-2. Minors under sixteen not to be employed.
74-3. Operator to furnish timber.
74-4. Unused mines to be fenced.
74-5. Means of ingress and egress provided.
74-6. Hoisting engines; how operated.
74-7. Ventilation.
74-8. Daily examinations; safety lamps.
74-9. Report of ventilation.
74-10. Notice of opening or changing mines given.
74-11. Notice of accidents given.
74-12. Report to inspector.
74-13. Liability for injuries.
74-14. Punishment for violation.
74-15. Commissioner of labor to inspect mines and quarries.

Art. 2. Inspection of Mines and Quarries.

74-16. Inspector to examine mines.
74-17. May enter to make examinations.
74-18. Death by accident investigated.
74-19. Record of examinations.
74-20. Papers to be preserved.
74-21. Inspector to enforce law; counsel furnished.
74-22. Operation enjoined when law violated.
74-23. Report to governor.
74-24. Articles one and two made applicable to quarries.

Art. 3. Waterways Obtained.

74-25. Water and drainage rights obtained.
74-26. The petition, what to contain.
74-27. Appraisers; appointment and duties.
74-28. Confirmation of report; payment of damages; rights of petitioner.
74-29. Registration of report.
74-30. Obstructing mining drains.
74-31. Disposition of waste.

Art. 4. Adjustment of Conflicting Claims.

74-32. Liability for damage for trespass.
74-33. Persons entitled to bring suit.
74-34. Application and order for survey.
74-35. Free access to mine for survey.
74-36. Costs of the survey.

Art. 1. Operation of Mines and Quarries.

§ 74-1. Lessor not held partner of lessee.—No lessor of property, real or personal, for mining purposes, although the lessor may receive an uncertain sum of the proceeds or net profits, or any other consideration, which, though uncertain at first, may afterwards become certain, shall be held as a partner of the lessee; nor shall any of the legal or equitable relations or liabilities of copartners exist between them, unless it is so stipulated in the contract between the lessor and lessee. (Rev., s. 4930; Code, s. 3292; R. C., c. 72; 1830, c. 46; C. S. 6896.)

Cross Reference.—For provision making this article applicable to quarries, see § 74-24.

§ 74-2. Minors under sixteen not to be employed.—No minor under sixteen years of age shall be allowed to work in any mine, and in all cases of minors applying for work the agent of such mine shall see that the provisions of this section are not violated; and the inspector may, when doubt exists as to the age of any person found working in any mine, examine under oath such person and his parents, or other witnesses, as to his age. (Rev., s. 4931; 1897, c. 251, s. 7; 1919, c. 100, s. 6; C. S. 6897.)

§ 74-3. Operator to furnish timber. — The owner, agent, or operator of every coal mine shall keep a supply of timber constantly on hand, and shall deliver the same to the working place of the miner, and no miner shall be held responsible for accident which may occur in the mine where the provisions of this section have not been complied with by the owner, agent, or operator thereof, resulting directly or indirectly from the failure to deliver such timber. (Rev., s. 4932; 1897, c. 251, s. 8; C. S. 6898.)

§ 74-4. Unused mines to be fenced.—All underground entrances to any place not in actual course of working or extension shall be properly fenced across the whole width of such entrance so as to prevent persons from inadvertently entering the same. (Rev., s. 4933; 1897, c. 251, s. 5; C. S. 6899.)

§ 74-5. Means of ingress and egress provided.—No owner or agent of any coal mine worked by shaft shall permit any person to work therein unless there are, to every seam of coal worked in such mine, at least two separate outlets, separated by natural strata of not less than one hundred feet in breadth, by which shafts or outlets distinct means of ingress and egress are always available to the persons employed in the mine; but it is not necessary for the two outlets to belong to the same mine if the persons employed therein have safe, ready, and available means of ingress or egress by not less than two openings. This section shall not apply to opening a new mine while being worked for the purpose of making communications between the two outlets, so long as not more than twenty persons are employed at one time in such mine; neither shall it apply to any mine or part of a mine in which the second outlet has been rendered unavailable by reason of the final robbing of pillars previous to abandonment, as long as not more than twenty persons are employed therein at any one time. The cage or cages and other means of egress shall at all times be available for the persons employed when there is no second outlet. The escapement shafts shall be fitted with safe and available appliances, which shall always be kept in a safe condition, by which the persons employed in the mine may readily escape in case an accident occurs; and in no case shall an air shaft with a ventilating furnace at the bottom be construed to be an escapement shaft within the meaning of this section. To all other coal mines, whether slopes or drifts, two such openings or outlets must be provided within twelve months after shipments of coal have commenced from such mine; and in case such outlets are not provided as herein stipulated, it shall not be lawful for the agent or owner of such slope or drift to permit more than ten persons to work therein at any one time. (Rev., s. 4934; 1897, c. 251, s. 4; C. S. 6900.)

§ 74-6. Hoisting engines; how operated.—No owner or agent of any mine operated by a shaft or slope shall place in charge of any engine used for lowering into or hoisting out of mines persons employed therein any but experienced, competent, and sober engineers, and no engineers in charge of such engine shall allow any persons except as may be deputed for such purposes by the owner or agent to interfere with it or any part of the machinery, and no person shall interfere or in any way intimidate the engineer in the discharge of his duties, and in no case shall more than six men ride on any cage or car at one time, and no person shall ride upon a loaded cage or car in any shaft or slope. (Rev., s. 4935; 1897, c. 251, s. 6; 1911, c. 183; C. S. 6901.)

§ 74-7. Ventilation. — The owner or agent of any coal mine, whether shaft, slope, or drift, shall provide and maintain for every such mine an amount of ventilation of not less than one hundred cubic feet per minute per person employed in such mine, which shall be circulated and distributed throughout the mine in such a manner as to dilute, render harmless and expel the poisonous and noxious gases from every working place in the mine. No working place shall be driven more than sixty feet in advance of a break-through or airway, and all break-throughs or airways, except those last made near the working places of the mine, shall be closed up by brattice trap-doors, or otherwise, so that the currents of air in circulation in the mine may spread to the interior of the mine when the persons employed in such mine are at work. All mines governed by this chapter shall be provided with artificial means of producing ventilation, such as forcing or suction fans, exhaust steam furnaces, or other contrivances of such capacity and power as to produce and maintain an abundant supply of air, and all mines generating fire damp shall be kept free from standing gas. (Rev., s. 4936; 1897, c. 251, s. 5; C. S. 6902.)

§ 74-8. Daily examinations; safety lamps.—Every working place shall be examined every morning with a safety lamp by a competent person before any workmen are allowed to enter the mine. All safety lamps used in examining mines, or for working therein, shall be the property of the operator of the mine, and a competent person shall be appointed, who shall examine every safety lamp before it is taken into the workings for use, and ascertain it to be clean, safe, and securely locked, and safety lamps shall not be used until they have been so examined and found safe and clean and securely locked, unless permission be first given by the mine foreman to have the lamps used unlocked. No one except the duly authorized person shall have in his possession a key, or any other contrivance, for the purpose of unlocking any safety lamp in any mine where locked lamps are used. No matches or any other apparatus for striking lights shall be taken into any mine, or parts thereof, except under the direction of the mine foreman. (Rev., s. 4937; 1897, c. 251, ss. 5, 6; C. S. 6903.)

§ 74-9. Report of ventilation.—The mine foreman shall measure the ventilation at least once a week, at the inlet and outlet, and also at or near the face of all the entries, and the measurement of air so made shall be noted on blanks furnished by the inspector; and on the first day of each month the mine boss of each mine shall sign one of such blanks, properly filled with the actual measurement, and present the same to the inspector. (Rev., s. 4938; 1897, c. 251, s. 6; C. S. 6904.)

§ 74-10. Notice of opening or changing mines given.—The owner, agent, or manager of any mine shall give notice to the inspector in the following cases: 1. When any working is commenced for the purpose of opening a new shaft, slope, or mine, to which this chapter applies. 2. When any mine is abandoned, or the working thereof discontinued. 3. When the working of any mine is recommenced after an abandonment or discontinuance for a period exceeding three months. 4. When a squeeze or crush, or any other cause or change, may seem to affect the safety of persons employed in the mine, or when fire occurs. (Rev., s. 4939; 1897, c. 251, s. 7; C. S. 6905.)

§ 74-11. Notice of accidents given.—The owner, agent, or manager of every mine shall, within twenty-four hours next after any accident or explosion, whereby loss of life or personal injury may have been occasioned, send notice, in writing, by mail or otherwise, to the inspector, and shall specify in such notice the character and cause of the accident, and the name or names of the persons killed and injured, with the extent and nature of the injuries sustained. When any personal injury of which notice is required to be sent under this section results in the death of the person injured, notice in writing shall be sent to the inspector within twenty-four hours after such death comes to the knowledge of the owner, agent, or manager; and when loss of life occurs in any mine by explosion, or accident, or results from personal injuries so received, the owner, agent, or manager of such mine shall notify the coroner of the county in which such mine is situated, and the coroner shall hold an inquest upon the body of the person whose death has been thus caused, and inquire carefully into the cause thereof, and return a copy of the finding of the jury and all the testimony to the inspector. (Rev., s. 4940; 1897, c. 251, s. 6; C. S. 6906.)

§ 74-12. Report to inspector.—The owner, lessee, or agent in charge of any mine or quarry, or who is engaged in mining or quarrying or producing any mineral whatsoever in this state, shall, on or before the thirtieth day of January in every year, send to the office of the inspector upon blanks to be furnished by him a correct return, specifying with respect to the preceding calendar year the quantity of coal, iron ore, fire-clay, limestone, or other mineral product of such mine or quarry, and the number of persons ordinarily employed in or about such mine or quarry below and above ground, distinguishing the persons and labor below ground and above ground: Provided, that nothing in this section shall require the owner, lessor or agent in charge of any quarry who does not employ more than ten persons to work in any one quarry at the same time, to file or make any of the reports required under this section. (Rev., s. 4941; 1897, c. 251, s. 3; 1939, c. 223, s. 2; C. S. 6907.)

Editor's Note.—Prior to the 1939 amendment the report was required to be made on or before the thirtieth of November.

§ 74-13. Liability for injuries.—For any injury to person or property occasioned by any wilful violation of this chapter, or any wilful failure to comply with its provisions, by any owner, agent, or manager of the mine, a right of action shall accrue to the party injured for any damage he may sustain thereby; and in any case of loss of life by reason of such wilful neglect or failure a right of action shall accrue to the personal representative of the deceased, as in other actions for wrongful death. (Rev., s. 4942; 1897, c. 251, s. 6; C. S. 6908.)

§ 74-14. Punishment for violation.—If any person shall knowingly violate any of the provisions of the law relating to mines or shall do anything whereby the life or health of persons or the security of any mine and machinery is endangered, or if any miner or other person employed in any mine governed by the statutes shall intentionally or wilfully neglect or refuse to securely prop the roof of any working place under his control, or neglect or refuse to obey any orders given by the superintendent of a mine in relation to the security of a mine in the part thereof where he is at work and for fifteen feet back of his working place, or if any miner, workman, or other person shall knowingly injure any water-gauge, barometer, air-course, or brattice, or shall obstruct or throw open any airways, or shall handle or disturb any part of the machinery of the hoisting engine or signaling apparatus or wire connected therewith, or air pipes or fittings, or open a door of the mine and not have the same closed again, whereby danger is produced either to the mine or those that work therein, or shall enter any part of the mine against caution, or shall disobey any order given in pursuance of law, or shall do any wilful act whereby the lives and health of the persons working in the mine or the security of the mine or the machinery thereof is endangered, or if the person having charge of a mine whenever loss of life occurs by accident connected with the machinery of such mine or by explosion shall neglect or refuse to give notice thereof forthwith by mail or otherwise to the inspector and to the coroner of the county in which such mine is situated, or if any such coroner shall neglect or refuse to hold an inquest upon the body of the person whose death has been thus caused, and return a copy of his findings and a copy of all the testimony to the inspector, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction fined not more than fifty dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not more than thirty days, or both. (Rev., s. 3797; 1897, c. 251, s. 8; C. S. 6909.)

Art. 2. Inspection of Mines and Quarries.

§ 74-15. Commissioner of labor to inspect mines and quarries.—The Commissioner of Labor, acting through the director of the division of standards and inspection of the Department of Labor, shall perform the duties of mine inspector as provided in this chapter. (Rev., s. 4943; 1897, c. 251, s. 1; 1931, c. 312; C. S. 6910.)

Cross Reference.—For provision making this article applicable to quarries, see § 74-24.

§ 74-16. Inspector to examine mines.—It shall be the duty of the inspector to examine all the mines in the state as often as possible to see that all the provisions and requirements of this chapter are strictly observed and carried out; he shall particularly examine the works and machinery belonging to any mine, examine into the state and condition of the mines as to ventilation, circulation, and condition of air, drainage, and general security. (Rev., s. 4944; 1897, c. 251, s. 2; C. S. 6911.)

§ 74-17. May enter to make examinations. — For the purpose of making the inspection and examinations provided for in this chapter, the inspector shall have the right to enter any mine at all reasonable times, by night or by day, but in such manner as shall not unnecessarily obstruct the working of the mine; and the owner or agent of such mine is hereby required to furnish the means necessary for such entry and inspection; the inspection and examination herein provided for shall extend to fire-clay, iron ore, and other mines as well as coal mines. (Rev., s. 4945; 1897, c. 251, s. 2; C. S. 6912.)

§ 74-18. Death by accident investigated. — Upon receiving notice of any death resulting from accident it shall be the duty of the inspector to go himself, or send a representative, at once to the mine in which the death occurred and inquire into the cause of the same, and to make a written report fully setting forth the condition of that part of the mine where such death occurred and the cause which led to the same; which report shall be filed by the inspector in his office as a matter of record and for future reference. (Rev., s. 4946; 1897, c. 251, s. 6; C. S. 6913.)

§ 74-19. Record of examinations. — He shall make a record of all examinations of mines, showing the date when examination is made, the condition in which the mines are found, the extent to which the laws relating to mines and mining are observed or violated, the progress made in the improvements and security of life and health sought to be secured by the provisions of this chapter, number of accidents, injuries received, or deaths in or about the mines, the number of mines in the state, the number of persons employed in or about each mine, together with all such other facts and information of public interest, concerning the condition of mines, development and progress of mining in the state as he may think useful and proper, which record shall be filed in the office of the inspector, and as much thereof as may be of public interest to be included in his annual report. (Rev., s. 4947; 1897, c. 251, s. 2; C. S. 6914.)

§ 74-20. Papers to be preserved.—He shall keep in his office and carefully preserve all maps, surveys, and other reports and papers required by law to be filed with him, and so arrange and preserve the same as shall make them a permanent record of ready, convenient, and connected reference. (Rev., s. 4948; 1897, c. 251, s. 3; C. S. 6915.)

§ 74-21. Inspector to enforce law; counsel furnished.—In case of any controversy or disagreement between the inspector and the owner or operator of any mine or the persons working therein, or in case of conditions or emergencies requiring counsel, the inspector may call on the governor for such assistance and counsel as may be necessary. If the inspector finds any of the provisions of this chapter violated or not complied with by any owner, lessee, or agent in charge, unless the same is within a reasonable time rectified, and the provisions of this chapter fully complied with, he shall institute an action in the name of the state to compel the compliance therewith. The inspector shall exercise a sound discretion in the enforcement of this chapter. (Rev., s. 4949; 1897, c. 251, s. 2; C. S. 6916.)

§ 74-22. Operation enjoined when law violated.—On application of the inspector, after suit brought as directed in § 74-21, any court of competent jurisdiction may enjoin or restrain the owner or agent from working or operating such mine until it is made to conform to the provisions of this chapter; and such remedy shall be cumulative, and shall not take the place of or affect any other proceedings against such owner or agent authorized by law for the matter complained of in such action. (Rev., s. 4950; 1897, c. 251, s. 7; C. S. 6917.)

§ 74-23. Report to governor. — The inspector shall annually make report to the governor of all his proceedings, the condition and operation of the different mines of the state, and the number of mines and the number of persons employed in or about such mines, the amount of coal, iron ore, limestone, fire-clay, or other mineral mined in this state; and he shall enumerate all accidents in or about the mines, and the manner in which they occurred, and give all such other information as he thinks useful and proper, and make such suggestions as he deems important relative to mines and mining, and any legislation that may be necessary on the subject for the better preservation of the life and health of those engaged in such industry. (Rev., s. 4951; 1897, c. 251, s. 3; C. S. 6918.)

§ 74-24. Articles one and two made applicable to quarries.—For the purpose of providing for the safety of workers in quarries in North Carolina, the provisions of articles one and two of this chapter, relating to the operation and inspection of mines are hereby made applicable to quarries in so far as such provisions are suitable to the operation and inspection of quarries. (1939, c. 223, s. 1.)

Art. 3. Waterways Obtained.

§ 74-25. Water and drainage rights obtained.—Any person or body corporate engaged or about to engage in mining, who may find it necessary for the furtherance of his operations to convey water either to or from his mine or mines over the lands of any other person or persons, may make application by petition in writing to the clerk of the superior court of the county in which the lands to be affected or the greater part are situate, for the right so to convey such water. The owner of the lands to be affected shall be made a party defendant, and the proceeding shall be conducted as other special proceedings. (Rev., s. 4953; Code, ss. 3293, 3294, 3300; 1871-2, c. 158, ss. 1, 3; C. S. 6920.)

Cross Reference.—As to reports not required of small quarries, see § 74-12.

§ 74-26. The petition, what to contain. — The petition shall specify the lands to be affected, the name of the owner of such lands, and the character of the ditch or drain intended to be made. (Rev., s. 4954; Code, s. 3294; 1871-2, c. 158, s. 3; C. S 6921.)

§ 74-27. Appraisers; appointment and duties.—Upon the hearing of the petition, if the prayer thereof be granted, the clerk shall appoint three disinterested persons, qualified to act as jurors, and not connected either by blood or marriage with the parties, appraisers to assess the damage, if any, that will accrue to the lands by the contemplated work, and shall issue a notice to them to meet upon the premises at a day specified, not to exceed ten days from the date of such notice. The appraisers having met, shall take an oath before some officer qualified to administer oaths to faithfully perform their duty and to do impartial justice in the case, and shall then examine all the lands in any way to be affected by such work, and assess the damage thereto, and make report thereof under their hands and seals to the clerk from whom the notice issued. (Rev., s. 4955; Code, ss. 3295, 3296, 3299; 1871-2, c. 158, ss. 4, 5, 9; C. S. 6922.)

§ 74-28. Confirmation of report; payment of damages; rights of petitioner. — After the filing of the report and confirmation thereof by the clerk, who shall have power to confirm or, for good cause, set aside the same, the petitioner shall have full right and power to enter upon such lands and make such ditches, drains, or other necessary work: Provided, he has first paid or tendered the damages, assessed as above, to the owner of such lands or his known and recognized agent, if he be a resident of this state, or have such agent in this state. If the owner be a nonresident and have no known agent in this state, the amount so assessed shall be paid by the petitioner into the office of the clerk of the superior court of the county for the use of such owner. (Rev., s. 4957; Code, s. 3298; 1871-2, c. 158, s. 12; C. S. 6923.)

§ 74-29. Registration of report.—The petitioner, or any other person interested, may have the report of the appraisers registered upon the certificate of the clerk and shall pay the register a fee of twenty-five cents therefor. (Rev., s. 4957; Code, s. 3298; 1871-2, c. 158, s. 8; C. S. 6924.)

§ 74-30. Obstructing mining drains. — If any person shall obstruct any drain or ditch constructed under the provisions of this chapter, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. (Rev., s. 3380; Code, s. 3301; 1871-2, c. 158, s. 12; C. S. 6925.)

§ 74-31. Disposition of waste.—In getting out and washing the products of kaolin and mica mines, the persons engaged in such business shall have the right to allow the waste, water, and sediment to run off into the natural courses and streams. (1917, c. 123; 1937, c. 378; C. S. 6926.)

Editor's Note.—The 1937 amendment, which made this section applicable to mica mines, provides: "This act shall not affect pending litigation."

Art. 4. Adjustment of Conflicting Claims.

§ 74-32. Liability for damage for trespass. — If any owner or person in possession of any mine or mining claim shall enter upon, either on the surface or underground, any mine or mining claim, the property of another, and shall mine or carry away any valuable mineral therefrom, he shall be liable to the owner of the mine so trespassed upon for double the value of all such mineral mined or carried away and for all other damages; and the value of the mineral mined or carried away shall be presumed to be the amount of the gross value ascertained by an average assay of the excavated material or vein or ledge from which it was taken. If such trespass is wrongfully and wilfully made, punitive damages may be allowed. (1913, c. 51, s. 1; C. S. 6927.)

Action by Cotenant.—Where tenants in common, under the erroneous impression that they owned the fee, removed valuable minerals from the property, upon suit by the other tenant in common for damages under this section and admission by the defendants of the cotenancy, removal and value, plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the pleadings, though not to the damages provided in this section. Jones v. McBee, 222 N. C. 152, 22 S. E. (2d) 226.

Applied in Vance v. Guy, 224 N. C. 607, 31 S. E. (2d) 766.

Cited in Carolina Mineral Co. v. Young, 211 N. C. 387, 190 S. E. 520.

§ 74-33. Persons entitled to bring suit.—The owner of a mine in this state, or any person in possession under a lease or other contract, may maintain an action to recover damages to such property arising from the operation of any adjacent mine by the owner thereof or other person in possession and working the same under lease or contract, and also to prevent the continuance of the operation of the adjacent mine in such a manner as to injure or endanger the safety of the complainant's mine. (1913, c. 51, s. 1; C. S. 6928.)

§ 74-34. Application and order for survey.—The person entitled to bring an action, as provided in § 74-33, may apply to any judge of the superior court having jurisdiction to grant injunctions and restraining orders, and obtain an order of survey in the following manner: He shall file an affidavit giving the names of the parties and the location as near as may be, of the mine complained of; the location of the plaintiff's mine, and that he has reason to believe that the defendant, or his agents or employees, are or have been trespassing upon his mine, or working the defendant's mine in such a manner as to damage or endanger the plaintiff's property. Upon the filing of the affidavit, the judge shall cause a notice to be issued to the defendant or his agents, stating the time and place and before whom the application will be heard, and requiring them to appear, in not less than ten nor more than twenty days from the date thereof, and show cause why an order of survey should not be granted. Upon the hearing, and for good cause shown, the judge shall grant an order directed to some competent disinterested surveyor or mining engineer, or both, as the case may be, who shall proceed to make the necessary examination and surveys, as directed by the court, and report their action to the court. The persons selected by the judge to make the survey and examination shall be residents of the state, and, before entering upon the discharge of their duty, shall take and subscribe an oath that they will fairly and impartially survey the mines described in the petition. In all other respects, except as stated above, the surveyors appointed by the judge shall proceed as in surveys in disputed boundaries. (1913, c. 51, s. 2; C. S. 6929.)

§ 74-35. Free access to mine for survey.—Upon the order made for the survey in the manner, at the time, and by the persons mentioned in the order, which shall include a representative of the party making the application, who shall not be one of the surveyors, there shall be given free access to the mine for the purpose of survey, and any interference with the persons acting under the order of survey shall be contempt of court and punished accordingly. If the persons named in the order of survey so require, they, with their instruments, shall be carefully lowered and raised in and out of the mine with the cage, bucket, or skip ordinarily used in the shafts of the mine; and they may demand of the owner of the mine, or his manager or agent, that they be so raised and lowered at a speed agreeable to them and not to endanger their comfort and safety or to injure the accuracy of their instruments. The owner of the mine, his managers or agents, shall be liable in damages to the persons making the examination for any injury to them or to their instruments, caused by the careless and negligent operation of any bucket, cage, or skip at such a high rate of speed as to injure the persons or their instruments while being lowered or raised in the mine. (1913, c. 51, s. 2; C. S. 6930.)

§ 74-36. Costs of the survey.—The costs of the order and survey shall be paid by the person making the application; but if he shall maintain an action and recover damages for the injury done or threatened prior to such survey and examination, the costs of the order and survey shall be taxed against the defendant as other costs in the action. The party obtaining the survey shall be liable for any unnecessary injury done to the property examined and surveyed in making the survey. (1913, c. 51, s. 2; C. S. 6931.)

IV. Apprenticeship.

Sec.
94-1. Purpose.
94-2. Apprenticeship council.
94-3. Director of apprenticeship.
94-4. Powers and duties of director of apprenticeship.
94-5. Local and state joint apprenticeship committees.
94-6. Definition of an apprentice.
94-7. Contents of agreement.
94-8. Approval of apprentice agreements; signatures.
94-9. Rotation of employment.
94-10. Settlement of controversies or complaints.
94-11. Limitation.

§ 94-1. Purpose.—The purposes of this chapter are: To open to young people the opportunity to obtain training that will equip them for profitable employment and citizenship; to set up, as a means to this end, a program of voluntary apprenticeship under approved apprentice agreements providing facilities for their training and guidance in the arts and crafts of industry and trade, with parallel instruction in related and supplementary education; to promote employment opportunities for young people under conditions providing adequate training and reasonable earnings; to relate the supply of skilled workers to employment demands; to establish standards for apprentice training; to establish an apprenticeship council and local and state joint apprenticeship committees to assist in effectuating the purposes of this chapter; to provide for a director of apprenticeship within the department of labor; to provide for reports to the legislature and to the public regarding the status of apprentice training in the state; to establish a procedure for the determination of apprentice agreement controversies; and to accomplish related ends. (1939, c. 229, s. 1.)

Editor's Note.—For comment on this enactment, see 17 N. C. Law Rev. 327.

§ 94-2. Apprenticeship council.—The commissioner of labor shall appoint an apprenticeship council, composed of three representatives each from employer and employee organizations respectively. The state official who has been designated by the state board for vocational education as being in charge of trade and industrial education shall ex officio be a member of said council, without vote. The terms of office of the members of the apprenticeship council first appointed by the commissioner of labor shall expire as designated by the commissioner at the time of making the appointment: One representative each of employers, employees, being appointed for one year; one representative each of employers, employees, being appointed for two years, and one representative each of employers and employees for three years. Thereafter, each member shall be appointed for a term of three years. Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term of his predecessor shall be appointed for the remainder of said term. Each member of the council not otherwise compensated by public monies, shall be reimbursed for transportation and shall receive such per diem compensation as is provided generally for boards and commissions under the biennial Maintenance Appropriation Acts for each day spent in attendance at meetings of the apprenticeship council.

The apprenticeship council shall meet at the call of the commissioner of labor and shall aid him in formulating policies for the effective administration of this chapter. Subject to the approval of the commissioner, the apprenticeship council shall establish standards for apprentice agreement which in no case shall be lower than those prescribed by this chapter, shall issue such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the intent and purposes of said chapter, and shall perform such other functions as the commissioner may direct. Not less than once a year the apprenticeship council shall make a report through the commissioner of labor of its activities and findings to the legislature and to the public. (1939, c. 229, s. 2.)

§ 94-3. Director of apprenticeship.—The commissioner of labor is hereby directed to appoint a director of apprenticeship which appointment shall be subject to the confirmation of the state apprenticeship council by a majority vote. The commissioner of labor is further authorized to appoint and employ such clerical, technical, and professional help as shall be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this chapter. (1939, c. 229, s. 3.)

§ 94-4. Powers and duties of director of apprenticeship.—The director, under the supervision of the commissioner of labor and with the advice and guidance of the apprenticeship council is authorized to administer the provisions of this chapter; in cooperation with the apprenticeship council and local and state joint apprenticeship committees, to set up conditions and training standards for apprentice agreements, which conditions or standards shall in no case be lower than those prescribed by this chapter; to act as secretary of the apprenticeship council and of each state joint apprenticeship committee; to approve for the council if in his opinion approval is for the best interest of the apprentice, any apprentice agreement which meets the standards established under this chapter; to terminate or cancel any apprentice agreement in accordance with the provisions of such agreement; to keep a record of apprentice agreements and their disposition; to issue certificates of completion of apprenticeship; and to perform such other duties as are necessary to carry out the intent of this chapter: Provided, that the administration and supervision of related and supplemental instruction for apprentices, coordination of instruction with job experiences, and the selection and training of teachers and coordinators for such instruction shall be the responsibility of state and local boards responsible for vocational education. (1939, c. 229, s. 4.)

§ 94-5. Local and state joint apprenticeship committees.—A local joint apprenticeship committee may be appointed, in any trade or group of trades in a city or trade area, by the apprenticeship council, whenever the apprentice training needs of such trade or group of trades justifies such establishment: Provided, that when a state joint apprenticeship committee in any trade or group of trades shall have been established, as hereinafter authorized, such state committee shall thereafter have the power of appointment of local joint apprenticeship committees in the trade or group of trades which it represents. Such local joint apprenticeship committee shall be composed of an equal number of employer and employee representatives chosen from names submitted by the respective local employer and employee organizations in such trade or group of trades. In a trade or group of trades in which there is no bona fide local employer or employee organization, the committee shall be appointed from persons known to represent the interests of employers and of employees respectively. The function of a local joint apprenticeship committee shall be: To cooperate with school authorities in regard to the education of apprentices; in accordance with the standards set up by the apprenticeship committee for the same trade or group of trades, where such committee has been appointed, to work in an advisory capacity with employers and employees in matters regarding schedule of operations, application of wage rates, and working conditions for apprentices and to specify the number of apprentices which shall be employed locally in the trade under apprentice agreements under the chapter; and to adjust apprenticeship disputes, subject to the approval of the director. Until the appointment of a state joint apprenticeship committee for any trade or group of trades, as hereinafter provided, the local joint apprenticeship committee for that trade or group of trades shall, for the city or trade area for which it is appointed, exercise the functions of the state joint apprenticeship committee for the said trade or group of trades which it represents.

When two or more local joint apprenticeship committees have been established in the state for a trade or group of trades, or at the request of any trade or group of trades, the apprenticeship council may appoint a state joint apprenticeship committee for such trade or group of trades, composed of an equal number of employer and employee representatives chosen from names submitted by the respective employer and employee organizations. In a trade or group of trades in which there is no bona fide employer or employee organization, the apprenticeship council may appoint such a committee from persons known to represent the interests of employers and employees respectively. The functions of a state joint apprenticeship committee shall be: To coordinate the activities of local joint apprenticeship committees in the trade or group of trades which it represents; to ascertain the prevailing rate for journeymen in the respective trade areas within the state in such trade or trades and specify the graduated scale of wages applicable to apprentices in such trade or trades in each such area; to ascertain employment needs in such trade or trades and specify the appropriate current ratio of apprentices to journeymen; and to make recommendations for the general good of apprentices engaged in the trade or trades represented by the committee. The members of a state joint apprenticeship committee shall be reimbursed for transportation and shall receive such per diem compensation as is provided generally for boards and commissions under the biennial Maintenance Appropriation Acts for each day spent in attendance at meetings of the committee. (1939, c. 229, s. 5.)

§ 94-6. Definition of an apprentice.—The term "apprentice", as used herein, shall mean a person at least sixteen years of age who is covered by a written agreement, with an employer, an association of employers, or an organization of employees acting as employer's agent, and approved by the apprenticeship council; which apprentice agreement provides for not less than four thousand hours of reasonably continuous employment for such person for his participation in an approved schedule of work experience and for at least one hundred forty-four hours per year of related supplemental instruction. The required hours for apprenticeship agreements may vary in accordance with standards adopted by local or state joint apprenticeship committees, subject to approval of the state apprenticeship council and commissioner of labor. (1939, c. 229, s. 6.)

§ 94-7. Contents of agreement. — Every apprentice agreement entered into under this chapter shall contain:

(1) The names of the contracting parties.

(2) The date of birth of the apprentice.

(3) A statement of the trade, craft, or business which the apprentice is to be taught, and the time at which the apprenticeship will begin and end.

(4) A statement showing the number of hours to be spent by the apprentice in work and the number of hours to be spent in related and supplemental instruction, which instruction shall be not less than one hundred forty-four hours per year: Provided, that in no case shall the combined weekly hours of work and of required related and supplemental instruction of the apprentice exceed the maximum number of hours of work prescribed by law for a person of the age and sex of the apprentice.

(5) A statement setting forth a schedule of the processes in the trade or industry division in which the apprentice is to be taught and the approximate time to be spent at each process.

(6) A statement of the graduated scale of wages to be paid the apprentice and whether the required school time shall be compensated.

(7) A statement providing for a period of probation of not more than five hundred hours of employment and instruction extending over not more than four months, during which time the apprentice agreement shall be terminated by the director at the request in writing of either party, and providing that after such probationary period the apprentice agreement may be terminated by the director by mutual agreement of all parties thereto, or cancelled by the director for good and sufficient reason. The council at the request of a joint apprentice committee may lengthen the period of probation.

(8) A provision that all controversies or differences concerning the apprentice agreement which cannot be adjusted locally in accordance with § 94-5 shall be submitted to the director for determination.

(9) A provision that an employer who is unable to fulfill his obligation under the apprentice agreement may with the approval of the director transfer such contract to any other employer: Provided, that the apprentice consents and that such other employer agrees to assume the obligations of said apprentice agreement.

(10) Such additional terms and conditions as may be prescribed or approved by the director not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter. (1939, c. 229, s. 7; 1945, c. 729, s. 1.)

Editor's Note.—The 1945 amendment struck out the phrase "as provided for in § 94-10" formerly appearing at the end of subsection (8).

§ 94-8. Approval of apprentice agreements; signatures.—No apprentice agreement under this chapter shall be effective until approved by the director. Every apprentice agreement shall be signed by the employer, or by an association of employers or an organization of employees as provided in § 94-9, and by the apprentice, and if the apprentice is a minor, by the minor's father: Provided, that if the father be dead or legally incapable of giving consent or has abandoned his family, then by the minor's mother; if both father and mother be dead or legally incapable of giving consent, then by the guardian of the minor. Where a minor enters into an apprentice agreement under this chapter for a period of training extending into his majority, the apprentice agreement shall likewise be binding for such a period as may be covered during the apprentice's majority. (1939, c. 229, s. 8.)

§ 94-9. Rotation of employment.—For the purpose of providing greater diversity of training or continuity of employment, any apprentice agreement made under this chapter may in the discretion of the director of apprenticeship be signed by an association of employers or an organization of employees instead of by an individual employer. In such a case, the apprentice agreement shall expressly provide that the association of employers or organization of employees does not assume the obligation of an employer but agrees to use its best endeavors to procure employment and training for such apprentice with one or more employers who will accept full responsibility, as herein provided, for all the terms and conditions of employment and training set forth in said agreement between the apprentice and employer association or employee organization during the period of each such employment. The apprentice agreement in such a case shall also expressly provide for the transfer of the apprentice, subject to the approval of the director, to such employer or employers who shall sign in written agreement with the apprentice, and if the apprentice is a minor with his parent or guardian, as specified in § 94-8, contracting to employ said apprentice for the whole or a definite part of the total period of apprenticeship under the terms and conditions of employment and training set forth in the said agreement entered into between the apprentice and employer association or employee organization. (1939, c. 229, s. 9.)

§ 94-10. Repealed by Session Laws 1945, c. 729, s. 2.)

Editor's Note.—The repealed section related to the settlement of controversies or complaints.

§ 94-11. Limitation.—Nothing in this chapter or in any apprentice agreement approved under this chapter shall operate to invalidate any apprenticeship provision in any collective agreement between employers and employees, setting up higher apprenticeship standards; provided, that none of the terms or provisions of this chapter shall apply to any person, firm, corporation or crafts unless, until, and only so long as such person, firm, corporation or crafts voluntarily elects that the terms and provisions of this chapter shall apply. Any person, firm, corporation or crafts terminating an apprenticeship agreement, shall notify the director of apprenticeship. (1939, c. 229, s. 11; 1945, c. 729, s. 3.)

Editor's Note.—The 1945 amendment added the proviso.

Art. 1. Department of Labor.

§ 95-1. Department of labor established.—A Department of Labor is hereby created and established. The duties of said department shall be exercised and discharged under the supervision and direction of a commissioner, to be known as the Commissioner of Labor. (Rev., s. 3309; 1919, c. 314, s. 4; 1931, c. 312, s. 1; C. S. 7309.)

Editor's Note.—Public Laws 1931, c. 312, effected a reorganization of the Department of Labor and Printing, henceforth to be known as the Department of Labor. Sec. 17 of the act provided: "This act shall be in force and effect from and after April first, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one: Provided, that the Child Welfare Commission shall continue operating under existing laws until June thirtieth in order to complete the year's program of inspections, use printed material and complete statistical studies, but the Executive Secretary, the Commissioner of Labor, with the approval of the Governor, shall proceed to complete plans for reorganization of Department of Labor to be made effective promptly July first, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one."

In 9 N. C. Law Rev. 413, 414, it is said: "There are some disappointing features and omissions in connection with the plan of reorganization. In the first place, the writer is of the opinion that the Commissioner of Labor should be appointed by the Governor rather than elected by popular vote. This office calls for an expert, and there is little reason to think that the person who is likely to be elected will possess the necessary qualifications. Secondly, there is complete absence of advisory boards to confer with and advise the Commissioner or heads of any of the several divisions. There seems little justification for burdening the Division of Standards and Inspections with the duty of collecting information and statistics concerning water-power, agriculture, dairying, etc. To be sure, these matters are important, and have a bearing, directly or indirectly, on the welfare of the working classes of the State. But so does almost any other aspect of economic activity that could be mentioned. Such inquiry properly belongs to other departments, and should not be required of a department that is going to have its hands full with matters with which it should properly concern itself. The practice of making the labor department a catch-all for all sorts of duties which other departments should, but do not do, is one that is altogether too common, and one that is not conducive to effective administration. Finally, the absence of machinery of any sort for the settlement of industrial disputes is a matter of some surprise. In view of the recent experiences in Gastonia, Marion, and elsewhere within the State it is almost incomprehensible. While the presence of such machinery by no means guarantees that disputes will be settled promptly and effectively, or at all, for that matter, the experience of other states which have such machinery, with competent men administering it, would seem to fully warrant its establishment. This omission, together with the above duties imposed upon the Division of Statistics and Inspections which are somewhat foreign to its primary purpose, seem to the writer the most serious defects in the plan of the reorganization which in most other respects is fairly satisfactory."

§ 95-2. Election of commissioner; term; salary; vacancy.—The commissioner of labor shall be elected by the people in the same manner as is provided for the election of the secretary of state. His term of office shall be four years, and he shall receive a salary of six thousand and six hundred dollars ($6600.00) per annum. Any vacancy in the office shall be filled by the governor, until the next general election. The office of the department of labor shall be kept in the city of Raleigh and shall be provided for as are other public offices of the state. (Rev., ss. 3909, 3910; 1919, c. 314, s. 4; 1931, c. 312, s. 2; 1933, c. 282, s. 5; 1935, c. 293; 1937, c. 415; 1939, c. 349; 1943, c. 499, s. 2; C. S. 7310.)

Editor's Note.—The Act of 1931 amended this section by adding the provisions as to salary and filling vacancies, and omitting a former provision as to the assistant commissioner. Sec. 3 of the Act provided that nothing in the above section "shall be construed as affecting or in any way interfering with the term of office of the present Commissioner of Labor and Printing, who shall hereafter be known as the Commissioner of Labor and who shall hold office until the expiration of his present term, to which he was elected, and until his successor has been elected and qualified" under the provisions of the above section.

The 1937 and 1939 amendments increased the salary.

The 1943 amendment increased the salary from $6,000 to $6,600.

§ 95-3. Divisions of department; commissioner; administrative officers.—The Department of Labor shall consist of the following officers, divisions and sections:

A Commissioner of Labor.

A Division of Workmen's Compensation, as a separate and distinct unit, the officers of the Industrial Commission or the Division of Workmen's Compensation acting separately and independently of the other officers, divisions and sections herein provided for.

A Division of Standards and Inspections.

A Division of Statistics.

Each division, except the Division of Workmen's Compensation, shall be in the charge of a chief administrative officer and shall be organized under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Labor and the head of the division concerned, with the approval of the Governor, shall prescribe and promulgate. The Commissioner of Labor, with the approval of the Governor, may make provision for one person to act as chief administrative officer of two or more divisions, when such is deemed advisable. The chief administrative officers of the several divisions, except the Industrial Commission, shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Labor with the approval of the Governor, and he shall fix their compensation, subject to the approval of the Budget Bureau. The Commissioner of Labor, with the approval of the Governor may combine or consolidate the activities of two or more of the divisions of the department except the Division of Workmen's Compensation, or provide for the setting up of other divisions when such action shall be deemed advisable for the more efficient and economical administration of the work and duties of the department. (1931, cc. 277, 312, s. 4; 1933, c. 46.)

§ 95-4. Authority, powers and duties of commissioner.—The commissioner of labor shall be the executive and administrative head of the department of labor. In addition to the other powers and duties conferred upon the commissioner of labor by this article, the said commissioner shall have authority and be charged with the duty:

(a) To appoint and assign to duty such clerks, stenographers, and other employees in the various divisions of the department, with approval of said director of division, as may be necessary to perform the work of the department, and fix their compensation, subject to the approval of the Budget Bureau. The commissioner of labor may assign or transfer stenographers, or clerks, from one division to another, or inspectors from one division to another, or combine the clerical force of two or more divisions, or require from one division assistance in the work of another division, as he may consider necessary and advisable: Provided, however, the provisions of this subsection shall not apply to the industrial commission, or the division of workmen's compensation.

(b) To make such rules and regulations with reference to the work of the department and of the several divisions thereof as shall be necessary to properly carry out the duties imposed upon the said commissioner and the work of the department; such rules and regulations to be made subject to the approval of the governor.

(c) To take and preserve testimony, examine witnesses, administer oaths, and under proper restriction enter any public institution of the state, any factory, store, workshop, laundry, public eating-house or mine, and interrogate any person employed therein or connected therewith, or the proper officer of a corporation, or file a written or printed list of interrogatories and require full and complete answers to the same, to be returned under oath within thirty days of the receipt of said list of questions.

(d) To secure the enforcement of all laws relating to the inspection of factories, mercantile establishments, mills, workshops, public eating-places, and commercial institutions in the state. To aid him in the work, he shall have power to appoint factory inspectors and other assistants. The duties of such inspectors and other assistants shall be prescribed by the commissioner of labor.

(e) To visit and inspect, personally or through his assistants and factory inspectors, at reasonable hours, as often as practicable, the factories, mercantile establishments, mills, workshops, public eating-places, and commercial institutions in the state, where goods, wares, or merchandise are manufactured, purchased, or sold, at wholesale or retail.

(f) To aid veterans of the World War in securing the adjustment of claims against the Federal government.

(g) To enforce the provisions of this section, and to prosecute all violations of laws relating to the inspection of factories, mercantile establishments, mills, workshops, public eating-houses, and commercial institutions in this state before any justice of the peace or court of competent jurisdiction. It shall be the duty of the solicitor of the proper district or the prosecuting attorney of any city or county court, upon the request of the commissioner of labor, or any of his assistants or deputies, to prosecute any violation of a law, which it is made the duty of the said commissioner of labor to enforce. (1925, c. 288; 1931, cc. 277, 312, ss. 5, 6; 1933, cc. 46, 244.)

Editor's Note.—Public Laws of 1933, c. 244, added subsections (c), (d), (e), and (g) of this section as they now appear.

See 11 N. C. Law Rev. 234, for changes made in this section by Public Laws 1933.

§ 95-5. Annual report to Governor; recommendation as to legislation needed. — The commissioner of labor shall annually, on or before the first day of January, file with the governor a report covering the activities of the department, and the report so made on or before January first of the years in which the general assembly shall be in session shall be accompanied by recommendations of the commissioner with reference to such changes in the law applying to or affecting industrial and labor conditions as the commissioner may deem advisable. The report of the commissioner of labor shall be printed and distributed in such manner and form as the director of the budget shall authorize. (1931, c. 312, s. 7.)

§ 95-6. Statistical report to Governor; publication of information given by employers.—It shall be the duty of the commissioner of labor to collect in the manner herein provided for, and to assort, systematize, and present to the governor as a part of the report provided for in § 95-5, statistical details relating to all divisions of labor in the State, and particularly concerning the following: The extent of unemployment, the hours of labor, the number of employees and sex thereof, and the daily wages earned; the conditions with respect to labor in all manufacturing establishments, hotels, stores, and workshops; and the industrial, social, educational, moral, and sanitary conditions of the labor classes, in the productive industries of the State. Such statistical details shall include the names of firms, companies, or corporations, where the same are located, the kind of goods produced or manufactured, the period of operation of each year, the number of employees, male or female, the number engaged in clerical work and the number engaged in manual labor, with the classification of the number of each sex engaged in such occupation and the average daily wage paid each: Provided, that the commissioner shall not, nor shall anyone connected with his office, publish or give or permit to be published or given to any person the individual statistics obtained from any employer, and all such statistics, when published, shall be published in connection with other similar statistics and be set forth in aggregates and averages. (1931, c. 312, s. 8.)

§ 95-7. Power of commissioner to compel the giving of such information; refusal as contempt. —The commissioner of labor, or his authorized representative, for the purpose of securing the statistical details referred to in § 95-6, shall have power to examine witnesses on oath, to compel the attendance of witnesses and the giving of such testimony and production of such papers as shall be necessary to enable him to gain the necessary information. Upon the refusal of any witness to comply with the requirements of the commissioner of labor or his representative in this respect, it shall be the duty of any judge of the superior court, upon the application of the commissioner of labor, or his representative, to order the witness to show cause why he should not comply with the requirements of the said commissioner, or his representative, if in the discretion of the judge such requirement is reasonable and proper. Refusal to comply with the order of the judge of the superior court shall be dealt with as for contempt of court. (1931, c. 312, s. 9.)

§ 95-8. Employers required to make statistical report to Commissioner; refusal as contempt. —It shall be the duty of every owner, operator, or manager of every factory, workshop, mill, mine, or other establishment, where labor is employed, to make to the department, upon blanks furnished by said department, such reports and returns as the said department may require, for the purpose of compiling such labor statistics as are authorized by this article, and the owner or business manager shall make such reports and returns within the time prescribed therefor by said Commissioner, and shall certify to the correctness of the same. Upon the refusal of any person, firm, or corporation to comply with the provisions of this section, it shall be the duty of any judge of the superior court, upon application by the commissioner or by any representative of the department authorized by him, to order the person, firm, or corporation to show cause why he or it should not comply with the provisions of this section. Refusal to comply with the order of the judge of the superior court shall be dealt with as for contempt of court. (1931, c. 312, s. 10.)

§ 95-9. Employers to post notice of laws.—It shall be the duty of every employer to keep posted in a conspicuous place in every room where five or more persons are employed a printed notice stating the provisions of the law relative to the employment of adult persons and children and the regulation of hours and working conditions. The Commissioner of Labor shall furnish the printed form of such notice upon request. (1933, c. 244, s. 6.)

§ 95-10. Division of workmen's compensation. —The North Carolina industrial commission, created under the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, § 97-1 et seq., is hereby transferred to the department of labor as one of its integral units. The powers, duties, and personnel of the said industrial commission shall continue as provided for in the workmen's compensation act: Provided, however, that such adjustments shall be made in connection with the statistical work and the work of inspection of said industrial commission and the statistical work and work of inspection of other divisions of the department of labor as the commissioner of labor, with the advice of the industrial commission and of the heads of the divisions directly concerned, may, with the approval of the Governor, prescribe, for the purpose of facilitating, expediting, and improving the work of the department as a whole. (1931, c. 312, s. 11.)

§ 95-11. Division of Standards and Inspection.—(a) The chief administrative officer of the Division of Standards and Inspection shall be known as the director of the division. It shall be his duty, under the direction and supervision of the Commissioner of Labor, and under rules and regulations to be adopted by the Department as herein provided, to make or cause to be made all necessary inspections to see that all laws, rules, and regulations concerning the safety and well-being of labor are promptly and effectively carried out.

(b) The Division shall make studies and investigations of special problems connected with the labor of women and children, and create the necessary organization, and appoint an adequate number of investigators, with the consent of the Commissioner of Labor and the approval of the Governor; and the Director of said division, under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Labor and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by said Commissioner, with the approval of the Governor, shall perform all duties devolving upon the Department of Labor, or the Commissioner of Labor with relation to the enforcement of laws, rules, and regulations governing the employment of women and children.

(c) The Director shall report annually to the Commissioner of Labor the activities of the division, with such recommendations as may be considered advisable for the improvement of the working conditions for women and children.

(d) The Division shall collect and collate information and statistics concerning the location, estimated and actual horsepower and condition of valuable water-powers, developed and undeveloped, in this State; also concerning farm lands and farming, the kinds, character, and quantity of the annual farm products in this State; also of timber lands and timbers, truck gardening, dairying, and such other information and statistics concerning the agricultural and industrial welfare of the citizens of this State as may be deemed to be of interest and benefit to the public. The Director shall also perform the duties of mine inspector as prescribed in the chapter on Mines and Quarries.

(e) The Division shall conduct such research and carry out such studies as will contribute to the health, safety, and general well-being of the working classes of the State. The finding of such investigations, with the approval of the Commissioner of Labor and the Governor and the cooperation of the chief administrative officer of the Division or Divisions directly concerned, shall be promulgated as rules and regulations governing work places and working conditions. All recommendations and suggestions pertaining to health, safety, and well-being of employees shall be transmitted to the Commissioner of Labor in an annual report which shall cover the work of the Division of Standards and Inspection.

(f) The Division shall make, promulgate and enforce rules and regulations for the protection of employees from accident and from occupational disease; and shall upon request, and after such investigation as it deems proper, issue certificates of compliance to such employers as are found by it to be in compliance with the rules and regulations made and promulgated in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph. (1931, c. 312, s. 12, c. 426; 1935; c. 131.)

Editor's Note.—Subsection (f) was added by the 1935 amendment.

§ 95-12. Division of Statistics.—The Division of Statistics shall be in charge of a Chief Statistician. It shall be his duty, under the direction and supervision of the Commissioner of Labor, to collect, assort, systematize, and print all statistical details relating to all divisions of labor in this State as is provided in § 95-6. (1931, c. 312, s. 13.)

§ 95-13. Enforcement of rules and regulations.—In the event any person, firm or corporation shall, after notice by the commissioner of labor, violate any of the rules or regulations promulgated under the authority of this article or any laws amendatory hereof relating to safety devices, or measures, the attorney general of the state, upon the request of the commissioner of labor, may take appropriate action in the civil courts of the state to enforce such rules and regulations. Upon request of the attorney general, any solicitor of the state of North Carolina in whose district such rule or regulation is violated may perform the duties hereinabove required of the attorney general. (1939, c. 398.)

§ 95-14. Agreements with certain federal agencies for enforcement of Fair Labor Standards Act.—The North Carolina state department of labor may and it is hereby authorized to enter into agreements with the wage and hour division, and the children's bureau, United States department of labor, for assistance and coöperation in the enforcement within this state of the act of Congress known as the Fair Labor Standards Act of one thousand nine hundred thirty-eight, approved June twenty-fifth, one thousand nine hundred thirty-eight, and is further authorized to accept payment and/or reimbursement for its services as provided by said act of Congress. Any such agreement may be subject to the regulations of the administrator of the wage and hour division, or the chief of the children's bureau of the United States department of labor, as the case may be, and shall be subject to the approval of the director of the state budget. Nothing in this section shall be construed as authorizing the state department of labor to spend in excess of its appropriation from state funds, except to the extent that such excess may be paid and/or reimbursed to it by the United States department of labor. All payments received by the state department of labor under this section shall be deposited in the state treasury and are hereby appropriated to the state department of labor to enable it to carry out the agreements entered into under this section. (1939, c. 245.)

Art. 2. Maximum Working Hours.

§ 95-15. Title of article.—This article shall be known and may be cited as the "Maximum Hour Law." (1937, c. 409, s. 1.)

§ 95-16. Declaration of public policy; enactment under police power.—As a guide to interpretation and application of this article, the public policy of this state is declared as follows: The relationship of hours of labor to the health, morals and general welfare of the people is a subject of general concern which requires appropriate legislation to limit hours of labor to promote the general welfare of the people of the state without jeopardizing the competitive position of North Carolina business and industry.

The general assembly, therefore, declares that in its considered judgment the general welfare of the state requires enactment of this law under the police power of the state. (1937, c. 409, s. 2.)

§ 95-17. Limitations of hours of employment; exceptions.—No employer shall employ a female person for more than forty-eight hours in any one week or nine hours in any one day, or on more than six days in any period of seven consecutive days.

No employer shall employ a male person for more than fifty-six hours in any one week, or more than twelve days in any period of fourteen consecutive days or more than ten hours in any one day, except that in case where two or more shifts of eight hours each or less per day are employed, any shift employee may be employed not to exceed double his regular shift hours in any one day whenever a fellow employee in like work is prevented from working because of illness or other cause: Provided, that any male person employed working in excess of fifty-five hours in any one week shall be paid time and a half at their regular rate of pay for such excess hours: Provided, in case of emergencies, repair crews, engineers, electricians, firemen, watchmen, office and supervisory employees and employees engaged in hereinafter defined continuous process operations and in work, the nature of which prevents second shift operations, may be employed for not more than sixty hours in any one week: Provided, also, that the ten hours per day maximum shall not apply to any employee when his employment is required for a longer period on account of an emergency due to breakdown, installation or alteration of equipment: Provided, that boys over fourteen years of age delivering newspapers on fixed routes and working not more than twenty-four hours per week, and watchmen may be employed seven days per week: Provided further, that from the eighteenth of December to and including the following twenty-fourth of December and for two periods of one week's duration each during the year for purpose of taking inventory, female persons over sixteen years of age in mercantile establishments may be employed not to exceed ten hours in any one day: Provided further, that female persons engaged in the operation of seasonal industries in the process of conditioning and preserving perishable or semi-perishable commodities may be employed for not more than ten hours in any one day and not more than fifty-five hours in any one week.

No provision in this article shall be deemed to authorize the employment of any minor in violation of the provisions of any law expressly regulating the hours of labor of minors or of any regulations made in pursuance of such laws.

Where the day is divided into two or more work periods for the same employee, the employer shall provide that all such periods shall be within twelve consecutive hours, except that in the case of employees of motion picture theatres, restaurants, dining-rooms, and public eating places, such periods shall be within fourteen consecutive hours:

Provided, that the transportation of employees to and from work shall not constitute any part of the employees' work hours.

Nothing in this section or any other provisions of this article shall apply to the employment of persons in agricultural occupations, ice plants, cotton gins and cottonseed oil mills or in domestic service in private homes and boarding houses, or to the work of persons over eighteen years of age in bona fide office, foremanship, clerical or supervisory capacity, executive positions, learned professions, commercial travelers, motion picture theatres, seasonal hotels and club houses, commercial fishing or tobacco redrying plants, tobacco warehouses, employers employing a total of not more than eight persons in each place of business, charitable institutions and hospitals: Provided further, that nothing in this section or in any other provision of this article shall apply to railroads, common carriers and public utilities subject to the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission or the North Carolina utilities commission, and utilities operated by municipalities or any transportation agencies now regulated by the federal government: Provided, nothing in this article shall apply to the state or to municipal corporations or their employees, or to employees in hotels.

When, by reason of a seasonal rush of business, any employer finds or believes it to be necessary that the employees of his or its manufacturing plant shall work for more than fifty-six hours per week, the employer may apply to the commissioner of labor of the state of North Carolina for permission to allow the employees of such establishment to work a greater number of hours than fifty-six for a definite length of time not exceeding sixty days; and the commissioner, after investigation, may, in his discretion, issue such permit on the condition that all such employees shall receive one and one-half times the usual compensation for all hours worked over fifty-six per week: Provided, this shall not apply to the hours of any female person or any person under the age of eighteen years: Provided further, employees in all laundries and dry cleaning establishments shall not be employed more than fifty-five hours in any one week: Provided further, nothing contained in this article shall be construed to limit the hours of employment of any outside salesmen on commission basis. Provided, that this article shall not apply to male clerks in mercantile establishments. Provided, that this article shall not apply to retail or wholesale florists nor to employees of retail or wholesale florists during the following periods of each year: one week prior to and including Easter, one week prior to and including Christmas, and one week prior to and including Mother's Day. (1937, cc. 406, 409, s. 3; 1939, c. 312, s. 1; 1943, c. 59.)

Cross Reference.—Compare sections 95-26 and 95-27.

Editor's Note.—The 1939 amendment added the last proviso.

The 1943 amendment substituted "fifty-six" for "fifty-five" in line two of the second paragraph and in lines four, nine and fourteen of the last paragraph. It also inserted the first proviso in the second paragraph.

§ 95-18. Definitions.—Whenever used in this article

(a) "Employ" includes permit or suffer to work.

(b) "Employer" includes every person, firm, corporation, partnership, stock association, agent, manager, representative or foreman, or other person having control or custody of any employment, place of employment or of any employee.

(c) "Day" includes any period of twenty-four consecutive hours.

(d) "Continuous process operations" includes bleaching, dyeing, finishing, redrying, dry kiln operations, and any other processing requiring continuous handling or work for completion. (1937, c. 409, s. 4.)

§ 95-19. Posting of law.—Every employer shall post and keep conspicuously posted in or about the premises wherein any employee is employed, a printed abstract of this article to be furnished by the state commissioner of labor upon request. (1937, c. 409, s. 5.)

§ 95-20. Time records kept by employers.—Every employer shall keep a time book and/or record which shall state the name and occupation of each employee employed and which shall indicate the number of hours worked by him or her on each day of the week, and the amount of wages paid each pay period to each such employee. Such time book and/or record shall be kept on file at least one year after the entry of the record. The state commissioner of labor or his duly authorized representative shall, for the purpose of examination, have access to and the right to copy from such time book and/or record for the purpose of prosecuting violations of the provisions of the article. Any employer who fails to keep such time book and/or record, or knowingly and intentionally makes any false statement therein, or refuses to make such time book and/or record accessible, upon request, to the state commissioner of labor or his duly authorized representative shall be deemed to have violated this section. (1937, c. 409, s. 6.)

§ 95-21. Enforcement by commissioner of labor.—It shall be the duty of the state commissioner of labor to enforce all the provisions of this article. The state commissioner of labor and his authorized representatives shall have the power and authority to enter any place of employment, and, in the enforcement of this article, the state commissioner of labor and his authorized representatives may enter and inspect as often as practicable all such places of employment. They may investigate all complaints of violations of this article received by them, and may institute prosecutions as hereinafter provided for violations of this article. (1937, c. 409, s. 7.)

§ 95-22. Interference with enforcement prohibited.—No person shall hinder or delay the state commissioner of labor or any of his authorized representatives in the performance of his duties; nor shall any person refuse to admit to, or lock out from, any place of employment the state commissioner of labor or any of his authorized representatives, or refuse to give the state commissioner of labor or his authorized representatives information required for the proper enforcement of this article. (1937, c. 409, s. 8.)

§ 95-23. Violation a misdemeanor.—Any person who, whether on his own behalf or for another, or through an agent, manager, representative, foreman or other person, shall knowingly and intentionally violate any provisions of this article, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. (1937, c. 409, s. 9.)

§ 95-24. Penalties.—Whoever knowingly and intentionally violates any provisions of § 95-17, upon complaint lodged by the state commissioner of labor, shall be punished by a a fine of not less than ten ($10.00) dollars nor more than fifty ($50.00) dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than thirty days in the discretion of the court; and whenever any person shall have been notified by the state commissioner of labor or his authorized representative, or by the service of a summons in a prosecution, that he is violating such provision, he shall be subject to like penalties in addition for each and every day that such violation shall have been continued after such notification.

Whoever knowingly and intentionally violates any of the provisions of §§ 95-19, 95-20, or 95-22 of this article shall be punished, for the first offense, by a fine of not less than five ($5.00) dollars nor more than twenty-five ($25.00) dollars, or imprisonment for not more than thirty days, in the discretion of the court, and whenever any person shall have been notified by the state commissioner of labor or his authorized representative that he is violating such provisions, and shall have been given a reasonable time in which to remedy the conditions which shall constitute such violations, he shall be subject to like penalties in addition to the penalties aforesaid, for each and every day that such violation shall have continued after the expiration of the time allowed by the state commissioner of labor or his authorized representative for remedying the aforesaid conditions. (1937, c. 409, s. 10.)

§ 95-25. Intimidating witnesses. — Whoever shall, by force, intimidation, threat of procuring dismissal from employment, or by any other manner whatsoever, induce or attempt to induce an employee to refrain from giving testimony in any investigation or proceeding relating to or arising under this article, or whoever discharges or penalizes any employee for so testifying, shall be subject to a fine of not less than ten ($10.00) dollars nor more than fifty ($50.00) dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than thirty days. (1937, c. 409, s. 11.)

Art. 3. Various Regulations.

§ 95-26. Week's work of women to be fifty-five hours.—Not more than fifty-five hours shall constitute a week's work for women over sixteen in any laundry, dry-cleaning establishment, pressing club, work-shop, factory, manufacturing establishment, or mill, of the State, and no woman over sixteen employed in any of the above-named places shall be worked exceeding eleven hours in any one day or over fifty-five hours in any one week. Any employer of labor violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding fifty dollars or imprisoned not exceeding thirty days, and each day's work exceeding the said hours shall constitute a separate offense. Provided, that this section shall not apply to those employed in the operation of seasonal industries in their process of conditioning and of preserving perishable or semi-perishable commodities, or to those engaged in agricultural work. Provided, further, that this section shall not apply to retail or wholesale florists nor to employees of retail or wholesale florists during the following periods of each year: one week prior to and including Easter, one week prior to and including Christmas, and one week prior to and including Mother's Day. (1915, c. 148, s. 2; 1931, c. 289; 1935, c. 406; 1939, c. 312, s. 2; C. S. 6554.)

Cross Reference.—For hours law applicable to employers hiring nine or more employees, see §§ 95-15 to 95-25.

Editor's Note.—The Act of 1931 struck out the former section which provided a sixty hour week for men and women, permitting the men to exceed it under special contract for overtime, and substituted a section making no provision for male workers.

The amendment of 1935 made this section applicable to laundries, dry-cleaning establishments, pressing clubs and work-shops.

The 1939 amendment added the second proviso.

§ 95-27. Hours of work for women in certain industries.—It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation, proprietor or owner of any retail, or wholesale mercantile establishment or other business where any female help is employed for the purpose of serving the public in the capacity of clerks, salesladies or waitresses and other employees of public eating places, to employ or permit to work any female longer than ten hours in any one day or over fifty-five hours in any one week; nor shall any female be employed or permitted to work for more than six hours continuously at any one time without an interval of at least half an hour except where the terms of employment do not call for more than six and a half hours in any one day or period.

Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to females whose full time is employed as bookkeepers, cashiers or office assistants or to any establishment that does not have in its employment three or more persons at any one time.

Every employer shall post in a conspicuous place in every room of the establishment in which females are employed a printed notice stating the provisions of this section and the hours of labor. The printed form of such notice shall be furnished, upon request, by the commissioner of labor.

Any employer of labor violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars or imprisoned not exceeding sixty days and each day's work exceeding the said hours shall constitute a separate offense. (1933, c. 35; 1935, c. 407.)

Cross Reference.—For hours law applicable to employers hiring nine or more employees, see §§ 95-15 to 95-25.

Editor's Note.—The amendment of 1935 omitted a proviso, which formerly appeared in the second paragraph, stating that the section should not apply to establishments in towns of less than five thousand inhabitants.

§ 95-28. Working hours of employees in state institutions.—It shall be unlawful for any person or official or foreman or other person in authority in the state hospital at Raleigh, the state hospital at Morganton, the state hospital at Goldsboro, or any penal or correctional institution of the State of North Carolina, excepting the state prison and institutions under the control of the state commission of highways and public works, to require any employee to work for a greater number of hours than twelve (12) during any twenty-four (24) hour period, or not more than eighty-four (84) hours during any one one week, or permit the same, during which period the said employee shall be permitted to take one continuous hour off duty; except in case of an emergency as determined by the superintendent, in which case the limitation of twelve (12) hours in any consecutive twenty-four (24) shall not apply. Nothing in this section shall be construed to effect the hours of doctors and superintendents in these hospitals. Any violation of this section shall be a misdemeanor, punishable within the discretion of the court. (1935, c. 136.)

§ 95-29. Seats for women employees; failure to provide, a misdemeanor.—All persons, firms, or corporations who employ females in a store, shop, office, or manufacturing establishment, as clerks, operatives, or helpers in any business, trade, or occupation carried on or operated in the state of North Carolina, shall be required to procure and provide proper and suitable seats for all such females, and shall permit the use of such seats, rests, or stools as may be necessary, and shall not make any rules, regulations, or orders preventing the use of such seats, stools, or rests when any such female employee or employees are not actively employed or engaged in their work in such business or employment.

If any employer of female help fails to provide seats, as required in this article, or makes any rules, orders or regulations in his or its shop, store, or other place of business requiring females to remain standing when not necessarily employed or engaged in service or labor therein, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, within the discretion of the court.

The Commissioner of Labor, or his duly authorized agents, may at any time enter and inspect all stores, shops, offices, or manufacturing or other establishments coming within the provisions of this section, and he may make such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to enforce the provisions of this section. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to refuse permission to enter, obstruct, or prevent any duly authorized agent of the commissioner in his effort to make the inspection herein provided for. (1909, c. 857, ss. 1, 2; 1919, c. 100, s. 12; C S. 6555.)

§ 95-30. Medical chests in factories; failure to provide, a misdemeanor.—Every person, firm, or corporation operating a factory or shop employing over twenty-five laborers, in which machinery is used for any manufacturing purpose, or for any purpose except for elevation or for heating or hoisting apparatus, shall at all times keep and maintain free of expense to the employees a medical or surgical chest which shall contain two porcelain pans, two tourniquets, gauze, absorbent cotton, adhesive plasters, bandages, antiseptic soap, one bottle of carbolic acid with directions on bottle, one bottle antiseptic tablets, one pair scissors, one folding stretcher, for the treatment of persons injured or taken ill upon the premises: Provided, this section does not require any employer to spend over ten dollars for such equipment.

Any person, firm, or corporation violating this section shall be subject to a fine of not less than five dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars for every week during which such violation continues. (1911, c. 57; C. S. 6556.)

Medical Chest, or First-Aid Case, Approved by Department of Labor.—(Extract from "Rules Relating to Sanitation of Factories and Mercantile Establishments.") Rule 1.—(a) The contents of the first-aid case shall be as follows:

Instruments.—1 pair scissors.
Thumb forceps.
Tourniquet.
Graduated medicine glass.
Drugs.—2 oz. aromatic spirits of ammonia.
2 oz. 4 per cent boric acid.
2 oz. Alcoholic iodine solution, half strength (for external use).
2 3-oz. collapsible tubes of bicarbonate of soda mixed with vaseline (3 per cent for burns).
2 oz. castor oil (for eye injuries).
Dressings.—1 doz. assorted sterile gauze bandages.
1 spool Z. O. Adhesive plaster, 1 inch by 5 yards.
3-½ oz. packages of absorbent cotton.
3-1 yard packages of sterile gauze.
Splints of assorted sizes for fractures.
Wooden applicators wound with cotton.
Wooden tongue depressors.

(b) All bottles or other containers containing drugs or other substances shall be clearly labeled and the specific purpose for which the contents are to be used shall be marked thereon.

(c) If the establishment occupies more than one floor, a stretcher shall be provided.

(d) In all establishments where work is carried on in more than one building, or on several floors, duplicate kits should be provided so as to avoid delay in attending to injuries.

(e) In every establishment where a first-aid kit is to be maintained, at least one person shall be instructed by a physician or trained nurse how to apply first aid to injured persons and shall have charge of the first-aid kit and its maintenance. Such kit shall be for first-aid use only.

§ 95-31. Acceptance by employer of assignment of wages.—No employer of labor shall be responsible for any assignment of wages to be earned in the future, executed by an employee, unless and until such assignment of wages is accepted by the employer in a written agreement to pay same. (1935, c. 410; 1937, c. 90.)

Editor's Note.—The 1937 amendment struck out the former proviso exempting Rowan, Iredell, Rockingham and Cabarrus counties from the provisions of this section.

Section Applies Only to Wages to Be Earned.—An assignment by an employee of wages earned and due him by the employer is valid without acceptance by the employer, and the assignee may sue the employer thereon. the provision of this section being applicable only to wages to be earned in the future. Rickman v. Holshouser, 217 N. C. 377, 8 S. E. (2d) 199.

It Is Constitutional.—The provisions of this section rendering an assignment invalid unless accepted in writing by the employer, does not deprive the assignee of due process of law or the equal protection of the laws. Morris v. Holshouser, 220 N. C. 293, 297, 17 S. E. (2d) 115, 137 A. L. R. 733.

When applied to contracts executed after its effective date this section cannot be held unconstitutional as impairing the obligations of contracts. Morris v. Holshouser, 220 N. C. 293, 17 S. E. (2d) 115, 137 A. L. R. 733.

This section is a regulation of contracts growing out of the relationship of employer and employee imposed for the general welfare and is a valid exercise of the police power of the state. Morris v. Holshouser, 220 N. C. 293, 17 S. E. (2d) 115, 137 A. L. R. 733.

The fact that this section permits an employer, at his election, to accept an assignment of unearned wages executed by his employee does not in itself constitute an unconstitutional discrimination, since in the absence of legislative restraint, one engaged in private business may exercise his own pleasure as to the parties with whom he will deal. Morris v. Holshouser, 220 N. C. 293, 17 S. E. (2d) 115, 137 A. L. R. 733.

Purpose.—The end in view was not only to relieve the employer of unnecesary responsibility, but also to restrain the activities of those who were engaged in the business of buying at a discount the unearned wages of employees. Morris v. Holshouser, 220 N. C. 293, 298, 17 S. E. (2d) 115, 137 A. L. R, 733.

Art. 4. Conciliation Service and Mediation of Labor Disputes.

§ 95-32. Declaration of policy.—It is hereby declared as the public policy of this state that the best interests of the people of the state are served by the prevention or prompt settlement of labor disputes; that strikes and lockouts and other forms of industrial strife, regardless of where the merits of the controversy lie, are forces productive ultimately of economic waste; that the interests and rights of the consumers and the people of the state, while not direct parties thereto, should always be considered, respected and protected; and that the conciliation and voluntary mediation of such disputes under the guidance and supervision of a governmental agency will tend to promote permanent industrial peace and the health, welfare, comfort and safety of the people of the state. To carry out such policy, the necessity for the enactment of the provisions of this article is hereby declared as a matter of legislative determination. (1941, c. 362, s. 1.)

§ 95-33. Scope of article.—The provisions of this article shall apply to all labor disputes in North Carolina. (1941, c. 362, s. 2.)

§ 95-34. Administration of article.—The administration of this article shall be under the general supervision of the commissioner of labor of North Carolina. (1941, c. 362, s. 3.)

§ 95-35. Conciliation service established; personnel; removal; compensation.—There is hereby established in the department of labor a conciliation service. The commissioner of labor may appoint such employees as may be required for the consummation of the work under this article, prescribe their duties and fix their compensation, subject to existing laws applicable to the appointment and compensation of employees of the state of North Carolina. Any member of or employee in the conciliation service may be removed from office by the commissioner of labor, acting in his discretion. (1941, c. 362, s. 4.)

§ 95-36. Powers and duties of commissioner and conciliator.—Upon his own motion in an existent or imminent labor dispute, the commissioner of labor may, and, upon the direction of the governor, must order a conciliator to take such steps as seem expedient to effect a voluntary, amicable and expeditious adjustment and settlement of the differences and issues between employer and employees which have precipitated or culminated in or threaten to precipitate or culminate in such labor dispute.

The conciliator shall promptly put himself in communication with the parties to such controversy, and shall use his best efforts, by mediation, to bring them to agreement. (1941, c. 362, s. 5.)

Art. 4A. Arbitration Service for Voluntary Arbitration of Labor Disputes.

§ 95-36.1. Declaration of policy.—It is hereby declared as the public policy of this state that the best interest of the people of the state are served by the prompt settlement of labor disputes; that strikes and lockouts and other forms of industrial strife, regardless of where the merits of the controversy lie, are forces productive ultimately of economic waste; that the interests and rights of the consumers and the people of the state, while not direct parties thereto, should always be considered, respected and protected; and where amicable settlement by conciliation and/or mediation have been unsuccessful that the voluntary arbitration of such disputes under the guidance and supervision of a governmental agency will tend to promote permanent industrial peace and the health, welfare, comfort and safety of the people of the state. To carry out such policy, the necessity for the enactment of the provisions of this article is hereby declared as a matter of legislative determination. (1945, c. 1045, s. 1.)

Editor's Note.—The act from which this section was codified is in force from and after July 1, 1945.

§ 95-36.2. Scope of article.—The provisions of this article shall apply to labor disputes pertaining to wages, hours and working conditions in North Carolina when parties wish to avail themselves of arbitration under this article. (1945, c. 1045, s. 2.)

§ 95-36.3. Administration of article.—The administration of this article shall be under the general supervision of the commissioner of labor of North Carolina. (1945, c. 1045, s. 3.)

§ 95-36.4. Arbitration service established; personnel; removal; compensation.—There is hereby established in the department of labor an arbitration service. The commissioner of labor may appoint such employees as may be required for the consummation of the work under this article, prescribe their duties and fix their compensation, subject to existing laws applicable to the appointment and compensation of employees of the state of North Carolina. Any member of or employee in the arbitration service may be removed from office by the commissioner of labor, acting in his discretion. (1945, c. 1045, s. 4.)

§ 95-36.5. Arbitration.—(a) Submission of Controversy to Arbitration Panel.—Whenever a controversy pertaining to wages, hours and working conditions shall arise between employees and employer and where amicable settlement by conciliation and/or mediation have been unsuccessful such controversy may by agreement of the parties thereto, be submitted to an arbitration panel of five persons, or should the parties so desire to an arbitrator appointed by the commissioner of labor as provided for in subsection (b); provided, however, that the failure or refusal of either party to submit a controversy to arbitration shall not be construed as a violation of any legal obligation imposed upon such party by the terms of this article or otherwise.

(b) Manner of Selecting Arbitration Panel or Arbitrator.—Such panel or arbitrator shall be chosen in the following manner: The employer, or employers, shall choose two arbitrators. One employer arbitrator shall be from the plant concerned in the controversy and one arbitrator shall be from another industry. The employee(s) or representatives of the employee(s) shall choose two arbitrators. One employee arbitrator shall be from the plant concerned in the controversy and one arbitrator shall be from another industry, union, trade, or craft. The commissioner of labor shall select a fifth arbitrator who shall act as chairman of the arbitration panel and who may be selected from the list of arbitrators maintained by said commissioner. Should the parties prefer to submit the controversy to a single arbitrator and request the commissioner of labor to appoint such arbitrator, same shall be named by the commissioner. It shall be the duty of the commissioner of labor to maintain a list of qualified and public-spirited citizens who will serve as arbitrators. The fifth arbitrator, when appointed by the commissioner, may be paid, within the discretion of the commissioner, per diem compensation, at the rate established by the commissioner of labor, and actual travel and necessary expenses incurred while performing duties arising under this article. Necessary stenographic and clerical assistance to the panel or arbitrator, in those cases wherein an arbitrator has been named by the commissioner of labor, shall be furnished by the department of labor. Expenditures provided for under this section shall be paid from funds appropriated for the administration of this article.

(c) Arbitration Procedure; Witnesses; and Award.—The submission of the dispute to the arbitration panel or arbitrator shall be in writing, signed by the parties or their authorized agents, and shall contain a statement of the issues or questions in dispute and an agreement to continue in business or at work without a lockout or strike during the arbitration and to abide by the arbitration award. Upon such submission, the panel or arbitrator shall examine the matter in controversy, and, after reasonable notice, afford the parties an opportunity to be heard and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. The arbitrator or panel, or a majority of them, may require any person to attend before him or them as a witness and to bring with him any book or writing or other evidence. Subpoenas shall issue in the name of the arbitrator or panel, or a majority of them, and shall be directed to the person and shall be served in the same manner as subpoenas to testify before a court of record in this state; if any persons so summoned to testify shall refuse or neglect to obey such subpoenas, upon petition the superior court may compel the attendance of such person before the arbitrator or panel, or punish such persons for contempt in the same manner now provided for the attendance of witnesses or the punishment of them in the courts of this state. A written report of the panel's or arbitrator's findings of fact and recommendations shall be made to each party to the controversy; where the commissioner of labor has appointed an arbitrator, such reports shall be made within thirty (30) days after the selection of the arbitrator, unless this period of time shall be extended by agreement of the parties or by the commissioner of labor for good and sufficient reasons. Arbitration proceedings under this article shall be filed with the commissioner of labor, who may make a public report. (1945, c. 1045, s. 5.)

§ 95-36.6. Disqualification.—No person named by the commissioner of labor to act as an arbitrator in a dispute which has been submitted to arbitration shall be qualified to serve as such arbitrator if such person has any financial or other interest in a trade, business, industry or occupation in which a labor dispute exists or is threatened and of which the arbitration service has taken cognizance. (1945, c. 1045, s. 6.)

§ 95-36.7. Rules.—The commissioner of labor with the written approval of the attorney general shall have power to adopt, alter, amend or repeal such rules in connection with the voluntary arbitration of labor disputes as may be necessary for the proper administration and enforcement of the provisions of this article. (1945, c. 1045, s. 7.)

Art. 5. Regulation of Employment Agencies.

§ 95-37. Employment agency defined. — Employment agency within the meaning of this article shall include any business operated by any person, firm or corporation for profit and engaged in procuring employment for any person, firm or corporation in the State of North Carolina and making a charge on the employee or employer for the service. (1929, c. 178, s. 1.)

§ 95-38. License from Commissioner of Labor; investigation of applicant.—No person, firm or corporation shall engage in the business of operating any employment agency, as designated in § 95-37, in North Carolina without first making a written application to the Commissioner of Labor and being licensed by him as herein provided, to engage in such business. Upon receiving an application from such person, firm or corporation it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Labor to make an investigation into the character and moral standing of the person, firm or corporation. If after such investigation, the Commissioner of Labor shall be satisfied that such person, firm or corporation is of such character and moral standing as to warrant the issuance of a license to engage in the business covered by this article, he shall issue a license to such person, firm or corporation as provided herein. (1929, c. 178, s. 2; 1931, c. 312, s. 3.)

§ 95-39. Rules and regulations governing issuance of licenses.—The Commissioner of Labor is authorized and empowered to make general rules and regulations in relation to the licensing of such employment agencies and for the general supervision thereof in accordance with this article. (1929, c. 178, s. 3; 1931, c. 312, s. 3.)

§ 95-40. Investigation of records of agencies; hearing; rescission of licenses.—The Commissioner of Labor may investigate the books and records of any employment agency licensed under this article, and may rescind the license of the agency for cause if he finds that the agency is not complying with the terms and conditions of this article. No license shall be revoked until the Commissioner shall hold a hearing at the Court House of the County in which the licensee is doing business. The licensee shall be given ten days' notice to appear at the hearing and show cause why the license should not be revoked. At the hearing the result of the Commissioner's investigation shall be presented under oath, and the licensee may present evidence to show that the license should not be revoked. The licensee may appeal to the Superior Court within ten days after the Commissioner's decision. (1929, c. 178, s. 4; 1931, c. 312, s. 3.)

§ 95-41. Subpoenas; oaths.—The Commissioner of Labor, his Assistant or deputy shall be empowered to subpoena witnesses and administer oaths in making investigations and taking testimony to be presented at the hearing to be held before the Commissioner of Labor as hereinbefore provided for. (1929, c. 178, s. 5; 1931, c. 312, s. 3.)

§ 95-42. Service of subpoenas and fees for, governed by general law.—The County Sheriffs and their respective deputies shall serve all subpoenas of the Commissioner of Labor, and shall receive the same fees as are now provided by law for like services, and each witness who appears in obedience to such subpoena shall receive for attendance the fees and mileage for witnesses in civil cases of courts of the County in which the hearing is held. (1929, c. 178, s. 6; 1931, c. 312, s. 3.)

§ 95-43. Production of books, papers and records.—The Superior Court shall, on the application of the Commissioner of Labor, his assistant or duly authorized deputy, enforce by proper proceedings the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production and examination of books, papers and records. (1929, c. 178, s. 7; 1931, c. 312, s. 3.)

§ 95-44. License fee to be paid into special fund.—The license fee, charged under the provisions of this article, shall be paid into a special fund of the Department of Labor, and the proceeds of such license fees shall be used for the purpose of the supervision and regulation of the employment agencies, including costs of investigations or hearings to revoke licenses and the necessary traveling expenses and other expenditures incurred in administering this article. (1929, c. 178, s. 8; 1931, c. 312, s. 3.)

§ 95-45. Violations.—Any person, firm or corporation conducting an employment agency in the State of North Carolina, in violation of this article shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and if a person punishable by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars, or imprisonment of not less than six months, or both; and if a corporation by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars and not more than one thousand dollars. (1929, c. 178, s. 9.)

§ 95-46. Government employment agencies unaffected.—This article shall not in any manner affect or apply to any employment agency operated by the State of North Carolina, the Government of the United States, or any City, County or Town, or any agency thereof. (1929, c. 178, s. 10.)

§ 95-47. License taxes placed upon agencies under Revenue Act, not affected.—This article shall in no wise conflict with or affect any license tax placed upon such employment agencies by the General Revenue Act of North Carolina but instead shall be construed as supplementary thereto in exercising the police powers of the State. (1929, c. 178, s. 11.)

Art. 6. Separate Toilets for Sexes and Races.

§ 95-48. When separate toilets required; penalty.—All persons and corporations employing males and females in any manufacturing industry, or other business employing more than two males and females in towns and cities having a population of one thousand persons or more, and where such employees are required to do indoor work chiefly, shall provide and keep in a cleanly condition separate and distinct toilet rooms for such employees, said toilets to be lettered and marked in a distinct manner, so as to furnish separate facilities for white males, white females, colored males and colored females: Provided, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to cases where toilet arrangements or facilities are furnished by said employer off the premises occupied by him. (1913, c. 83, s. 1; C. S. 6559.)

§ 95-49. Location; intruding on toilets misdemeanor.—It shall be the duty of the persons or corporations mentioned under this article to locate their toilets for males and females, white and colored, in separate parts of their buildings or grounds in buildings hereafter erected, and in those now erected all closets shall be separated by substantial walls of brick or timber, and any employee who shall wilfully intrude upon or use any toilet not intended for his or her sex or color shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined five dollars. (1913, c. 83, s. 4; C. S. 6560.)

§ 95-50. Punishment for violation of article.—If any person, firm, or corporation refuses to comply with the provisions of this article, he or it shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, in the discretion of the court. (1913, c. 83, s. 2; 1919, c. 100, s. 12; C. S. 6561.)

§ 95-51. Police in towns to enforce article.—The police officers of any town or city shall investigate the places of business of any person or corporation employing males and females and see that the provisions of this article are put in force, and shall swear out a warrant before the mayor or other proper officer of any town or city and prosecute all persons, corporations, and managers of corporations violating any of the provisions of this article. (1913, c. 83, s. 3; C. S. 6562.)

§ 95-52. Sheriff in county to enforce article.—When any persons or corporations locate their manufacturing plant or other business outside of any city or town, the sheriff of the county shall investigate the condition of the toilets used by such manufacturing plant or business and see that the provisions of this article are complied with, and shall swear out a warrant before a justice of the peace and prosecute any one violating the provisions of this article. (1913, c. 83, s. 5; C. S. 6563.)

Local Modification.—Harnett, Lee, Johnston, Northampton, Sampson, Cleveland, Rutherford, Polk, and Henderson: C. S. 6564.

§ 95-53. Enforcement by department of labor.—The department of labor shall investigate the places of business of any person or corporation employing males and females, and shall make such rules and regulations for enforcing and carrying out this article as may be necessary. (1919, c. 100, s. 7; 1931, c. 312, ss. 12, 14; C. S. 6563(a).)

Art. 7. Board of Boiler Rules and Bureau of Boiler Inspection.

§ 95-54. Board of boiler rules created; members, appointment, and qualifications; terms of office; vacancies; meetings.—There is hereby created the North Carolina board of boiler rules consisting of five members, of whom four shall be appointed to the board by the governor, one for a term of one year, one for a term of two years, one for a term of three years and one for a term of four years. At the expiration of their respective terms of office, their successors shall be appointed for terms of four years each. Upon the death or incapacity of any member, the vacancy for the remainder of the term shall be filled with a representative of the same class. Of these four appointed members, one shall be a representative of the owners and users of steam boilers within the State of North Carolina, one a representative of the boiler manufacturers or a boiler maker who has had not less than five years practical experience as a boilermaker within the State of North Carolina, one a representative of a boiler inspection and insurance company licensed to do business within the State of North Carolina, and one a representative of the operating steam engineers in the State of North Carolina. The fifth member shall be the commissioner of labor, who shall be chairman of the board. The board shall meet at least twice yearly at the state capital or other place designated by the board. (1935, c. 326, s. 1.)

§ 95-55. Formulation of rules and regulations.—The board shall formulate rules and regulations for the safe and proper construction, installation, repair, use and operation of steam boilers in this State. The rules and regulations so formulated shall conform as nearly as possible to the boiler code of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and amendments and interpretations thereto made and approved by the council of the society. (1935, c. 326, s. 1.)

§ 95-56. Approval of rules and regulations by governor. — The rules and regulations formulated by the board of boiler rules shall become effective upon approval by the governor, except that rules applying to the construction of new boilers shall not become effective to prevent the installation of such new boilers until six months after approval by the governor. Changes in the rules which would raise the standards governing the methods of construction of new boilers or the quality of material used in them shall not become effective until six months after approval by the governor. (1935, c. 326, s. 2.)

§ 95-57. Compensation and expenses of board.—The members of the board of boiler rules, exclusive of the chairman thereof, shall serve without salary and shall receive their actual expenses, not to exceed their actual railroad fare plus four dollars ($4.00) per day each, for not to exceed twenty days in any year while in the performance of their duties as members of the board, to be paid in the same manner as in case of other state officers. The chairman of the board of boiler rules shall countersign all vouchers for expenditures under this section. (1935, c. 326, s. 3.)

§ 95-58. Effect of article on boilers installed

prior to enactment.—This article shall not be construed as in any way preventing the use or sale of steam boilers in this State which shall have been installed or in use in this State prior to the taking effect of this article and which shall have been made to conform to the rules and regulations of the board of boiler rules governing existing in stallations as provided in § 95-66. (1935, c. 326 s. 4.)

§ 95-59. Commissioner of labor empowered to appoint chief inspector; qualifications; salary.—After the passage of this article and at any time thereafter that the office may become vacant, the commissioner of labor shall appoint, and may remove for cause when so appointed, a citizen of this State who shall have had at the time of such appointment not less than five years' practical experience with steam boilers as a steam engineer, mechanical engineer, boilermaker or boiler inspector, or who has passed the same kind of examination as that prescribed for deputy or special inspectors in § 95-63, to be chief inspector for a term of two years or until his successor shall have been appointed, at an annual salary to be fixed by the commissioner of labor with the approval of the assistant director of the budget. (1935, c. 326, s. 5; 1943, c. 469.)

Editor's Note.—Prior to the 1943 amendment the salary was fixed at $2,000.

§ 95-60. Certain boilers excepted.—This article shall not apply to boilers under federal control or to stationary boilers used by railroads which are inspected regularly by competent inspectors, or to boilers used solely for propelling motor road vehicles; or to boilers of steam fire engines brought into the state for temporary use in times of emergency to check conflagrations; or to portable boilers used for agricultural purposes only or for pumping or drilling in the open field for water, gas or coal, gold, talc or other minerals and metals; or to steam heating boilers which carry pressures not exceeding fifteen pounds per square inch, built in accordance with the boiler code of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. (1935, c. 326, s. 6; 1937, c. 125, s. 1.)

Editor's Note. — Prior to the 1937 amendment this section excepted boilers used for heating purposes.

§ 95-61. Powers of commissioner of labor; creation of bureau of boiler inspection. — The commissioner of labor is hereby charged, directed and empowered:

(a) To set up in the division of standards and inspections of the department of labor, a bureau of boiler inspection to be supervised by the chief inspector provided for in § 95-59 and one or more deputy inspectors of boilers, who shall have passed the examination provided for in § 95-63, at a salary not to exceed the salary of a senior factory inspector, and such office help as may be necessary.

(b) To have free access for himself and his chief boiler inspector and deputies, during reasonable hours, to any premises in the State where a steam boiler is built or where a steam boiler or power plant apparatus is being installed or operated, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such boiler is built, installed and operated in accordance with the provisions of this article.

(c) To prosecute all violators of the provisions of this article.

(d) To issue, suspend and revoke inspection certificates allowing steam boilers to be operated, as provided in this article.

(e) To enforce the laws of the State governing the use of steam boilers and to enforce the rules and regulations of the board of boiler rules.

(f) To keep a complete record of the type, dimensions, age, condition, pressure allowed upon, location and date of the last inspection of all steam boilers to which this article applies.

(g) To publish and distribute among boiler manufacturers and others requesting them, copies of the rules and regulations adopted by the board of boiler rules. (1935, c. 326, s. 7.)

§ 95-62. Provision for special inspectors; examination required. — In addition to the deputy boiler inspectors authorized by § 95-61, the commissioner of labor shall, upon the request of any company authorized to insure against loss from explosion of boilers in this State, issue to any boiler inspectors of said company commissions as special inspectors: Provided, that each such inspector before receiving his commission shall pass satisfactorily the examination provided for in § 95-63, or, in lieu of such examination, shall hold a certificate of competency as an inspector of steam boilers for a state that has a standard of examination equal to that of the State of North Carolina, or a certificate from the national board of boiler and pressure vessel inspectors. The fee for such commission shall be one dollar ($1.00) and one dollar ($1.00) for each annual renewal thereof. Such special inspectors shall receive no salary from, nor shall any of their expenses be paid by, the State, and the continuance of a special inspector's commission shall be conditioned upon his continuing in the employ of a boiler inspection and insurance company duly authorized as aforesaid and upon his maintenance of the standards imposed by this article. Such special inspectors shall inspect all steam boilers insured by their respective companies, and the owners of such insured boilers shall be exempt from the payment of the fees provided for in § 95-68. Each company employing such special inspectors shall, within thirty days following each annual internal inspection made by such inspectors, file a report of such inspection with the commissioner of labor. (1935, c. 326, s. 8.)

§ 95-63. Examination for inspectors; revocation of commission.—Examination for deputy or special inspectors shall be given by the board of boiler rules or by at least two examiners to be appointed by said board and must be written or part written and part oral recorded in writing and must be confined to questions the answers to which will aid in determining the fitness and competency of the applicant for the intended service and must be of uniform grade throughout the State. In case an applicant for an inspector's appointment or commission fails to pass this examination, he may appeal to the board of boiler rules for a second examination which shall be given by said board, or if by examiners appointed by said board, then by examiners other than those by whom the first examination was given and these examiners shall be appointed forthwith to give said second examination. Upon the result of this examination on appeal, the board shall determine whether the applicant be qualified. The record of any applicant's examination, whether original or on appeal, shall be accessible to him and his employer.

A commission may be revoked by the commissioner of labor upon the recommendation of the chief inspector of steam boilers, for the incompetence or untrustworthiness of the holder thereof or for wilful falsification of any matter or statement contained in his application or in a report of any inspection. A person whose commission is revoked may appeal from the revocation to the board of boiler rules which shall hear the appeal and either set aside or affirm the revocation and its decision shall be final. The person whose commission has been revoked shall be entitled to be present in person and by counsel on the hearing of the appeal. If a certificate or commission is lost or destroyed, a new certificate or commission shall be issued in its place without another examination. A person who has failed to pass the examination for a commission or whose commission has been revoked shall be entitled to apply for a new examination and commission after ninety days from such failure or revocation. (1935, c. 326, s. 9.)

§ 95-64. Boiler inspections; fee; certificate; suspension.—On and after April first, nineteen hundred and thirty-five, each steam boiler used or proposed to be used within this State, except boilers exempt under § 95-60, shall be thoroughly inspected internally and externally while not under pressure by the chief inspector or by one of the deputy inspectors or special inspectors provided for herein, as to its design, construction, installation, condition and operation; and if it shall be found to be suitable, and to conform to the rules and regulations of the board of boiler rules, the owner or user of a steam boiler as required in this article to be inspected shall pay to the chief inspector the sum of one dollar ($1.00) for each inspection certificate issued, and the chief inspector shall issue to the owner or user thereof an inspection certificate specifying the maximum pressure which it may be allowed to carry. Such inspection certificate shall be valid for not more than fourteen months from its date, and it shall be posted under glass in the engine or boiler room containing such boiler, or an engine operated by it, or, in the case of a portable boiler, in the office of the plant where it is located for the time being. No inspection certificate issued for a boiler inspected by a special inspector shall be valid after the boiler for which it was issued shall cease to be insured by a duly authorized insurance company. The chief inspector or any deputy inspector may, at any time, suspend an inspection certificate when, in his opinion, the boiler for which it was issued may not continue to be operated without menace to the public safety, or when the boiler is found not to comply with the rules herein provided for and a special inspector shall have corresponding powers with respect to inspection certificates for boilers insured by the company employing him. Such suspension of an inspection certificate shall continue in effect until said boiler shall have been made to conform to the rules and regulations of the board of boiler rules and until said inspection certificate shall have been reinstated by a state inspector, if the inspection certificate was suspended by a state inspector, or by a special inspector, if it was suspended by a special inspector. Not more than fourteen months shall elapse between such inspections and there shall be at least four such inspections in thirty-seven consecutive months. Each such boiler shall also be inspected externally while under pressure with at least the same frequency, and at no greater intervals. (1935, c. 326, s. 10; 1937, c. 125, s. 2; 1939, c. 361, s. 1.)

Editor's Note.—The 1937 amendment, which struck out the fee provision in the first sentence, was repealed by the 1939 amendment.

§ 95-65. Operation of unapproved boiler prohibited.—On and after July first, nineteen hundred and thirty-five, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership or corporation to operate under pressure in this State a steam boiler to which this article applies without a valid inspection certificate as provided for in this article. The operation of a steam boiler without an inspection certificate, shall constitute a misdemeanor on the part of the owner, user or operator thereof and be punishable by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars ($100) or imprisonment not to exceed thirty days, or both, in the discretion of the court. (1935, c. 326, s. 11.)

§ 95-66. Installation of boilers not conforming to requirements prohibited; boilers now in use to conform.—No steam boiler which does not conform to the rules and regulations formulated by the board of boiler rules governing new installations shall be installed in this State after six months from the date upon which the said rules and regulations shall become effective by the approval of the governor.

All steam boilers installed and ready for use, or being used, before the said six months shall have elapsed, shall be made to conform to the rules and regulations of the board of boiler rules governing existing installations and the formula therein prescribed shall be used in determining the maximum allowable working pressure for such boilers. (1935, c. 326, s. 12.)

§ 95-67. Inspection of boilers during construction in state; outside state.—All boilers to be installed after six months from the date upon which the rules and regulations of the board of boiler rules shall become effective by the approval of the governor shall be inspected during construction by an inspector authorized to inspect boilers in this State, or if constructed outside the State, by an inspector holding a certificate of authority from the commissioner of labor of this State, which certificate shall be issued by the said commissioner of labor to any inspector who holds a certificate of authority to inspect steam boilers issued by a State which shall have adopted boiler rules that require standards of construction and operation substantially equal to those of this State, or an inspector who holds a certificate of inspection issued by the national board of boiler and pressure vessel inspectors. (1935, c. 326, s. 12.)

§ 95-68. Fees for internal and external inspections.—The owner or user of a steam boiler, required by this article to be inspected by the chief boiler inspector or a deputy inspector, shall pay to the inspector six ($6.00) dollars for each fire tube boiler over thirty inches in diameter internally inspected and four ($4.00) dollars for each fire tube boiler over thirty inches in diameter externally inspected while under pressure and shall pay to the inspector four ($4.00) dollars for each fire tube boiler up to and including thirty inches in diameter internally inspected and three ($3.00) dollars for each fire tube boiler up to and including thirty inches in diameter externally inspected while under pressure. All water tube boilers shall be charged six ($6.00) dollars for each internal inspection and four ($4.00) dollars for each external inspection while under pressure. Not more than ten ($10.00) dollars shall be collected for any one fire tube boiler over thirty inches in diameter for any one year. Not more than seven ($7.00) dollars shall be collected for any one fire tube boiler up to and including thirty inches in diameter for any one year. Not more than ten ($10.00) dollars shall be collected for any water tube boiler for any one year: Provided, that one ($1.00) dollar of each internal inspection fee shall be the fee for the certificate of inspection required by § 95-64. The inspector shall give receipts for said fees and shall pay all sums so received to the commissioner of labor, who shall pay the same to the treasurer of the state. The treasurer of the state shall hold the fees collected under this section and under § 95-64 in a special account to pay the salaries and expenses incident to the administration of this article, the surplus, with the approval of the director of the budget, to be added to the appropriation of the division of standards and inspections of the department of labor for its general inspectional service. (1935, c. 326, s. 13; 1937, c. 125, s. 3; 1939, c. 361, s. 2.)

Editor's Note.—The 1939 amendment struck out this section as amended and inserted the above in place thereof.

§ 95-69. Bonds of chief inspector and deputy inspectors.—The chief inspector shall furnish a bond in the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000), and each of the deputy inspectors shall furnish a bond in the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000), conditioned upon the faithful performance of their duties and upon a true account of moneys handled by them respectively, and the payment thereof to the proper recipient. The cost of said bonds shall be paid by the state treasurer out of the special fund provided for in § 95-68. (1935, c. 326, s. 14; 1937, c. 125, s. 4.)

Editor's Note.—Prior to the 1937 amendment this section excepted certain counties and ground sawmills.

Art. 8. Bureau of Labor for the Deaf.

§ 95-70. Creation.—There shall be created in the department of labor a division devoted to the deaf. (1923, c. 122, s. 1; 1931, c. 312, s. 3; C. S. 7312(j).)

§ 95-71. Appointment of chief of bureau; duties.—The commissioner of labor shall appoint a competent deaf man to take charge of such division, who shall devote his time to the special work of labor for the deaf under the supervision of the commissioner of labor, and who shall be designated chief of the bureau of labor for the deaf. He shall collect statistics of the deaf, ascertain what trades or occupations are most suitable for them and best adapted to promote their interest, and use his best efforts to aid them in securing such employment as they may be fitted to engage in. He shall study the methods in use in the education of the deaf as exemplified in the deaf themselves, with a view to determining their practicability and respective values in lifting them to become self-supporting, useful citizens and enabling them to obtain the greatest amount of happiness in life. He shall keep a census of the deaf and obtain facts, information and statistics as to their condition in life, with a view to the betterment of their lot. He shall endeavor to obtain statistics and information of the condition of labor and employment and education of the deaf in other states, with a view to promoting the general welfare of the deaf in this state. He shall make reports and recommendations from time to time as may be provided by law, and he shall also issue special reports or pamphlets as may be deemed necessary, giving results and information that may be helpful. (1923, c. 122, ss. 2, 3; 1931, c. 312, s. 3; C. S. 7312(k).)

§ 95-72. Assignment of other duties.—In case the duties herein enumerated should not occupy all of the time of such chief of the bureau of labor for the deaf, he shall perform such other duties in the department of labor as may be assigned him by the commissioner of labor. (1923, c. 122, s. 5; 1931, c. 312, s. 3; C. S. 7312(m).)

Art. 9. Earnings of Employees in Interstate Commerce.

§ 95-73. Collections out of state to avoid exemptions forbidden.—No resident creditor or other holder of any book account, negotiable instrument, duebill or other monetary demand arising out of contract, due by or chargeable against any resident wage-earner or other salaried employee of any railway corporation or other corporation, firm, or individual engaged in interstate business shall send out of the state, assign, or transfer the same, for value or otherwise, with intent to thereby deprive such debtor of his personal earnings and property exempt by law from application to the payment of his debts under the laws of the state of North Carolina, by instituting or causing to be instituted thereon against such debtor, in any court outside of this state, in such creditor's own name or in the name of any other person, any action, suit, or proceeding for the attachment or garnishment of such debtor's earnings in the hands of his employer, when such creditor and debtor and the railway corporation or other corporation, firm, or individual owing the wages or salary intended to be reached are under the jurisdiction of the courts of this state. (1909, c. 504, s. 1; C. S. 6568.)

§ 95-74. Resident not to abet collection out of state.—No person residing or sojourning in this state shall counsel, aid, or abet any violation of the provisions of § 95-73. (1909, c. 504, s. 2; C. S. 6569.)

§ 95-75. Remedies for violation of section 95-73 or 95-74; damages; indictment.—Any person violating any provision of § 95-73 or 95-74 shall be answerable in damages to any debtor from whom any book account, negotiable instrument, duebill, or other monetary demand arising out of contract shall be collected, or against whose earnings any warrant of attachment or notice of garnishment shall be issued, in violation of the provisions of § 95-73, to the full amount of the debt thus collected, attached, or garnisheed, to be recovered by civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction in this state; and any person so offending shall likewise be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than two hundred dollars. (1909, c. 504, s. 3; C. S. 6570.)

§ 95-76. Institution of foreign suit, etc., evidence of intent to violate.—In any civil or criminal action instituted in any court of competent jurisdiction in this state for any violation of the provisions of §§ 95-73 and 95-74, proof of the institution or prosecution of any action, suit, or proceeding in violation of the provisions of § 95-73, or the issuance of service therein of any warrant of attachment, notice, or garnishment or other like writ for the garnishment of earnings of the defendant therein, or of the payment by the garnishee therein of any final judgment rendered in any such action, suit, or proceeding shall be deemed prima facie evidence of the intent of the creditor or other holder of the debt sued upon to deprive such debtor of his personal earnings and property exempt from application to the payment of his debts under the laws of this state, in violation of the provisions of this article. (1909, c. 504, s. 4; C. S. 6571.)

§ 95-77. Construction of article.—No provision of this article shall be so construed as to deprive any person entitled to its benefits of any legal or equitable remedy already possessed under the laws of this state. (1909, c. 504, s. 5; C. S. 6572.)

VI. Unemployment Compensation.

Art. 3. Employment Service Division.

Sec.
96-20. Duties of division; conformance to Wagner-Peyser Act; organization; director; employees.
96-21. Cooperation with federal board for vocational education.
96-22. Employment of minors; farm employment; promotion of Americanism.
96-23. Job placement; information; research and reports.
96-24. Local offices; cooperation with United States service; financial aid from United States.
96-25. Acceptance and use of donations.
96-26. Cooperation of towns, townships, and counties with division.
96-27. Method of handling employment service funds.
96-28. Annual appropriation.

Art. 3. Employment Service Division.

§ 96-20. Duties of division; conformance to Wagner-Peyser Act; organization; director; employees.—The employment service division of the Unemployment Compensation Commission shall establish and maintain free public employment offices in such number and in such places as may be necessary for the proper administration of this article, and for the purpose of performing such duties as are within the purview of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the states in the promotion of such system and for other purposes," approved June sixth, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-three (48 Stat., 113; U. S. C., Title 29, sec. 49(c)), as amended. The said division shall be administered by a full-time salaried director, who shall be charged with the duty to cooperate with any official or agency of the United States having powers or duties under the provisions of the said act of congress, as amended, and to do and perform all things necessary to secure to this state the benefits of the said act of congress, as amended, in the promotion and maintenance of a system of public employment offices. The provisions of the said act of congress, as amended, are hereby accepted by this state, in conformity with section four of said act, and this state will observe and comply with the requirements thereof. The state employment service division is hereby designated and constituted the agency of this state for the purpose of said act. The commission is directed to appoint the director, other officers, and employees of the state employment service. Such appointments shall be made in accordance with regulations prescribed by the director of the United States employment service. (Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; 1941, c. 108, s. 11.)

§ 96-21. Cooperation with federal board for vocational education.—The employment service division shall cooperate with the federal board for vocational education, division for rehabilitation of crippled soldiers and sailors, in endeavoring to secure suitable employment and fair treatment of the veterans of the world war. (1921, c. 131, s. 3; Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; C. S. 7312(c).)

§ 96-22. Employment of minors; farm employment; promotion of Americanism.—The employment service division shall have jurisdiction over all matters contemplated in this article pertaining to securing employment for all minors who avail themselves of the free employment service. The employment service division shall have power to so conduct its affairs that at all times it shall be in harmony with laws relating to child labor and compulsory education; to aid in inducing minors over sixteen, who cannot or do not for various reasons attend day school, to undertake promising skilled employment; to aid in influencing minors who do not come within the purview of compulsory education laws, and who do not attend day school, to avail themselves of continuation or special courses in existing night schools, vocational schools, part-time schools, trade schools, business schools, library schools, university extension courses, etc., so as to become more skilled in such occupation or vocation to which they are respectively inclined or particularly adapted; to aid in securing vocational employment on farms for town and city boys who are interested in agricultural work, and particularly town and city high school boys who include agriculture as an elective study; to cooperate with various social agencies schools, etc., in group organization of employed minors, particularly those of foreign parentage, in order to promote the development of real, practical Americanism through a broader knowledge of the duties of citizenship; to investigate methods of vocational rehabilitation of boys and girls who are maimed or crippled and ways and means for minimizing such handicap. (1921, c. 131, s. 4; Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; C. S. 7312(d).)

Editor's Note.—This section is summarized in 1 N. C. Law Rev. 308.

§ 96-23. Job placement; information; research and reports.—The employment service division shall make public, through the newspapers and other media, information as to situations it may have applicants to fill, and establish relations with employers for the purpose of supplying demands for labor. The division shall collect, collate, and publish statistical and other information relating to the work under its jurisdiction; investigate economic developments, and the extent and causes of unemployment and remedies therefor within and without the state, with the view of preparing for the information of the general assembly such facts as in its opinion may make further legislation desirable. (1921, c. 131, s. 5; Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; C. S. 7312(e).)

§ 96-24. Local offices; cooperation with United States service; financial aid from United States.—The employment service division is authorized to enter into agreement with the governing authorities of any municipality, county, township, or school corporation in the state for such period of time as may be deemed desirable for the purpose of establishing and maintaining local free employment offices, and for the extension of vocational guidance in cooperation with the United States employment service, and under and by virtue of any such agreement as aforesaid to pay, from any funds appropriated by the state for the purposes of this article, any part or the whole of the salaries, expenses or rent, maintenance, and equipment of offices and other expenses. (1921, c. 131, s. 6; 1935, c. 106, s. 4; 1931, c. 312, s. 3; Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; C. S. 7312(f).)

Editor's Note.—Prior to the amendment of 1935, this section applied to vocational guidance of minors. The section was extended by the amendment.

§ 96-25. Acceptance and use of donations.—It shall be lawful for the employment service division to receive, accept, and use, in the name of the people of the state, or any community or municipal corporation, as the donor may designate, by gift or devise, any moneys, buildings, or real estate for the purpose of extending the benefits of this article and for the purpose of giving assistance to deserving maimed or crippled boys and girls through vocational rehabilitation. (1921, c. 131, s. 7; 1931, c. 312, s. 3; Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; C. S. 7312(g).)

§ 96-26. Cooperation of towns, townships, and counties with division.—It shall be lawful for the governing authorities of any municipality, county, township, or school corporation in the state to enter into cooperative agreement with the employment service division and to appropriate and expend the necessary money upon such conditions as may be approved by the employment service division and to permit the use of public property for the joint establishment and maintenance of such offices as may be mutually agreed upon, and which will further the purpose of this article. (1921, c. 131, s. 8; 1931, c. 312, s. 3; 1935, c. 106, s. 5; Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; C. S. 7312(h).)

Editor's Note.—The amendment of 1935 inserted a clause reading "upon such conditions as may be approved by the commissioner of labor."

§ 96-27. Method of handling employment service funds.—All federal funds received by this state under the Wagner-Peyser Act (48 Stat. 113; Title 29, U. S. C., § 49) as amended, and all state funds appropriated or made available to the employment service division shall be paid into the unemployment compensation administration fund, and said moneys are hereby made available to the state employment service to be expended as provided in this article and by said act of Congress. For the purpose of establishing and maintaining free public employment offices, said division is authorized to enter into agreements with any political subdivision of this state or with any private, nonprofit organization, and as a part of any such agreement the commission may accept moneys, services, or quarters as a contribution to the unemployment compensation administration fund. (1935, c. 106, s. 7; Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 12; 1941, c. 108, s. 11.)

Editor's Note.—The 1941 amendment struck out the words "the special employment service account in" formerly appearing after the word "into" in line five of the text of this section.

§ 96-28. Annual appropriation.—There is hereby appropriated to the unemployment compensation commission seventy-five thousand dollars annually, for the purpose of paying the state's contribution towards the expenses of the employment service division. (Ex. Sess. 1936, c. 1, s. 13; 1941, c. 108, s. 12.)

VII. License Taxes.

§ 105-90. Emigrant and employment agents.—(a) Every person, firm, or corporation, either as agent or principal, engaged in soliciting, hiring, and/or contracting with laborers, male or female, in this state for employment out of the state shall apply for and obtain from the commissioner of revenue a state license for each county for the privilege of engaging in such business, and shall pay for such license a tax of five hundred dollars ($500.00) for each county in which such business is carried on.

(b) Every person, firm, or corporation who or which engages in the business of securing employment for a person or persons and charging therefor a fee, commission, or other compensation shall apply for and obtain from the commissioner of revenue a state license for the privilege of engaging in such business in this state, and shall pay for such license the following annual tax for each location in which such business is carried on:

In unincorporated communities and in cities and towns of less than 2,500 population	$100.00
In cities or towns of 2,500 and less than 5,000 population	200.00
In cities or towns of 5,000 and less than 10,000 population	300.00
In cities or towns of 10,000 or more population	500.00

Provided, that this section shall not apply to any employment agency operated by the federal government, the state, any county or municipality, or whose sole business is procuring employees for work in the production and harvesting of farm crops within the state: And provided further, that under this section the tax on any employment agency whose sole business is the placement of teachers and/or other school employees and which has been approved by the state superintendent of public instruction shall be twenty-five dollars ($25.00): Provided further, that the tax on employment agencies where the sole business is the placement of domestic servants or unregistered nurses for employment within the state shall be twenty-five dollars ($25.00).

(c) Any person, firm, or corporation violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined, in addition to other penalties, not less than one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) and/or imprisoned, in the discretion of the court.

(d) Counties, cities and towns may levy a license tax on the business taxed under this section not in excess of that levied by the state. (1939, c. 158, s. 154.)

Generally.—This statute is a severe measure imposing a tax upon the business of hiring hands, and its validity can be sustained only upon this view. Lane v. Commissioners, 139 N. C. 443, 445, 52 S. E. 140. See also State v. Hunt, 139 N. C. 686, 40 S. E. 216.

The occupation of an "emigrant agent," as defined in chapter 75, Acts of 1891, similar to this section, does not belong to that class of trades or occupations which are so inherently harmful or dangerous to the public that they may, either directly or indirectly, be restricted or prohibited. State v. Moore, 113 N. C. 697, 698, 18 S. E. 342.

Scope of Section.—In Theus v. State, 114 Ga. 53, 39 S. E. 913, Lewis, J., construing a section worded exactly as this, says, "The legislative enactment imposing a tax upon emigrant agents, and providing a penalty for the failure to register and pay such tax, was clearly intended to apply to persons who, as agents of others, make it their business to hire laborers in this state to be sent beyond the limits of the state and then employed by others. To extend its application to a resident of another state, who, being in this state, incidentally employs laborers on his own behalf to work for him beyond the limits of this state, would be entirely unwarranted." Cited and approved in Carr v. Commissioners, 136 N. C. 125, 127, 48 S. E. 597.

Employment of Laborers for Work in Another State.—This section does not apply to a person who comes into this state and employs laborers to work for him in another state. Carr v. Commissioners, 136 N. C. 125, 48 S. E. 597.

An officer of a foreign corporation coming into this state and hiring hands for employment by himself as the officer of the corporation, is not "engaged in the business of hiring hands," etc., and is not liable for the tax on emigrant agents, under this section. Lane v. Commissioners, 139 N. C. 443, 52 S. E. 140.

Amount of Tax Not Reviewable.—A tax on the business of procuring laborers for employment outside the state being an exercise of the power of the state to levy taxes, the amount is not reviewable by the courts. State v. Roberson, 136 N. C. 587, 48 S. E. 595. The court said: "When the constitution confers upon the legislature the power to levy taxes, the amount of the tax to be levied is committed to that department of the government and not open to review by the judicial department. We may inquire into the question of power, but not as to the manner of its exercise."

Art. 1. Child Labor Regulations.

§ 110-1. Minimum age.—No minor under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or allowed to work in, about, or in connection with any gainful occupation at any time: Provided, that minors between fourteen and sixteen years of age may be employed outside school hours and during school vacations, but not in a factory or in any occupation otherwise prohibited by law; and Provided, that boys twelve years of age and over securing a certificate from the department of labor, may be employed outside school hours in the sale or distribution of newspapers, magazines or periodicals subject to the provisions of § 110-8 relating to employment of minors in street trades and to such rules and regulations as may be provided under § 95-11. Nothing in this article shall be construed to apply to the employment of a minor engaged in domestic or farm work performed under the direction or authority of the minor's parent or guardian. (1937, c. 317, s. 1.)

Editor's Note.—The cases cited below were decided under the former law.

Employment before 1903 Act.—As to employment of children before the child labor act of 1903, and the liability for damages resulting therefrom, see Ward v. Allen, 126 N. C. 948, 36 S. E. 194; Fitzgerald v. Furniture Co., 131 N. C. 636, 645, 42 S. E. 946; Hendrix v. Cotton Mills, 138 N. C. 169, 170, 50 S. E. 561.

Employment Since the 1903 Act.—As to employment of children since the child labor act of 1903, see Rolin v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 300, 310, 53 S. E. 891; Leathers v. Tobacco Co., 144 N. C. 330, 342, 57 S. E. 11; Starnes v. Mfg. Co., 147 N. C. 556, 61 S. E. 525.

Employment Since the 1907 Act.—As to employment of children since the child labor act of 1907, see McGowan v. Mfg. Co., 167 N. C. 192, 82 S. E. 1028; Evans v. Lumber Co., 174 N. C. 31, 93 S. E. 430.

Effect of Decisions on Acts of 1903 and 1907.

1. The statute is constitutional.
2. It applies to employment of factories and manufacturing establishments, and to no other.
3. The employment of a child under twelve years of age in a factory or manufacturing establishment is negligence per se.
4. Such negligence is proximate, if the child is injured as the result of his employment.
5. There is no assumption of risk by the child.
6. The negligence of the parent, if any, in permitting the employment, cannot be imputed to the child.
7. In addition to the usual presumption against contributory negligence, there is a presumption that the child has not the capacity to appreciate the danger of his employment.
8. This presumption may be rebutted. Pettit v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 156 N. C. 119, 127, 72 S. E. 195.

Messenger or Delivery Service Included.—This section does prohibit the employment of "any one under 14 years of age" in messenger or delivery service. Pettitt v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 186 N. C. 9, 16, 118 S. E. 840.

Does Not Apply to Volunteer Workman.—Where the plaintiff, a boy under fourteen, is a mere volunteer injured in the performance of a simple and ordinary task, this section has no application. Reaves v. Catawba Mfg., etc., Co., 206 N. C. 523, 174 S. E. 413.

§ 110-2. Hours of labor. — No minor under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or allowed to work in, about or in connection with any gainful occupation more than six consecutive days in any one week, or more than forty hours in any one week, or more than eight hours in any one day, nor shall any minor under sixteen years of age be so employed, permitted or allowed to work before seven o'clock in the morning or after six o'clock in the evening of any day. No minor over sixteen years of age and under eighteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or allowed to work in or about or in connection with any gainful occupation for more than six consecutive days in any one week, or more than forty-eight hours in any one week, or more than nine hours in any one day, nor shall any minor between sixteen and eighteen years of age be so employed, permitted or allowed to work before six o'clock in the morning or after twelve o'clock midnight of any day, except boys between the ages of sixteen and eighteen may be permitted to work until one o'clock in the morning as messengers where the offices of the company for which they work do not close before that hour: Provided, that no girl between sixteen and eighteen years of age shall be so employed, permitted, or allowed to work before six o'clock in the morning or after nine o'clock in the evening of any day; and Provided further, that boys twelve years of age and over, employed in the sale or distribution of newspapers, magazines or periodicals outside school hours shall be subject to the provisions of § 110-8 relating to employment of minors in street trades, and to such rules and regulations as may be provided under § 95-11: Provided further, that minors under eighteen years of age may be employed in a concert or a theatrical performance, under such rules and regulations as the state commissioner of labor may prescribe, up to twelve o'clock midnight: and provided further, that telegraph messenger boys in towns where a full-time service is not maintained on Sundays may work seven days per week, but not for more than two hours on Sunday. The combined hours of work and hours in school of children under sixteen employed outside school hours shall not exceed a total of eight per day. (1937, c. 317, s. 2.)

Violation of Section Must Be Shown to Be Proximate Cause of Injury.—In order to make an employer liable in damages for an injury sustained by an employee between 14 and 16 years of age being required to work more than 8 hours a day in violation of this section, it must be shown that the violation of the statute was a proximate cause of injury complained of. Williamson v. Old Dominion Box Co., 205 N. C. 350, 171 S. E. 335.

§ 110-3. Lunch period.—No minor under sixteen years of age shall be employed or permitted to work for more than five hours continuously without an interval of at least thirty minutes for a lunch period, and no period of less than thirty minutes shall be deemed to interrupt a continuous period of work. (1937, c. 317, s. 3.)

§ 110-4. Posting of hours. — Every employer shall post and keep conspicuously posted in the establishment wherein any minor under eighteen is employed, permitted, or allowed to work, a printed abstract of this article and a list of the occupations prohibited to such minors, to be furnished by the state department of labor. (1937, c. 317, s. 4.)

§ 110-5. Time records.—Every employer shall keep a time-book and/or record, which shall state the name of each minor employed, and which shall indicate the number of hours worked by said minor on each day of the week, and the amount of wages paid during each pay period. Such time record shall be kept on file for at least one year after the entry of the record, and shall be open to the inspection of the state department of labor. (1937, c. 317, s. 5.)

§ 110-6. Hazardous occupations prohibited for minors under sixteen.—No minor under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or allowed to work on or in connection with power-driven machinery. No minor under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or allowed to work in or about or in connection with: Construction work of any kind, ship building, mines or quarries, stone cutting or polishing, the manufacture, transportation or use of explosives or highly inflammable substances, ore-reduction works, smelters, hot rolling mills, furnaces, foundries, forging shops or any other place in which the heating, melting or heat treatment of metals is carried on; lumbering or logging operations, saw or planing mills, pulp or paper mills, or in operating or assisting in operating punch presses or stamping machines, if the clearance between the ram and the die or the stripper exceeds one-fourth inch; power-driven wood-working machinery, cutting machines having a guillotine action, openers, pickers, cards or lappers, power shears, machinery having a heavy rolling or crush-action, corrugating, crimping, or embossing machines, meat grinding machines, dough brakes or mixing machines in bakeries or cracker making machinery, grinding, abrasive, polishing or buffing machines: Provided, that apprentices operating under conditions of bona fide apprenticeship may grind their own tools; machinery used in the cold rolling of heavy metal stock, metal plate bending machines, power-driven metal planing machines, circular saws, power-driven laundry or dry cleaning machinery, oiling, cleaning or wiping machinery or shafting or applying belts to pulleys; or in the operation or repair of elevators or other hoisting apparatus, or as drivers of trucks or other motor vehicles, or in the operation of any unguarded machinery. (1937, c. 317, s. 6.)

In or About or in Connection with Quarry.—In Campbell Contracting Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 21 Fed. (2d) 909, 910, it is said: "We cannot agree with the contention that a boy operating a hoist, that by means of a cable pulls cars loaded with stone out of a quarry 150 to 175 feet distant, and whose duty it was upon signal to have the whistle blown, warning of a blast, and whose further duty it was to warn passersby, was not working 'in or about or in connection with a quarry.' "

§ 110-7. Hazardous occupations prohibited for minors under eighteen.—No minor under the age of eighteen years shall be employed, permitted, or allowed to work at any processes where quartz or any other form of silicon dioxide or an asbestos silicate is present in powdered form, or at work involving exposure to lead or any of its compounds in any form, or at work involving exposure to benzol or any benzol compound which is volatile or which can penetrate the skin, or at work in spray painting, or in the handling of unsterilized hides or animal or human hair. Nor shall any minor under eighteen be employed or permitted to work in, about or in connection with any establishment where alcoholic liquors are distilled, rectified, compounded, brewed, manufactured, bottled, sold, or dispensed, or in a pool or billiard room: Provided, however, that this section shall not prohibit a minor under the age of eighteen years from working in any establishment where beer is sold and not consumed on the premises, and to which has been issued only an "off premises" license for the sale of beer. Nor shall any girl under the age of eighteen years be employed, permitted or allowed to work as a messenger in the distribution or delivery of goods or messages for any person, firm or corporation engaged in the business of transmitting or delivering goods or messages.

Nor shall any minor under eighteen years of age be employed, permitted, or allowed to work in any place of employment, or at any occupation hazardous or injurious to the life, health, safety or welfare of such minor. It shall be the duty of the state department of labor and the said state department of labor shall have power, jurisdiction, and authority, after due notice and after hearings duly held, to issue general or special orders, which shall have the force of law, prohibiting the employment of such minors in any place of employment or at any occupation hazardous or injurious to the life, health, safety or welfare of such minors. (1937, c. 317, s. 7; 1943, c. 670.)

Editor's Note.—The 1943 amendment added the proviso to the second sentence.

§ 110-8. Employment of minors in street trades; sale or distribution of newspapers, etc. — No boy under fourteen years of age and no girl under eighteen years of age shall distribute, sell, expose or offer for sale newspapers, magazines, periodicals, candies, drinks, peanuts, or other merchandise in any street or public place, or exercise the trade of bootblack in any street or public place. No boy under sixteen years of age shall be employed or permitted or allowed to work at any of the trades or occupations mentioned in this section after seven p. m. or before 6 a. m., or unless he has an employment certificate issued in accordance with § 110-9. The state commissioner of labor shall have authority to make, promulgate and enforce such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the enforcement of this section, not inconsistent with this article or existing law.

Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent male persons over fourteen years of age from distributing newspapers, magazines and periodicals on fixed routes, seven days per week: Provided, that such persons shall not be employed nor allowed to work after eight o'clock p. m. and before five o'clock a. m., and that the hours of work and the hours in school do not exceed eight in any one day, except boys twelve years of age and over who have secured a certificate from the department of labor for the sale or distribution of newspapers, magazines or periodicals: Provided further, that such person shall not be permitted or allowed to work more than four hours per day nor more than twenty-four hours per week: Provided further, that nothing in this article shall be construed to prevent boys twelve years of age and over, upon securing a proper certificate from the department of labor, from being employed outside school hours in the sale or distribution of newspapers, magazines and periodicals (where not more than seventy-five customers are served in one day): Provided, that such boys shall not be employed between the hours of seven o'clock p. m. and six o'clock a. m., nor for more than ten hours in any one week. (1937, c. 317, s. 8.)

§ 110-9. Employment certificate required. — Before any minor under eighteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or allowed to work in, about or in connection with any gainful occupation, the person employing such minor shall procure and keep on file an employment certificate for such minor, issued as hereinafter prescribed. In case of a minor engaged in street trade where the relationship of employer and employee does not exist between such minor and the supplier of the merchandise which the minor sells, the parent or guardian of such minor shall be deemed the employer of such minor and shall procure and keep on file the employment certificate herein required. (1937, c. 317, s. 9.)

Newsboy Not Employee.—A newsboy engaged in selling papers is not an employee of the newspaper within the meaning of that term as used in the workmen's compensation act, the newsboy not being on the newspaper's payroll and being without authority to solicit subscriptions and being free to select his own methods of affecting sales, although some degree of supervision was exercised by the newspaper. Creswell v. Charlotte News Pub. Co., 204 N. C. 380, 168 S. E. 408.

§ 110-10. Officers authorized to issue certificates.—The employment certificate required by this article shall be issued only by county or city superintendents of public welfare in such form and under such conditions as may be prescribed by the state department of labor. (1937, c. 317, s. 10.)

§ 110-11. Refusal and revocation of employment certificate.—The person designated to issue employment certificates may refuse to grant such certificate, or may revoke such certificate after issuance if, in his judgment, the best interests of the minor would be served by such refusal or revocation. Employer, parent or guardian of the minor whose employment certificate has been refused or revoked may appeal to the commissioner of labor. (1937, c. 317, s. 11.)

§ 110-12. Method of issuing employment certificates.—The person designated to issue employment certificates shall issue such certificates only upon the application in person of the minor desiring employment, and after having approved and filed the following papers:

(1) A promise of employment signed by the prospective employer or by some one duly authorized by him, setting forth the specific nature of the occupation in which he intends to employ such minor, and the number of hours per day and days per week which said minor shall be employed.

(2) Evidence of age showing that minor is of the age required by this article, which evidence shall consist of one of the following proofs of age and shall be required in the order herein designated, as follows:

(a) A duly attested transcript of the birth certificate filed according to law with a registrar of vital statistics, or other officer charged with the duty of recording births; or

(b) A baptismal certificate or transcript of the record of baptism, duly certified, and showing the date and place of birth; or

(c) Other documentary record of age (other than a school record or an affidavit of age) such as a Bible record, passport or transcript thereof, duly certified, or life insurance policy which shall appear to the satisfaction of the issuing officer to be good and sufficient evidence of age; or

(d) In the case none of the aforesaid proofs of age shall be obtainable, and only in such case, the issuing officer may accept the signed statement of the physician authorized to make the physical examinations required by this section, stating that, after examination, it is his opinion that the minor has attained the age required by law for the occupation in which he expects to engage. Such statement shall be accompanied by an affidavit, signed by the minor's parents or guardian, certifying to the name, date and place of birth of the minor and that the proofs of age specified in the preceding sub-divisions of this section cannot be produced.

(3) A statement of physical fitness, signed by a public health, public school or other physician assigned to this duty by the issuing officer with the approval of the state department of labor, setting forth that such minor has been thoroughly examined by such physician and that he is either physically fit to be employed in any legal occupation, or that he is physically fit to be employed under certain limitations, specified in the statement. If the statement of physical fitness is limited, the employment certificate issued thereon shall state clearly the limitations upon its use, and shall be valid only when used under the limitations so stated. The minor shall not be charged a fee for such examination or statement of physical fitness. The method of making such examinations shall be prescribed by the state department of labor.

(4) A school record signed by the principal of the school which the minor has last attended or by some one duly authorized by him, giving the full name, date of birth, grade last completed, and residence of the minor.

The employment certificate shall be delivered to the prospective employer of the minor for whom the employment certificate is issued, and such certificate shall be valid only for the employer named therein and for the occupation designated in the promise of employment. (1937, c. 317, s. 12.)

Editor's Note.—For decisions under former law, see Rolin v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 300, 53 S. E. 891; Williamson v. Old Dominion Box Co., 205 N. C. 350, 171 S. E. 335.

§ 110-13. Employment certificate as evidence.—Said employment certificate duly issued shall be conclusive evidence of the age of the minor for whom issued in any proceeding involving the employment of the minor under the child labor or workmen's compensation law or any other labor law of the state, as to any act occurring subsequent to its issuance. (1937, c. 317, s. 13.)

§ 110-14. Regular and vacation employment certificates.—Employment certificates shall be of two kinds, regular certificates permitting employment during school hours, and vacation certificates, permitting employment during the school vacation and during the school term at such time as the public schools are not in session. (1937, c. 317, s. 14.)

§ 110-15. Duties of employers in regard to employment certificates.—Every employer receiving an employment certificate shall, during the period of the minor's employment, keep such certificate on file at the place of employment and accessible to any certificate-issuing officer, attendance officer, inspector, or other person authorized to enforce this article. The failure of any employer to produce for inspection such employment certificate shall be prima facie evidence of the unlawful employment of the minor. (1937, c. 317, s. 15.)

§ 110-16. Certificates of age. — Upon request, it shall be the duty of the officer authorized to issue employment certificates to issue to any person between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one desiring to enter employment a certificate of age upon presentation of the same proof of age as is required for the issuance of employment certificates under this article, and such certificate duly issued shall be conclusive evidence of the age of the minor for whom issued in any proceeding involving the employment of the minor under the child labor or workmen's compensation law or any other labor law of the state, as to any act occurring subsequent to its issuance. (1937, c. 317, s. 16.)

§ 110-17. State supervision of the issuance of employment certificates.—The state department of labor shall prescribe such rules and regulations for the issuance of employment certificates and age certificates as will promote uniformity and efficiency in the administration of this article. It also shall supply to local issuing officers all blank forms to be used in connection with the issuance of such certificates. Duplicates of each employment or age certificate shall be mailed by the issuing officer to the state department of labor within one week after issuance. The state department of labor may revoke any such certificate if in its judgment it was improperly issued or if the minor is illegally employed. If the certificate be revoked, the issuing officer and the employer shall be notified of such action in writing, and such minor shall not thereafter be employed or permitted to work until a new certificate has been legally obtained. (1937, c. 317, s. 17.)

§ 110-18. Rules and regulations.—The commissioner of labor of North Carolina shall have the power to make such rules and regulations for enforcing and carrying out the provisions of this article as may be deemed necessary by said commissioner. (1937, c. 317, s. 18.)

§ 110-19. Inspection and prosecutions.—It shall be the duty of the state department of labor and of the inspectors and agents of said state department of labor to enforce the provisions of this article, to make complaints against persons violating its provisions, and to prosecute violations of the same. The said state department of labor, its inspectors and agents shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time any place or establishment covered by the article, and to have access to employment certificates kept on file by the employer and such other records as may aid in the enforcement of this article. School attendance officers are likewise empowered to visit and inspect places where minors may be employed.

Any person authorized to enforce this article may require an employer of a minor for whom an employment certificate is not on file to either furnish him within ten days the evidence required for an employment certificate showing that the minor is at least eighteen years of age, or to cease to employ or permit or allow such minor to work. (1937, c. 317, s. 19.)

§ 110-20. Penalties.—Whoever employs or permits or allows any minor to be employed or to work in violation of this article, or of any order or ruling issued under the provisions of this article, or obstructs the state department of labor, its officers or agents, or any other persons authorized to inspect places of employment under this article, and whoever having under his control or custody any minor, permits or allows him to be employed or to work in violation of this article, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than five dollars ($5.00) nor more than fifty dollars ($50.00), or imprisonment for not more than thirty days, or both such fine and imprisonment. Each day during which any violation of this article continues after notice from the state department of labor to the proprietor, manager, or other officer of the partnership, firm or corporation, shall constitute a separate and distinct offense, and the employment of any minor in violation of the article shall, with respect to each minor so employed, constitute a separate and distinct offense. The penalties specified in this article may be recovered by the state in an action for debt brought before any court of competent jurisdiction, or through criminal proceedings, as may be deemed proper. (1937, c. 317, s. 20.)

(Under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944)

Veterans should read this explanation before signing the application form

1. The Veterans Administration has no authority to make a loan. The loan is made by banks and other lenders at not over 4 percent interest. When made in accordance with the regulations it may be partially guaranteed by the Administrator. The guaranty is available on purchase money notes also. For convenience these transactions are called loans in this explanation. Payments may extend over a period of 20 years subject however to the requirement that the maturity shall not be in excess of the normal useful life of the collateral and the earning capacity of the business.

2. If the veteran fails to make payments as they become due according to his contract with the lender the property may be foreclosed. If the Veterans Administration is required to pay any or all of the amount guaranteed, the veteran will become obligated for the repayment to the Government of the amount paid on account of the guaranty.

3. Interest for the first year on the amount guaranteed will be paid by the Government. The veteran does not repay this amount.

4. Any lender has the right to refuse to make a loan, with or without stating a reason. The fact that a particular lender refuses to lend the money does not mean that another lender may not be willing to lend it. The Veterans Administration will determine whether to guarantee the loan on the basis of the facts presented, irrespective of who may be the proposed lender (or seller).

5. Neither the act nor the regulations limit the amount of the loan, but the maximum amount of guaranty available to an eligible veteran is $2,000. Once this amount has been guaranteed by the Administrator it cannot be made available on another loan, for any purpose.

6. Under certain conditions the Administrator may guarantee a loan secured by a "second mortgage," obtained for the purpose of acquiring a business or business realty, if the "first mortgage" is to secure a loan "made, guaranteed, or insured" by a "Federal agency." Most lenders can furnish details about such a loan.

7. The Veterans Administration will not undertake to advise a veteran as to the purchase or nonpurchase of a specific property as this is a decision for which the veteran must accept personal responsibility, but information of a general character may be made available. However, there may be essential elements of a proposed transaction which require specialized knowledge and it may be to the veteran's interest to consult experts in such matters whose own interests are not involved, before agreeing to any transaction. Similarly it may be advisable to consult disinterested experts as to the legal and other details pertaining to the transaction.

8. You may obtain a loan for the total price of the equipment, machinery, or tools you desire to purchase, or you may obtain a loan for the initial down payment if you prefer to conserve the amount of guaranty that will be required to obtain the loan. The loan for a down payment may be obtained for as much as one-third of the purchase price but may not be in excess of $1,000. The smaller down payment you make, the less of your guaranty right you will have to use. This is because you will not need to borrow so much for the down payment. This is the amount for which you will need the guaranty, not the remaining balance. On the other hand there are many situations where in fact it will be better business to make a larger down payment.

Circumstances will govern which plan is to your best interest, but it is important to remember that the total guaranty available to you is $2,000. Later you may need an additional loan for some permissible business purpose. Furthermore, should you desire to purchase a home or farm, the loan will ordinarily require a substantial guaranty and, therefore, you should endeavor to conserve the amount of your guaranty.

9. Read the entire Application Form 1842 and Exhibit A, Form 1842B. This will suggest matters which, while not precisely covered in the application, require careful consideration in the purchase of a business or the purchase of fixtures, machinery, equipment, tools, or supplies, if you are going to establish a new business, for example:

(a) Experience in the line of business you intend to buy or establish is one of your most valuable assets. If you lack the experience but have some knowledge of the business, it may be desirable to establish a partnership with someone who has had actual experience in operating the same kind of a business. Most newly established businesses fail for lack of managerial capacity or sufficient working capital.

(b) Guaranty of loans to provide working capital is not included in the Act. It is, therefore, an absolute necessity that you have sufficient cash or other working capital to assure the business a chance of success. Without sufficient working capital you will be in immediate difficulty. Budget your operations realistically and obtain expert accounting advice with respect to records you will require for tax purposes and other reports required by various State and Federal laws that regulate business.

(c) If you are going to be a retailer, choose the location of your business carefully, as a great deal of your chance for success depends on location, the kind of people likely to buy, the amount of the rent, the condition of the building, the modernness of fixtures, and store front. Check your competition and know what you will have to meet. Decide on your policies of operation, lower prices, poorer quality and volume, or higher-priced quality merchandise. Be sure you have the temperament necessary to meet and sell the public.

(d) The problems of manufacturing or wholesaling involve an entirely different set of factors, but here again experience and working capital are most frequently the deciding factors between success or failure.

10. The purchase or establishment of any business has many hazards. Eliminate all the foreseeable and be sure you are prepared for some of the unforeseen. A copy of the regulations, which are part of the contract, is available at any office of the Veterans Administration and probably at any bank or other lending institution.

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

79TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 380

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JANUARY 22, 1945

Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, and Mr. O'MAHONEY) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

A BILL

To establish a national policy and program for assuring continuing full employment in a free competitive economy, through the concerted efforts of industry, agriculture, labor, State and local governments, and the Federal Government.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Full Employment Act of 1945".

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby declares that—

(a) It is the policy of the United States to foster free competitive enterprise and the investment of private capital in

1 trade and commerce and in the development of the natural
2 resources of the United States;
3 (b) All Americans able to work and seeking work have 4 the right to useful, remunerative, regular, and full-time
5 employment, and it is the policy of the United States to 6 assure the existence at all times of sufficient employment
7 opportunities to enable all Americans who have finished their 8 schooling and who do not have full-time housekeeping respon-
9 sibilities freely to exercise this right;
10 (c) In order to carry out the policies set forth in sub-
11 sections (a) and (b) of this section, and in order to (1)
12 promote the general welfare of the Nation; (2) foster and 13 protect the American home and the American family a 14 the foundation of the American way of life; (3) raise the 15 standard of living of the American people; (4) provide 16 adequate employment opportunities for returning veterans;
17 (5) contribute to the full utilization of our national re-
18 sources; (6) develop trade and commerce among the several 19 States and with foreign nations; (7) preserve and strengthen
20 competitive private enterprise, particularly small business
21 enterprise; (8) strengthen the national defense and security;
22 and (9) contribute to the establishment and maintenance of 23 lasting peace among nations, it is essential that continuing
24 full employment be maintained in the United States;
25 (d) In order to assist industry, agriculture, labor, and

1 State and local governments in achieving continuing full
2 employment, it is the responsibility of the Federal Govern-
3 ment to pursue such consistent and openly arrived at eco-
4 nomic policies and programs as will stimulate and encourage
5 the highest feasible levels of employment opportunities
6 through private and other non-Federal investment and
7 expenditure;

8 (e) To the extent that continuing full employment
9 cannot otherwise be achieved, it is the further responsi-
10 bility of the Federal Government to provide such volume
11 of Federal investment and expenditure as may be needed
12 to assure continuing full employment; and 13 (f) Such investment and expenditure by the Federal 14 Government shall be designed to contribute to the national 15 wealth and well-being, and to stimulate increased employ-

16 ment opportunities by private enterprise.

17 THE NATIONAL PRODUCTION AND EMPLOYMENT BUDGET

18 SEC. 3. (a) The President shall transmit to Congress
19 at the beginning of each regular session the National Pro-20 duction and Employment Budget (hereinafter referred to 21 as the "National Budget"), which shall set forth in sum-
22 mary and detail, for the ensuing fiscal year or such longer
23 period as the President may deem appropriate—

24 (1) the estimated size of the labor force, including
25 the self-employed in industry and agriculture;

1 (2) the estimated aggregate volume of investment
2 and expenditure by private enterprises, consumers, State
3 and local governments, and the Federal Government,
4 required to produce such volume of the gross national
5 product, at the expected level of prices, as will be neces-
6 sary to provide employment opportunities for such labor
7 force (such dollar volume being hereinafter referred to 8 as the "full employment volume of production") ; and 9 (3) the estimated aggregate volume of prospective
10 investment and expenditure by private enterprises,
11 consumers, State and local governments, and the Federal 12 Government (not taking into account any increased or 13 decreased investment or expenditure which might be 14 expected to result from the programs set forth in such 15 Budget).
16 The estimates and information herein called for shall take ac-
17 count of such foreign investments and expenditure for exports
18 and imports as affect the volume of the gross national product.
19 (b) The extent, if any, by which the estimated aggre-
20 gate volume of prospective investment and expenditure for 21 any fiscal year or other period, as set forth in the National 22 Budget in accordance with paragraph (a) (3) of this sec-
23 tion, is less than the estimated aggregate volume of invest-
24 ment and expenditure required to assure a full employment
25 volume of production, as set forth in the National Budget in

1 accordance with paragraph (a) (2) of this section, shall for 2 the purposes of this title be regarded as a prospective defi-
3 ciency in the National Budget. When there is a prospective
4 deficiency in the National Budget for any fiscal year or other
5 period, the President shall set forth in such Budget a general
6 program for encouraging such increased non-Federal invest-
7 ment and expenditure, particularly investment and expendi-
8 ture which will promote increased employment opportunities
9 by private enterprise, as will prevent such deficiency to the 10 greatest possible extent. The President shall also include in 11 such Budget such recommendations for legislation relating to 12 such program as he may deem necessary or desirable. Such 13 program may include, but need not be limited to, current 14 and projected Federal policies and activities with reference
15 to banking and currency, monopoly and competition, wages
16 and working conditions, foreign trade and investment, agri-
17 culture, taxation, social security, the development of natural 18 resources, and such other matters as may directly or 19 indirectly affect the level of non-Federal investment and 20 expenditure.

21 (c) To the extent, if any, that such increased non-Fed-
22 eral investment and expenditure as may be expected to result 23 from actions taken under the program set forth in accordance 24 with subsection (b) of this section are deemed insuffi-
25 cient to provide a full employment volume of production,

1 the President shall transmit a general program for such 2 Federal investment and expenditure as will be sufficient to 3 bring the aggregate volume of investment and expenditure
4 by private business, consumers, State and local government,
5 and the Federal Government, up to the level required to 6 assure a full employment volume of production. Such pro-
7 gram shall be designed to contribute to the national wealth
8 and well-being, and to stimulate additional non-Federal in-
9 vestment and expenditure. Any of such programs calling for 10 the construction of public works by the Federal Government
11 shall provide for the performance of the necessary construc-
12 tion work by private concerns under contracts awarded in 13 accordance with applicable laws, except where the perform-
14 ance of such work by some other method is necessary by 15 reason of special circumstances or is authorized by other
16 provisions of law.

17 (d) If the estimated aggregate volume of prospective
18 investment and expenditure for any fiscal year or other 19 period, as set forth in the National Budget in accordance 20 with paragraph (a) (3) of this section, is more than the 21 estimated aggregate volume of investment and expenditure
22 required to assure a full employment volume of production,
23 as set forth in the National Budget in accordance with para-
24 graph (a) (2) of this section, the President shall set forth
25 in such Budget a general program for preventing inflationary

1 economic dislocations, or diminishing the aggregate volume
2 of investment and expenditure to the level required to assure
3 a full employment volume of production, or both.
4 (e) The programs referred to in subsections (b),
5 (c), and (d) of this section shall include such measures
6 as may be necessary to assure that monopolistic practices
7 with respect to prices, production, or distribution, or other
8 monopolistic practices, will not interfere with the achievement
9 of the purposes of this Act.
10 (f) The National Budget shall include a report on the 11 distribution of the national income during the preceding fiscal 12 year, or such longer period as the President may deem ap-
13 propriate, together with an evaluation of the effect upon 14 the distribution of the national income of the programs set
15 forth in such Budget.
16 (g) The President may from time to time transmit
17 to Congress such supplemental or revised estimates, infor-
18 mation, programs, or legislative recommendations as he 19 may deem necessary or desirable in connection with the 20 National Budget.
21 PREPARATION OF NATIONAL BUDGET
22 SEC. 4. (a) The National Budget shall be prepared in 23 the Executive Office of the President under the general di-
24 rection and supervision of the President, and in consultation

1 with the members of his Cabinet and other heads of depart-
2 ments and establishments.

3 (b) The President shall transmit to the several depart-
4 ments and establishments such preliminary estimates and 5 other information as will enable them to prepare such plans
6 and programs as may be needed during the ensuing or 7 subsequent fiscal years to help achieve a full employment
8 volume of production.

9 (c) The President may establish such advisory boards
10 or committees composed of representatives of industry, agri-
11 culture, labor, and State and local governments, and others, 12 as he may deem advisable for the purpose of advising and 13 consulting on methods of achieving the objectives of this Act.

14 JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE NATIONAL BUDGET

15 SEC. 5. (a) There is hereby established a Joint Com-
16 mittee on the National Budget, to be composed of the chair-
17 men and ranking minority members of the Senate Com-
18 mittees on Appropriations, Banking and Currency, Educa-
19 tion and Labor, and Finance, and seven additional Members
20 of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate;
21 and the chairmen and ranking minority members of the House
22 Committees on Appropriations, Banking and Currency,
23 Labor, and Ways and Means, and seven additional Members
24 of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the 25 Speaker of the House of Representatives. The party repre-

1 sentation of the Joint Committee shall reflect the relative
2 membership of the majority and minority parties in the 3 Senate and the House of Representatives.

4 (b) It shall be the function of the Joint Committee—

5 (1) to make a study of the National Budget trans-
6 mitted to Congress by the President in accordance with 7 section 3 of this Act; and

8 (2) to report to the Senate and the House of Rep-
9 resentatives, not later than March 1 of each year, its 10 findings and recommendations with respect to the 11 National Budget, together with a joint resolution set-
12 ting forth for the ensuing fiscal year a general policy
13 with respect to such National Budget to serve as a guide
14 to the several committees of Congress dealing with 15 legislation relating to such National Budget.

16 (c) Vacancies in the membership of the Joint Com-
17 mittee shall not affect the power of the remaining members
18 to execute the functions of the committee, and shall be filled
19 in the same manner as in the case of the original selection.
20 The committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman
21 from among its members.

22 (d) The Joint Committee, or any duly authorized sub-
23 committee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places
24 and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance
25 of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers.

1 and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testi-
2 mony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make
3 such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of steno-
4 graphic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess
5 of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections
6 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in 7 case of any failure of any witness to comply with any sub-
8 pena, or to testify when summoned, under authority of this 9 section.

10 (e) The Joint Committee is empowered to appoint and 11 fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians,
12 and clerical and stenographic assistance as it deems neces-
13 sary and advisable, but the compensation so fixed shall not 14 exceed the compensation prescribed under the Classification
15 Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The com-
16 mittee may utilize such voluntary and uncompensated serv-
17 ices as it deems necessary and is authorized to utilize the 18 services, information, facilities, and personnel of the depart-
19 ments and establishments.

20 (f) The expenses of the Joint Committee shall be paid
21 one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half
22 from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives
23 upon vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman.

24 RATE OF EXPENDITURES

25 SEC. 6. (a) The President shall review quarterly

1 all Federal investment and expenditure for the purpose of 2 ascertaining the extent to which the current and anticipated
3 level of non-Federal investment and expenditure warrants
4 any change in the volume of such Federal investment and
5 expenditure.

6 (b) Subject to such principles and standards as may 7 be set forth in applicable appropriation Acts and other
8 statutes, the rate of Federal investment and expenditure may 9 be varied to whatever extent and in whatever manner the 10 President may determine to be necessary for the purpose of 11 assisting in assuring continuing full employment, with due
12 consideration being given to current and anticipated varia-
13 tions in savings and in investment and expenditure by private 14 business, consumers, State and local governments, and the 15 Federal Government.

16 AID TO COMMITTEES

17 SEC. 7. The heads of departments and establishments
18 shall, at the request of any committee of either House
19 of Congress, furnish such committee with such aid and 20 information with regard to the National Budget as it may 21 request.

22 INTERPRETATION

23 SEC. 8. Nothing contained herein shall be construed
24 as calling for or authorizing—

1 (a) the operation of plants, factories, or other pro-
2 ductive facilities by the Federal Government;
3 (b) the use of compulsory measures of any type
4 whatsoever in determining the allocation or distribution
5 of manpower;
6 (c) any change in the existing procedures on 7 appropriations; or
8 (d) the carrying out of, or any appropriation for,
9 any program set forth in the National Budget, unless such 10 program shall have been authorized by provisions of law
11 other than this Act.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE W-198

Washington, May 11-The Office of Defense Transportation today issued a general order and a statement of policy outlining the extent of preference that may be granted veterans of the present war in applying for certificates of war necessity for the operation of commercial motor vehicles.

The order, General Order ODT 50, effective May 11, 1945, applies to the issuance of certificates of war necessity to veterans for the operation of trucks. The statement of policy includes the conditions under which certificates of war necessity may be issued veterans for the operation of taxicabs.

The policy statement also points out that the allocation of new commercial motor vehicles must continue to be carefully screened and that no preference can be granted to veterans desiring to acquire new property or passenger carrying commercial motor vehicles.

The general order is issued, t he ODT stated, to further the national policy expressed in the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944.

The order provides that any veterans of the present war may apply for and receive from the ODT a non-transferable certificate of war necessity for one truck for use by him in the furtherance of a business or activity owned, operated or controlled by him exclusively when it appears that the issuance of the certificate will not adversely affect the war effort or the maintenance of essential civilian economy.

The war veteran will not be required to show, as is the case with non-veterans, that the proposed operation is necessary to the war effort or the maintenance of essential civilian economy. Where the operation may only be carried on under the authority of a franchise or license issued by municipal, State, or Federal authorities, the certificate will not be issued until such franchise or license is obtained.

Although the number of taxicabs in any community was frozen in September 1942, ODT, since July 1944, has exempted from its freeze order every veteran who owned and operated a taxicab immediately preceding his entry into the armed forces. Such a veteran would still be issued a permit under General Order ODT 20A authorizing him to operate one taxicab in the community in which he operated a taxicab prior to his entry into the armed forces.

(turn over)

The permit will not be refused on the ground that the veteran sold his taxicab at the time of enlistment or induction. No permit, however, will be transferable. Before obtaining a permit, the veteran must first comply with any and all local ordinances and State laws. After the issuance of a permit, a certificate of war necessity will be issued certifying the same amount of fuel and mileage that is certified for comparable operators in the same community or area.

The ODT explained that in the event the veteran later sells his taxicab, the purchaser will not receive a permit unless he too is a veteran and is qualified to receive a permit.

In communities where taxicabs constitute the sole or predominant means of passenger transportation, a more liberal policy will be followed and it will not be necessary for a veteran to have operated a taxicab in such a community prior to his entry into the armed forces. This policy will apply only to communities that are sufficiently remote so that the ODT would consider it improbable that the new taxi operator would divert his operations to nearby communities where other forms of public transportation are available.

In explaining that preference cannot be granted a veteran desiring to acquire a new truck, the ODT pointed out that wholly inadequate supplies of new commercial motor vehicles have been made available for civilian use because of the demands of the armed services for such equipment. During three war years, 1942, '43, '44, a total of 221,000 new trucks were available for rationing compared with a total of 720,000 new trucks sold in last pre-war year, 1941.

Veterans were advised that ODT approval is not required for the purchase of a used commercial motor vehicle. However, veterans were cautioned to check with ODT district or field offices before buying a used truck to learn whether or not a certificate of war necessity may be issued for the type of operation in which they wish to use the vehicle.

A war veteran is defined in the order as any person who, on or after September 16, 1940, was in the military or naval service of the United States and who was discharged or released after 90 or more days of service under conditions other than dishonorable.

Applications for certificates of war necessity may be obtained at any ODT district or field office or at any local war price and rationing board of the Office of Price Administration.

THE AUTHOR

Winifred Raushenbush is an authority in the field of races and nationalities and author of the widely read pamphlet "How To Prevent A Race Riot In Your Home Town." As secretary of both the Committee to Save Colored Locomotive Firemen's Jobs and the Committee Against Race Discrimination of The American Civil Liberties Union, and as a member of the Executive Committee of the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, she learned the history of the FEPC at first hand.

Miss Raushenbush served as a member of the research staff that investigated the Chicago race riot in 1920, as assistant director of a Carnegie Corporation study of the foreign language press in 1919, and as assistant director of a study of race relations on the Pacific Coast in 1925. She has contributed articles and book reviews to the N. Y. Post, the N. Y. Herald Tribune, the Nation, the Progressive, the New Freeman, the Survey, Harper's Bazaar, Harper's magazine and the American Mercury.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

For material or criticism or both, the writer is indebted to many persons and especially to Mr. A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, Mr. B. F. MacLaurin of the Provisional Committee to Organize Colored Locomotive Firemen, Mr. Julius A. Thomas and the National Urban League, Mr. Bernard Gittleson and the N. Y. State Committee Against Economic Discrimination, Miss Dian Levinsohn and the American Jewish Congress, Miss Julia Baxter and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Mrs. Anne Hedgeman and the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, to the staff of the Workers Defense League and to Mr. Nathaniel M. PREFACE

"Jobs Without Creed or Color" makes not even a farewell curtsey to the obsolete question that asked "whether" the so-called minorities would be granted equality of opportunity in the land of freedom and plenty. It reflects the urgency easily discernible in the faces of workers who will not quietly accept exclusion from jobs on a basis of racial ancestry, personal beliefs or national origin. I wish each of you had heard the Negro worker who stormed out of a Los Angeles employment office shouting, "You can have your A.B. and your Ph.D. What I want is a J-O-B!"

Recognizing this, Miss Winifred Raushenbush has not wasted words in polite apology. Nor has she done a bright elaboration of the "at least we don't have slavery" theme so familiar and repulsive. Rather, she has written a simple, intelligent appraisal of a situation which has worsened while we congratulated ourselves on our progress, has analyzed means by which it may be improved and made pointed suggestions for anyone who wants to help.

With the publication of "Jobs Without Creed or Color," the Workers Defense League continues participation in the struggle for the democratic rights of workers. At the heart of this struggle is the right to work—to be hired regardless of religion, race, color or national origin. That is the right which the Fair Employment Practice Commission is designed to protect; therefore WDL has supported the movement for a permanent FEPC. Spearheading this work through the WDL Committee on Discrimination are its chairman, Nathaniel M. Minkoff, secretary-treasurer of the N. Y. Dress Joint Board, ILGWU-AFL, and its secretary, George Cranmore, assistant director, region 9, UAW-CIO. Max Delson, WDL national counsel, chaired the legal committee which at A. Philip Randolph's request drafted the bill for a permanent FEPC.

This story and program for action put responsibility where it belongs—upon each of us. What a tragedy if, with peaceful means through legislative and direct action at hand, we permit our indifference to snatch them away and make us the hostages of violence. For it is not the loudly protested filibusters that are the major threat to our accomplishment of economic, political, ethnic and social democracy; it is the indifference, the inaction of those of us who think "discrimination is a shame, but what can one do." Only if we work for it, can fair employment become a national policy. Only if we remain alert, will it become a national habit.

WILL YOU HELP . . .

America is a powerful nation in world affairs. Our leaders have repeatedly during this war period stated our fundamental belief in freedom for all people everywhere. We have appreciated anew the challenge of our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution. Many of us have rededicated ourselves to the task of extending American democracy in line with our dream as expressed in these documents. This is suddenly important not just to America but to the nations of the world—for they have heard our words and now examine what we do.

"Jobs Without Creed or Color" tells America clearly that in spite of our preachments we have made it difficult for people to secure work just because of creed or color or national origin or race. You will want to read it, discuss it in the organizations to which you belong, and help to distribute it widely. Above all, you will want to do the things locally and nationally which will make it clear that we practice as well as preach.

The efforts to eradicate the evil of job discrimination as presented in these pages is not just a struggle to free minorities. It is more than a struggle to create a new morality in our nation. It opens the prospect of a "toe hold on hope" for a world which cries out for freedom! Some of us believe America will answer that cry. Will you help?

Mrs. Anna Arnold Hedgeman
National Executive Secretary
National Council for a Permanent FEPC.

With victory over Nazism won, this country is today struggling with a new surge of power not unworthy of its great libertarian tradition, to rid its own house of the menace and the meanness of racism.

Responsible American leadership all over the United States is united in repudiating as too costly the cynicism of the past, which consisted in awaiting outbreaks of violence almost with folded hands.

The problem can be solved. It is being solved.

All recent surveys, including the monumental study of Gunnar Myrdal and his associates, agree that there is no right which white Americans, both of the South and the North, are as willing to grant Negroes and other minorities as the right to a job, providing there are enough jobs to go around.

The fact that race discrimination, in so far as it affects employment, can be fought effectively by such simple measures as tact and persuasion, when backed by the authority of the United States government, has been brilliantly proved by the President's wartime Committee On Fair Employment Practice, which, aided by the compelling needs of manpower for war industry, played a major role in raising the level of non-white employment from three per cent in 1942 to more than eight per cent in the fall of 1944.

UNWARRANTED OPTIMISM

Many northern Americans have had the comfortable belief that the situation of the northern Negro, at least, has been improving fairly steadily. This was true of jobs up to 1929. Between 1929 and 1941 the Negroes' job situation worsened.

Trouble began in the South in 1919, when an outlaw white switchmen's strike on the Illinois Central and the Yazoo and Mississippi was called to force Negro workers off the roads. It resulted in the killing of six of them. In 1926, the Black Shirt movement, committed to the proposition that no Negro is entitled to any job a white man wants, was organized in Georgia. Job discrimination in the north began to follow a somewhat similar pattern after the stock market crash of 1929.

One fourth of the Negroes in the United States were on relief in 1935, according to Father Francis J. Gilligan of the Catholic Welfare Council. In cities, the proportion on relief and WPA ranged from 39 to 70 per cent. With the rise of defense industry jobs in 1940, white workers began to get on their feet, but colored workers did not. Analyses by the FEPC show that the proportion of Negroes in manufacturing, transportation, communication and mining industries was lower in 1940 than in 1910. In February, 1941, 22 southern railroads and 2 railroad unions signed the shameless Southeastern Carriers' Agreement, the purpose of which was to oust 2,000 Negroes from railroads and give their jobs to white men. In September, 1941, the U. S. Bureau of Employment Security surveyed 280,000 job openings in defense industries and found half of them barred to Negroes as a matter of policy. Job discrimination proved to be as great in the North as in the South and extended to unskilled jobs. In 35,000 unskilled defense industry jobs, Negroes were not wanted.

The claim that Negroes could not be used in defense industries because three out of four workers had to be skilled, had little validity. There were available in 1941 8,000 skilled Negro machinists, wheelwrights and tool-makers, 5,000 steamfitters and plumbers, 6,000 blacksmiths, forgemen and hammermen, and 25,000 iron and steel workers, whose skills were usable for tank, plane and gun production. In addition there were 75,000 skilled Negro building trades workers, able to put up defense plants, 50,000 Negro graduates of technical schools, and 50,000 Negroes enrolled in defense courses.

The truth would appear to be that in the absence of a positive progressive policy America was drifting, all unconsciously except perhaps for a ruthless minority, toward Hitler's solution of the race problem, namely solution by elimination.

The United States was shutting the Negro out: out of factory and office jobs, out of employment agencies and training schools, out of trade unions, out of government agencies. For the members of a social caste who stand outside most of the doors of our increasingly industrialized state, the prospect is plainly that of semi-starvation, inescapable disease and early death.

BEFORE I'LL BE A SLAVE

Up to 1941, the year the FEPC was created, few white Americans knew what was happening to the Negro worker. Even the Negroes, believing they would be needed in war industries, were reluctant to face the fact. But there was one group of Negro workers who knew they were being eliminated and said so. They were the colored railroad workers of the South.

Negroes have worked on Southern railroads for a century in nearly every capacity, including that of conductor and engineer. The highest paid job they held between wars—it is incidentally the highest paid job held by any Negro group in the U.S.—was that of locomotive firemen. It pays around $250 to $350 a month. The Southeastern Carriers' Agreement was designed to deprive 2,000 colored locomotive firemen of their jobs. Said Herbert L. Northrup of the National War Labor Board, testifying before the FEPC in the famous railroad hearings: "I doubt if there will be any Negro firemen or brakemen on the roads, except in a very few places, by 1950." So far, no existing American institution has had the power to save the colored locomotive firemen. The FEPC issued directives to the railroad unions and companies ordering them to cease their policy of solution by elimination. Due to the lack of enforcement powers of the President's Committee, the directives were disobeyed. The Supreme Court handed down unanimous decisions in favor of the colored locomotive firemen in the Steele and Tunstall cases, but referred the ultimate decision back to the local courts where the cases originated. In May, 1945, the 2,000 colored locomotive firemen of the South were being fired as rapidly as possible, in anticipation of the fact that a national fair employment practice act, with enforcement powers, may be passed by Congress.

Colored railroad workers called the Southeastern Carriers' Agreement "the Hitler agreement." A fireman remarked in reference to his coming testimony before the President's Committee in the railroad hearings of 1943: "This is my moment to speak for freedom." Then he added, in a tone as casual as he would have used to say he was going to the grocery: "I am ready to die this morning."

At the conclusion of the conference held to organize the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, the colored firemen sang an old revolutionary fighting song of their race:

> Before I'll be a slave,
> I'll be buried in my grave,
> And go home to my Lord
> And be saved.

This is the only answer any self-respecting human being and any liberty-loving American can make to the threat of annihilation.

Battling what they now refer to as America's cold pogrom, the internal solidarity of the various Negro groups tightened and hardened. When A. Philip Randolph suggested in an editorial that 100,000 Negroes march peacefully through the streets of the nation's capital to protest job discrimination in defense industries, the major national Negro organizations and Negroes living in every part of the United States backed the call.

The news of the march, scheduled for July 2, 1941, was received in Washington with horror and unbelief. The President knew, and all his public relations advisers knew, that it could not be allowed to happen. We were assisting England in her fight against Hitler. We were committed by tradition to China's cause and our relations with Japan were already strained. A march, with or without incidents, would have enabled Radio Berlin and Radio Tokyo to charge that we were practicing race discrimination identical in kind with that practiced in Nazi Germany. A conference between Mayor LaGuardia, Mrs. Roosevelt and Negro leaders having proved fruitless, A. Philip Randolph, Walter White, Layle Lane and Frank Crosswaith were invited to see President Roosevelt. Only when he agreed that job discrimination should be banned not only in defense industries, but also in federal agencies, was the march called off.

By issuance on June 25, 1941, of Executive Order 8802 banning job discrimination because of race, creed, color, or national origin, America took the first step toward a new united march against the oldest and still the most dangerous enemy of our democracy.

POSTWAR JOB PROSPECTS

Despite the achievements of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice, the fight against job discrimination is by no means over. The FEPC is a wartime agency, destined to go out of existence when the war ends.

To make the war-time gains of FEPC permanent, it will be necessary for Congress to pass a Fair Employment Practice Act. An organization, The National Council for a Permanent FEPC, with headquarters at Washington, D. C., has been created to spearhead this fight.

Supporters of the FEPC idea are aware of the fact that a fair employment practice act must be passed before the war ends and the seemingly inevitable chaos of the postwar period is upon us. Since Negroes and other minority groups protected by the FEPC have been taken on mainly in war industries, the permanent gains resulting from the war-time operation of FEPC will be few. The focus of the supporters of the FEPC idea is therefore on the preservation of this principle and practice during the postwar years.

Either we will move into a major depression for want of planning, or into full employment, because we have planned.

At present, almost for the first time in our history, we approach full employment, with a total of 66 million men and women working in industry or serving in the armed forces, and a national income of 200 billion dollars. One hundred billions of this national income and 70 per cent of the jobs are supplied by the government mainly through war orders. When these jobs begin to vanish, the blow will be shattering. Says Sumner H. Schlichter, Harvard University economist: "Within two years after the end of the fighting, federal expenditures will drop from about 90 billion to 25 billion. This will represent the greatest and swiftest disappearance of markets in all history." It is estimated that jobs will drop to somewhere between 60 and 47 million. This means that from 6 to 19 million Americans may be unemployed.

If chaos comes, the minorities will not be the only group battling for survival. Veterans and women workers will join the battle-royal. War workers will find the natives of cities to which they migrated turning on them as "foreigners." Dr. Robert Lynd of Columbia warns that the youth who are in high school when the war ends will be one of the groups to suffer most; they will be the apple-sellers, the lost generation of World War II.

The other possibility is that we will achieve some considerable share of both full and fair employment. Bills favoring both of these measures are now before Congress. It would be good strategy for the fighters for fair employment to work for full employment also, and vice versa, for neither of these goals can be achieved separately. The minorities have everything to lose, if employment falls from 66 to 47 millions. But the United States also has everything to lose, if the one-sixth of the American people whom the FEPC now protects, lose their jobs and thereby create the tailspin that sends us crashing into a postwar depression and economic smash-up.

The Facts About Job Discrimination

The Negroes are not the only group in the United States which suffers from job discrimination. Hence the language of President Roosevelt's order was deliberately and wholesomely comprehensive. It specifies: "No discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin" thereby providing for the first time in history the beginnings of a federal court of appeal for over one-sixth of the people of the United States.

The Jews

Close to 9 per cent of the complaints handled by the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice between July, 1943 and July, 1944, involved Jews.

An investigator for a Jewish organization in New York City applied personally for 100 jobs as stenographer, secretary, accountant or auditor. In 91 interviews, she was told a Jew was not acceptable. The same organization examined the records of 400 business firms making up the clientele of an important employment agency. Eighty-nine per cent of these firms noted that they preferred Christians.

A survey of 179 American universities showed that 36 had no Jews on the faculty, 62 schools had 1.8 per cent or less, while 87 schools had not over 2.2 per cent of Jews on their teaching staffs. A group of Catholic schools proved more liberal than the general run of American universities, having 3.1 per cent of Jews among their 1,883 teachers.

In general, the Jews find it difficult to get jobs in industry, commerce, finance, scientific research, engineering, and the professions. Discriminations exercised against them in New York City banks, insurance companies, and public utilities are striking. The National City Bank, 100,000 of whose 400,000 depositors are Jews, has six Jewish employees. One per cent of the 4,200 home office employees of the Equitable Life Insurance Co. are Jewish. Of the 1,500 persons employed in other types of insurance beside life, 1.4 per cent are Jewish. There are only a handful of Jewish employees among the 45,000 employees of the Consolidated Gas Co. and the 60,000 employees of Western Electric.

The Mexicans

In New Mexico, Texas and Louisiana, 37 per cent, and in California, Nevada and Arizona 22 per cent of the FEPC cases involved Spanish-Americans. Discrimination against Spanish-Americans—the majority of whom are of Mexican origin—takes the following forms: (1) refusal to hire; (2) refusal to train; (3) refusal to upgrade; (4) payment of lower wages. A few examples, based on sworn statements, will show the trend.

Gilbert E. Lujan was employed in May, 1942, as a furnace helper and slag brakeman on his claim that he was of French-Italian ancestry, and was paid $6.08 a day. When it was learned that he was actually a Mexican-American, he was demoted to common labor and paid $4.20.

Alfredo Serba started work as a common laborer at $4.20 a day. He was promoted to the copper-refining department, where the wages are $6.40. He continued to receive $4.20.

According to Dr. Carlos E. Castenada, FEPC Regional Director for Arizona, New Mexico and West Texas, Mexican-Americans have been barred from employment in semi-skilled and skilled jobs in all industries, with the possible exception of such war industries as are specifically influenced by the FEPC. The Chamber of Deputies of Mexico—corresponding to our House of Representatives—has recently set up a committee whose function it is to focus attention on job discrimination against Mexican-Americans in the United States.

DISTRIBUTION OF AMERICAN MINORITIES

THE NEGROES ARE NOT THE ONLY MINORITY AGAINST WHOM JOB DISCRIMINATION IS DIRECTED. This map shows the largest minority group in each state. The minorities included are: Negroes, Jews, those whose mother tongue is Spanish, Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos, American Indians, Hindus, Koreans. It does not include groups protected by FEPC because of national origins, Catholics or miscellaneous religious sects.

The Chinese

As immigrants to the islands of the Pacific the Chinese were for centuries successful as traders and businessmen. Their experience in the United States has proved different. Accepted on their arrival in 1849 without prejudice, some prospered in the gold mines, the abalone fisheries and other Pacific Coast industries. But economic greed soon reared its head. Driven from the gold mines by Vigilantes, nine-tenths of the Chinese are today in city Chinatowns, where they engage in such non-competitive businesses as running restaurants, curio shops and laundries. The foreign-born Chinese are proud and bitter; the native-born generation are completely American, but confined to a ghetto life from which they find little escape. In California, Ph.D.'s have had to take jobs as cooks and waiters. World War II has provided the first crack in the American wall of job discrimination. Because they were our Allies, war industries hired them as stenographers, welders, carpenters, shipyard and aircraft workers. Whether this advance will survive the war remains to be seen.

The Japanese

Although, like the Chinese, the Japanese are a proud people, their economic adaptation has been radically different from that of the Chinese. Whereas most of the Chinese have tended to withdraw from competition with white Americans, the Japanese compete with the small farmers and businessmen of the Pacific Coast. They became the shopkeepers in the little Main Streets of European immigrant quarters. In California they controlled 40 per cent of the truck crops. Land laws passed against foreign-born Japanese proved difficult to enforce because land could be acquired by native-born Japanese-Americans. A new land law passed by Oregon is directed against land ownership by Japanese aliens, but also excludes Asiatic Indian, Korean, most Filipino and some Chinese aliens from land ownership. The forcible removal of Japanese from their homes on the Pacific Coast, following Pearl Harbor, has made their job situation more difficult than that of any minority group in the United States.

The American Indian

Twelve years ago, so-called Indian Assistance positions were created in the Indian service, which pay the American Indians who hold them $600 to $1,200 a year. The average is $750. Although the cost of living has risen, these salaries have remained fixed. For exactly the same kind of jobs, the whites in the Indian service, who in many cases are no better or not as well prepared as the Indians, receive from $1,320 to $1,800.

Such job discrimination as Indians meet in industry is found in the neighborhood of reservations, where white people have found that the reservation Indian does not always adjust easily to urban living conditions. Because of our Indian policy, which according to the anthropologist Bronislaw Malinowski, has been much worse than white European imperialist policies in Africa, the percentage of college graduates and of skilled and professional workers among American Indians is phenomenally low.

The Filipinos

The Filipinos, most of whom came to the Pacific Coast from Hawaii between 1925 and 1930, are the newest comers to the United States, and as such face all the difficulties which other immigrants have experienced before them. In California they work mainly as farm laborers or in domestic or personal service jobs. According to Carey McWilliams, economic and social status in California prior to Pearl Harbor ranged from the Japanese through Chinese and Negroes down to Filipinos, with Mexicans and American Indians still further down the scale. Anti-Filipino demonstrations have occurred intermittently in California since 1927. Too proud to accept free return trips to their own country, provided for in an act of Congress, the Filipinos have stayed and found their places in war industries.

The groups protected by the President's wartime FEPC include 13,000,000 Negroes, 5,000,000 Jews, 334,000 American Indians, 127,000 Japanese-Americans, 77,000 Chinese-Americans, 45,000 Filipino-Americans, 2,500 Hindu-Americans, 1,700 Koreans, members of various religious sects like Seventh Day Adventists and Jehovah's Wittnesses, 23,000,000 Americans of foreign or mixed parentage, 7,000,000 foreign-born Americans who have been naturalized and 22,000,000 Catholics.

FEPC cases involving discrimination because of national origin include Italians, Greeks, Spaniards, Croatians, Germans, Japanese, Russians, Rumanians, Puerto Ricans, Lithuanians, Mexicans and Poles.

Since some of these figures overlap, it is difficult to compute the total. The minimum is about one-sixth, the maximum a third of the American population. The three million aliens resident in the U.S. are not included under the provisions of the wartime FEPC, but are included under the provisions of the Bipartisan FEPC bills.

HOW THE DOOR OF JOB OPPORTUNITY IS CLOSED

Native-born, white, Gentile, Protestant Americans discriminate against foreign-born, non-white, non-Gentile, or non-Protestant Americans. Minority groups discriminate against each other and against members of their own group. The techniques of discrimination are various. The four-year experience of the FEPC has shown that job discrimination may be practiced via the help wanted ads, job application forms, training schools, employment agencies, trade unions, employers, government agencies and professional organizations.

Help Wanted Ads

Discrimination in help wanted ads tends to focus on Jews. In Greater New York City, where one-fourth of the residents are of Jewish ancestry the ads used to be sprinkled with such notations as "Chr.," "Chr. firm" and "State experience, age, religion, salary desired."

The Jews themselves proved powerless to handle this situation. On being individually interviewed, 50 newspaper publishers of New York City "expressed a willingness to cooperate, provided all the other newspapers would simultaneously cease publishing the offending ads." Otherwise, they declared, "we will be siphoning business into the tills of our competitors." They were right. The lone newspaper that did not discriminate lost thousands of dollars worth of business. The American Jewish Committee on behalf of New York Jews contacted the National Association of Classified Advertisers. The Association replied: "How can you ask us to stop these ads when a large newspaper in New York of national importance, which is run by an American who is of Jewish faith, continues to carry such ads?"

In Cleveland, Ohio, three local newspapers made a voluntary agreement to stop discriminatory advertising. None of the three suffered any loss of lineage or revenue. Reassured by this successful experiment, and influenced by the passage of the Mahoney Act of New York State and the Hart Act of New York City, New York City newspapers dropped discriminatory ads. One newspaper has gone so far as to discontinue ads, if the literature published by the advertiser is not free of discrimination.

Job Application Forms

In February, 1942, after the FEPC had been in existence for eight months, the application forms of six aircraft companies located near New York City contained such phrases as: "What is your color?" "What is your nationality?" "What is your religion?" By September, 1944, due to the efforts of FEPC, such phrases had been eliminated. When one of these firms failed to drop the phrase "Your religion' 'after six months of persuasion, the Industrial Commissioner of New York State issued an order requiring the firm to make the change within ten days. The change was made on the fourth day.

Employment Agencies

Employment agencies are among the worst of discrimination bottlenecks. On March 16, 1942, the New York State Committee on Discrimination in Employment said in a press release:

"The extent to which war industries that wish to evade the law are using private employment agencies to do the discrimination that they themselves may not legally do is a scandal. You have but to look at the help wanted agency ads in the newspapers to see how brazen this un-American thwarting of our war effort and war unity have become. Only a few days ago, Donald Nelson pointed out how, in a neighboring state, racial discrimination had contributed to cutting war production more than 50 per cent."

Employment agencies sometimes discriminate when the employer does not. In New York State an agency would not permit a Negro chef to apply for a job, because they thought the employer would not wish to hire a Negro. The hearing revealed that the employer had made no restriction and had no prejudice.

Training Schools

The failure to admit Negroes to training schools preparing students for war industry jobs is one of the most shameful aspects of job discrimination practiced during World War II. A study of 17 states where the Negroes comprise 20 per cent of the population, showed that during the period of January, 1940 to January, 1942, Negroes constituted only 7.2 per cent of the one and a half million students receiving regular or supplementary training. Ninety-six percent of the courses given in this area during this period were for whites only. Jews, Mexicans and other minorities face the same situation.

Since 1942, the situation has improved slightly, but only in response to pressure. For instance, in Atlanta, Georgia, citizens found it necessary to get the signatures of 5,000 Negroes wishing to register in training schools before any courses were made available to them.

Trade Unions

Discrimination against minority groups in trade unions is the exception rather than the rule. Where it exists, however, it constitutes one of the most difficult kinds of job discrimination to correct.

Of the 182 national labor organizations of the United States, 29 either exclude Negroes or admit them only to auxiliary membership, 163 unions do not exclude Negroes, and 40 unions expressly forbid racial discrimination in their constitutions. Two A. F. of L. unions—the bricklayers and operative plasterers—impose a fine of $100 on any union member who discriminates. Of the complaints handled by the FEPC during a recent 12-month period, only 6.5 per cent involved trade unions.

When and if Negroes experience difficulties with national or local unions, it is usually for one of the following reasons: (1) They may not be admitted to the union; (2) When the employer asks the union to send him workers, the union may fail to send Negro workers; (3) In unions where Negroes are auxiliary members, they do not have a vote, and are likely to be incompletely informed about agreements which union officials make with employers; (4) In the rivalry between competing unions, power-greedy officials may deliberately stir up prejudice against colored workers in order to gain their own ends.

In the small group of 29 national unions which have an anti-Negro policy, the most powerful bloc consists of the Railroad Brotherhoods, independent organizations, not affiliated with the A. F. of L. or the C.I.O. Employers, government officials and the public will be misled if they think the racist policy of the Railroad Brotherhoods is typical of union labor. The 29 national unions which bar Negroes from membership have a membership that does not exceed 2,500,000 while the total union membership in the U.S. is over 12 millions. Precisely because they have been publicly rebuked by the FEPC and the Supreme Court, the railroad unions are anxious to thwart FEPC at every possible point. They were extremely active in opposing the Ives-Quinn FEPC bill passed in New York State. It is most unfortunate that the Railroad Brotherhoods should take this outmoded position since in other matters they are progressive.

It is a notable fact that even during the depression of the thirties many local unions and five national unions, the Commercial Telegraphers, the Masters, Mates and Pilots, the Railroad Yard Masters, the Wire Weavers Protective Association and The Airlines Pilots Association removed discriminatory clauses from their constitutions. In 1944, the New York State branch of the Railway Mail Association discovered that it could not exclude Negroes from membership under New York State Law, although in accordance with the policy of its national union it was required to exclude them. The courts decided that since the Railway Mail Association was a trade union, and not a social club as it claimed, Negroes must be admitted to membership.

Professional Organizations

Unrestricted and first-class training for the professions, and membership in professional organizations are as important for the professional worker as is union membership for the industrial employee.

Equality of training for the dental profession was believed to be threatened by the attempted merger of the dental and medical faculties of Columbia University in February, 1945. Dr. Harlan H.

Horner suggested in an article in the December, 1944, issue of the Journal of Dental Education that the Association "counteract the trend toward marked racial and geographical imbalance in the entire group of dental students" and sent a confidential report to Columbia and New York University suggesting a quota system for Jewish and Italian students. The report was condemned by the New York State Dental Association, the First and Second District Dental Association, and the Hudson Dental Association of New Jersey.

Jewish doctors are excluded from many New York hospitals, and their advancement is made difficult. This reaction is due in part to the fact that the proportionate number of Jewish students interested in studying medicine is high. In 1930, 1,500 Jews and 473 Gentiles applied for registration in New York City medical schools. (Ordinarily about a half of all applications are accepted.) During the same year 226 Jews and 229 Gentiles graduated from these schools. Jews constitute 17 per cent of all medical students in the nation. One reason Jews seek to enter the medical profession is because they are restricted from entering so many other occupational fields.

Discrimination against Negro nurses in World War II is very marked and the tendency toward discrimination has greatly worsened since World War I. On January 14, 1945, the Surgeon General of the Army, Major General Norman T. Kirk, said that the army had been appealing since September, 1944, for 10,000 nurses and had so far only gotten 2,000. In saying this Major General Kirk overlooked the fact that there were then 2,000 colored graduate nurses qualified and willing to serve in the armed forces, who were not allowed to do so. Col. Florence Blanchfield, Superintendent of the Army Nurse Corps said that on two days the Halloran Hospital on Staten Island had only 136 nurses to take care of 4,000 arriving cases of wounded soldiers. Major General Kirk also stated that 11 hospitals had been sent overseas without nurses.

Employers

Out of approximately 4,000 complaints handled by FEPC during 1944, 2,814 involved private employers.

Discrimination on the part of war industry employers has changed so notably during the four years since the FEPC has been in existence that the contrast is extraordinary. In 1941, a United States Employment Service poll of 280,000 job openings, showed that 51 per cent were absolutely barred to Negroes. By the end of 1943, the proportion of Negroes in war industries had risen from 3.2 to 8.3 per cent, with approximately 1,500,000 Negroes engaged in war production. During the first year and a half the FEPC was in existence, Negro employment in commercial shipyards rose from 6,900 to 12,800, in Navy shipyards from 6,000 to 14,000 and in aircraft industries from zero to 5,000. Some war plants today employ over 5,000 Negroes.

Even more significant, from the point of view of job discrimination is the fact that in many war plants, Negroes are beginning to be used on jobs above the unskilled level. In 1943 the National Urban League surveyed 300 War plants in 25 states. It found that three-fourths of these plants were using colored workers on semi-skilled jobs and over half were using them on skilled work. Asked whether they would continue to employ Negroes after the war, 253 plants said they would.

In all but a handful of cases the FEPC has found that when a complaint is made against an employer, one or more conversations usually clear up the matter, and no publicity or public hearings are necessary. In some cases, where the personnel manager or the foreman has been responsible for the plant policy, the employer is not aware that discrimination is being practiced. In a small minority of cases, employers have defied the very limited powers of the President's Committee. One tactic is to hire a token number of minority workers, another to fire workers as fast as they are hired.

The Government as Employer

At the time the FEPC was established, Negro employment in the agencies and departments of the federal government was nothing to brag about. Nine-tenths of the Negroes employed were engaged in custodial service.

A report made in the spring of 1944 after the President's order had been in force for three years, showed a dramatic change. 11.9 per cent of a total of two million federal employees working in Washington were colored, and 60 per cent of them were engaged in jobs above custodial rank. Unfortunately most of these gains are not permanent, since they have been made in wartime agencies.

How To Build Fair Employment Practice

One of the great services of the President's Executive Order and of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice is that it has unearthed and publicized the facts about job discrimination in the United States.

The reaction of the majority of Americans on learning these facts is to wish to right them. If this is your reaction, there are things you can do.

The immediate task is to see that FEPC—a purely wartime agency—does not go out of existence when the war ends.

FEPC was a frail war-baby. When created in June, 1941, it was merely one of 500 Executive Orders issued by President Roosevelt under the stress of wartime need and had an initial budget of only $88,000. Pressure groups were interested in killing it. They popped the baby out of the window so it could conveniently catch pneumonia every time the public's back was turned. The FEPC never had enough authority to make people comply with the Executive Order it was created to implement. Hence it went through a long sequence of vicissitudes, including the following:

Jan. 7, 1943: During President Roosevelt's absence in Casablanca, Paul McNutt, War Manpower Commissioner, under whose jurisdiction the FEPC had been placed, cancelled the public railroad hearing scheduled to take place Jan. 12th in Washington, D. C. More or less simultaneously, the chairman of the FEPC, Dr. Malcolm MacLean, resigned. Partly because of the greatly diminished prestige of the FEPC, it was three months before anoher chairman could be found.

Oct. 28, 1943: Comptroller General Lindsay C. Warren decided in the case of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. that the word "shall" in the President's Executive Order 9346 was not mandatory and did not need to be obeyed.

On Nov. 6, 1943, President Roosevelt declared that Executive Order 9346 was mandatory, and thereby saved FEPC from its second near-death bed.

Nov. 18, 1943: When the hearing on the now celebrated railroad cases was finally held, the FEPC under the chairmanship of Monsignor Francis J. Haas, issued its directives. 14 railroads and 7 unions declined to comply. The new chairman of the FEPC, Mr. Malcolm Ross, helpless to compel further action, turned the case over to President Roosevelt. The President appointed an unofficial special committee, known as the Stacy Committee, to devise ways and means of securing compliance.

Despite two unanimous Supreme Court decisions substantially upholding FEPC's decision, no action has been taken by Judge Stacy's Committee to date.
March 4, 1944: Senator Russell of Georgia secured the passage of an amendment designed to eliminate FEPC, requiring that all agencies financed by the President (as FEPC was), which had been in existence for over a year would have to ask Congress for appropriations in the future. Friends of FEPC and Congressmen rushed to its support and Congressional funds for the continuation of FEPC from June 1944 to June 1945 were secured by a narrow margin.
FEPC had been saved for the third time.

STEP ONE

WORK FOR A PERMANENT FEPC

Enlightened by these blitzkrieg attacks, supporters of FEPC organized the National Council for a Permanent FEPC to fight for a national fair employment practice act which would be permanent rather than wartime, and which would have the enforcement powers that the President's wartime committee so patently lacks.

Since a national fair employment practice bill will apply only to inter-state commerce, federal employment and federal contractors, it does not attempt to impose fair employment practices on individual states. They are left free to enact state FEPC bills or not as they see fit. The importance of a national act is that it will signify that the United States is prepared to adopt the right to equal job opportunity as a national policy, to move forward in the direction of ever more complete job equality for America's religious and racial minorities, and to repudiate the caste system which a small group of impoverished and overburdened states would like to impose on the entire country.

The need to get a national FEPC bill passed before the war ends is urgent . In fact with every passing month that such a bill is not passed, minority group workers are being laid off and the hope of ultimate success in securing a permanent FEPC is lessened. If as a citizen of a national democracy you approve the principle of fair employment practice, do the following things:

(1) Write your Senator and Representative asking them to vote for the Bi-Partisan FEPC bills, sponsored by the National Council for a Permanent FEPC: S 101 and HR 2232. Be sure to specify you want these bills passed with their enforcement powers.

(2) Write directly to President Truman, telling him how you feel about a national FEPC act. His support, like that of President Roosevelt's, can be very important.

(3) Write the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, 930 F Street, N.W., Washington, D. C., and ask what you can do to help them.

OPPOSITION TO FEPC

Friends of the FEPC are well aware that they have a lively, aggressive and tricky opposition to deal with, which will stop at little to accomplish its ends. So far the opposition has been too astute to come out in the open.

In the railroad hearings, no representative of the railroad unions appeared. The railroad companies made only a token appearance. In the public hearings on FEPC of the Committee on Labor of the House and the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate the only forthright opponent of FEPC was a Mrs. Agnes Walters, who claimed to be the unofficial representative of the Mothers of America, and who quoted several Congressmen who had opposed Congressional appropriations for FEPC.

Mrs. Waters: "The majority of these reds who are asking for this bill are Jews, Negroes, liars and rats."

Hon. Richard B. Russell of Georgia: "The employees . . . . of FEPC are reaching into all forms of industry in the South, demanding that employers and employees . . . submit themselves to the judgments and policies of FEPC—who shall be employed and which employee shall be promoted, and to prescribe all the most intimate relations which shall exist between the employees of the business, whatever may be their race."

Hon John S. Gibson of Georgia: "The Communists some months ago came out with the statement that the South was the black man's country and in substance they expected to put him in possession of the property of the South."

Unofficial but revealing comments of people opposed to FEPC are the following. A woman cashier of Atlanta, Georgia, queried in a university poll, said: "The Negroes don't have a right to an equal job. The Bible says that they were created to be the white man's slave." The mayor of Shreveport, Louisiana said: "Of equal importance with winning the war is keeping the Negroes out of skilled jobs."

In the mayor's excellently concise statement not the fear of intimate relations between the races or of colored domination, but just

Proportionate Density of Minority Population

40-49 % | 30-39 % | 20-29 % | 10-19 % | 1-9 % | -1 %

THE LARGER THE MINORITY GROUPS ARE IN A STATE, THE GREATER IS THE FEAR OF THE MAJORITY GROUP THAT ITS DOMINANCE AND SURVIVAL IS BEING THREATENED.

Hence much of the opposition to FEPC comes from those states where the minority groups constitute over one-third of the population.

40-49%	49	New Mexico		21 New York
	49	Mississippi		21 Maryland
	43	South Carolina	10-19%	18 Tennessee
30-39%	36	Louisiana		16 Delaware
	35	Alabama		14 California
	35	Arizona		12 New Jersey
	35	Georgia		11 Colorado
	31	Dist. of Col.		10 Illinois
	31	N. Carolina		10 Oklahoma
20-29%	29	Florida	1- 9%	All other states (24)
	26	Virginia
	26	Texas	-1%	.8 N. Hampshire
	25	Arkansas		.8 Vermont

It would be highly improper, and also dangerous, for the United States to allow this handful of states to dictate national policy on FEPC. If the U. S. offers its racial minorities no hope and advancement, American boys will probably be fighting a world color war within the next forty years.

A simpler and sounder solution would be to continue to reduce the minority population in those states where it is too high by immigration to other states; a process which has been going on since 1916.

Religious and racial minority groups are the same as those listed for "Distribution of American Minorities" map.

---

plain white greed appears as the essential motivation which is specifically opposed to FEPC.

STEP TWO

BUILD FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES IN YOUR HOMETOWN

Although the immediate passage of a national fair employment practice act is crucial, the steady building of democratic employment practices in your town and your state is of first rate importance.

There is much you can do as an individual, such as writing the editor of your local newspaper; there is more you can do as a member of a religious, civic, or labor organization.

Write to your nearest regional FEPC office and find out whether FEPC needs a volunteer representative in your town.

Because FEPC has a modest budget, the FEPC regional director and his staff frequently work through carefully selected volunteer representatives. Major war industry cities already have such representatives; smaller war industry centers may not. The FEPC would prefer to have some responsible civic organization to which you belong recommend possible representatives.

Make sure that minority groups in your town know how to use FEPC.

While the leaders of large minority groups are usually well informed about FEPC, the average individual may know nothing about it. The Chinese, for instance, have so far hardly used FEPC at all. Since FEPC can function only if it receives a complaint, be prepared to help individuals in taking this step.

A signed letter should be sent to the director of the nearest regional FEPC office. It must allege discrimination, name the employer, union or government agency alleged to be discriminating; the discrimination must be because of race, creed, color or national origin. It is important to remember that only employers and unions engaged in war production or agencies of the federal government are included in the jurisdiction of the President's wartime Committee.

Enlist the majority groups in your town in the fight against job discrimination.

Actually, as everyone knows, fair employment practice is not just a minority issue. Majority group Americans, who have the welfare of their country at heart, know that they cannot afford to hand down a country to their descendants which is one-sixth serf and five-sixths free.

The disinterested and staunch support of the principle of fair employment practice by non-minority groups impresses employers, trade unionists, state legislatures and Congress.

Pass resolutions upholding the principle of fair employment practice. If FEPC has never been discussed in a public meeting hold one. Your region FEPC office, and such government agencies as the War Man Power Commission, the United States Employment Service, and the National War Labor Board may be able to suggest speakers. If you live in a large city, there may be a group already in existence which you can work with. Detroit, Philadelphia and New York have Metropolitan Fair Employment Councils. Branches of the National Council for a Permanent FEPC exist in Chicago, Detroit, the Twin Cities, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Durham, North Carolina, New Orleans, Houston, Texas and Birmingham, Alabama, and 43 other towns and cities.

Ask the leaders of local minority groups to advise you.

If you can arrange a meeting between representatives of the majority group in your home town and such local minority group leaders as editors, ministers, social workers and lawyers, they can advise you which of the local job discrimination bottlenecks is doing most damage to the cause of equal job opportunity.

Tackle that bottleneck first.

The standard bottlenecks are: the help wanted ads, job application forms, training schools, employment agencies, trade unions, employers, government agencies and professional organizations.

Let employers know that you applaud their use of minority group workers.

Businessmen who deal directly with the public like to be sure that their use of minority group workers is approved. Since women constitute a major section of the shopping public, their opinions about fair employment practice are of special interest to such employers.

Progressive women in a number of middle western cities have made good use of this fact. When a restaurant in one of these cities decided to employ colored waitresses, the women members of various community organizations decided to express their approval. Individuals wrote that they had dined at the restaurant and were pleased with the service. Pleasantly astonished, the manager remarked: "This is one of the most popular things I ever did."

Chicago women campaigned to get colored girls employed in department stores. When paying bills, they attached to the cashier's receipt and envelope a sticker reading, "I am in favor of Negro salesgirls." They also distributed a pamphlet entitled, " A Charming Girl With a Flair for Clothes Seeks Democracy on Main Street." Women members of 29 churches of the Minneapolis Church Federation—28 with white and 1 with colored members —called on department store owners and pointed out that if these stores had been refusing to employ colored workers because they thought the shopping public of Minneapolis would object, they had been mistaken. In Springfield, Mass., groups of women call on retail merchants once a week.

Find out whether the tax supported institutions of your town discriminate.

Ask your children and friends whether teachers from religious and racial minorities teach in your public schools. It is not enough to have Chinese-American teachers in the predominately Chinese-American schools near San Francisco's Chinatown or Negroes teaching in Harlem. What would be important would be to have Chinese-American and Negro teachers in classes where the children are predominately of European ancestry. (FEPC has no jurisdiction over public schools.)

Study the practices of your local U. S. Employment Service.

The U. S. Employment Service is a federal government agency which comes under the jurisdiction of the FEPC, and which will be of the utmost importance in reconversion. Ask individuals belonging to your local minority groups whether USES is careful to find out about all the skills they have.

Before the war, USES placed 90 per cent of its Negro applicants in unskilled jobs. Since it has been under federal instead of state jurisdiction in wartime and under pressure from FEPC its performance has improved considerably, but still varies greatly from city to city.

The first war plant to abandon production was the Pemco Corporation, which employed 500 colored workers, 400 of them women. Pemco workers were shifted to a plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation by USES on a racial basis, with the result that the colored workers lost out. Unless vigilance is exercised by local citizens, this is likely to happen wherever job discrimination is prevalent.

STEP THREE

BUILD FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES IN YOUR STATE

Since the pasage of a national act will mainly apply to inter-state commerce, state bills are essential.

Thirteen states either have anti-job discrimination legislation, are in the process of revising such laws as they have, or are adopting new laws. They are: California, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

If you want to bring yourself and your organization up-to-date on what kind of anti-job discrimination bills other states have and on what a model state fair employment practice bill should cover, write for the following document:

(1) Digest and Analysis of Existing and Proposed Laws Dealing With Discrimination, N. Y. State Commission Against Discrimination, New York City.

The passage of the Ives-Quinn fair employment practice bill by New York State in March, 1945, attracted nationwide attention. Introduced by Irving M. Ives, a Republican and the Majority Leader of the Assembly, strongly supported by both political parties and by Governor Thomas E. Dewey, the New York State bill imitates the President's wartime Committee on Fair Employment Practice by creating a state commission of five men with salaries of $10,000 a year to enforce its provisions.

STEP FOUR

BUILD FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ON YOUR JOB

One of the most natural ways to work for fair employment practices is on your own job. If your work is temporary or insecure, this is, of course not possible.

If You Are An Employer: Experience in handling minority workers has been achieved during recent yar years mostly in super-size war plants. However, even for the small employer who engages the services of half a dozen workers, the principles are the same. If you are introducing minority workers into your office, department or plant for the first time, these simple rules will be useful.

a) Once you have decided to take this step, be firm about it. This is essential. If you are firm, your workers will accept your decision; if you waver, disgruntled individuals may try to make an issue of the matter.

b) Make an effort to get well qualified workers of attractive personality. If you are hiring Negroes, phone a civic organization, such as the National Urban League and let them recommend workers; they have specialized in this field. If you engage a worker who proves not to be competent, fire him or her promptly. Both the FEPC and the most important Negro organizations in the country will tell you that the cause of fair employment practice is not served by pitying or coddling incompetent minority group workers.

c) Do not segregate white and colored workers, either on the job, or in any other way.

d) Do not fail to up-grade minority group workers, when they have earned promotion, if you wish to keep their loyalty and interest.

If you want expert technical advice about employing minority group workers, you can probably get it free. Write to the nearest regional office of the FEPC. If your problem relates to Negroes, and you have a branch of the National Urban League or the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, call on them.

An excellent handbook on colored workers is "How Management

Can Integrate Negroes Into War Industries," a pamphlet published by the New York State War Council's Committee on Discrimination in Employment. Write to the Committee at 80 Centre Street, New York City. It covers such matters as the use of locker rooms, showers, toilets and cafeterias, and such problems as may be caused by having colored and white men and women work side by side. Employers who fear that the use of minority group workers may lead to racial friction or strikes, should examine such statistics as exist on this subject.

Only 21 out of 300 large war industry plants surveyed by the National Urban League complained of racial friction between colored and white workers. William A. Hughes, Director of Personnel Relations of the Army Service Forces testified in the FEPC hearings before the House that 51 strikes or 4 per cent of the total number affecting production of materials in which the War Department is vitally interested occurring since March, 1943 were caused by disputes in which the utilization of minority groups was alleged to be a factor. One hundred and ninety thousand or 5.5 per cent of the total number of man-days lost were attributable to the same situation. Said Mr. Hughes: "This record is not too bad."

Many employers who have let down the color bar during the war are enthusiastic about the ease with which they have introduced minority group workers—most of them Negroes—into war industries. When Comptroller-General Warren ruled that the FEPC had no mandatory powers—a decision that was later reversed—a New York newspaper queried the chief industrialists of the country as to how they would stand on the no-discrimination principle if it were outlawed. Among the warm endorsers of job equality were the heads of the Kaiser interests, International Harvester, Packard, Lockheed-Vega Aircraft, Boeing, International Business Machines, du Pont de Nemours and North American Aviation.

If You Are A Trade Unionist: If you work in the same shop, factory, or office with Negroes, Mexicans, Chinese, Jews or other individuals belonging to minority groups, there isn't much you have to do except to behave like a decent human being.

At the Wylan Coal mine of the the Tennessee Coal and Iron and Railroad Co., white miners stopped work in protest against the suspension of a colored worker for disciplinary reasons. When Eugene Small, Negro and journeyman-rigger working with a white crew at Marinship Co. was demoted to common labor with a segregated all-Negro crew, his leaderman, Eugene Catlin protested. Both men were fired. The FEPC had them both reinstated. At Douglass Aircraft, a white foreman promoted a white man to the position of group leader. The white workers held a protest meeting and got the job for a Negro who they felt was better qualified.

Where white trade unionists play fair with minority workers they have the right to expect that these workers will show appreciation by their loyalty to the best interests of the union. The Negroes have already shown evidence of such loyalty. In their national convention, October, 1944, the United Federal Workers adopted a carefully worded resolution whose intention it was to secure a modification of existing seniority rules in so far as they affect Negro and women workers. Although the Negroes will lose out badly in the reconversion period, because they tend to have less seniority than the whites, the Washington Douglass Institute, composed of leading Negro trade unionists belonging to both the A. F. of L. and the C.I.O. opposed this vote "on the grounds that losses in terms of embittered white workers would far outweigh the immediate advantages gained."

Workers should guard against letting themselves be drawn into strikes provoked by management, rival unions, or by disgruntled individuals in which minority groups are used as scapegoats. Such strikes usually misfire.

A considerable number of unions are doing a quiet and very sound job of building the kind of feeling necessary for fair employment practice. One of these is the United Automobile Workers. As everyone knows the blood, violence and hatred of the Detroit riot stopped short at every factory gate. Said George S. Schuyler, well-known Negro writer:

"It is seldom recognized that organized labor as a whole has been more liberal (in respect to color discrimination) than organized business, organized religion or organized education."

THE LAST MINORITY

At least two-thirds of the earth's peoples are colored: yellow, red, brown, black.

White people are the world's true and last minority. If they forget this, their descendants will some day suffer the same humiliations and defeats that were endured by the colored peoples when they were minorities in numbers and in power.

Now is the time to foresee and prevent the last terrible denouement of the world's oldest tragedy.

Now is the time for men and women of good will of whatever creed or color to build together the moral and institutional foundations of tolerance and security for their children and grandchildren.

But not out of fear. It is fear, very largely, that has motivated the South's handling of the race problem, and it has not worked. It is fear, too often, that underlies the alternating despair and blind revolt of the minority groups—and that too has not worked. But courage and faith will work and the creative love which has not lost its potency merely because it is insufficiently used.

Provisions in Bi-Partisan Bills

The Bi-Partisan FEPC bills, approved by 58 national organizations contain the following provisions:

It shall be an unfair employment practice for any employer or labor union to discriminate because of race, creed, color, national origin or ancestry.

Congress shall establish a Commission, consisting of seven members, appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate. When anyone is charged with unfair employment practice, the Commission can hold a hearing, order the hiring or reinstatement of employees with back pay, secure the aid of the Federal Courts in enforcing its order, and subpoena witnesses and evidence.

These powers are similar in character to those possessed by other government agencies dealing with labor relations such as the National Labor Relations Board.

THE WORKERS DEFENSE LEAGUE

The Workers Defense League was organized in 1936 when people, active in several national committees formed to combat instances of persecution and denial of civil rights to workers and minority groups throughout the United States, decided that more effective work could be done if there was a single permanent agency. Since then the WDL has rendered militant and effective service in defense of workers' right to organize, assemble and speak freely, entering into vigorous prosecution where those rights were abused or violated, and fighting economic and political discrimination against workers of minority groups.

Particularly noteworthy in WDL history are the current fight on Florida's new slavery, the Tee Davis case and opposition to the labor draft and to universal military conscription in peacetime as a threat to labor's rights. Nationally known also were WDL's defense of Odell Waller and other sharecropper victims of the plantation system, the fight for free speech in Mayor Hague's Jersey City, and opposition to the anti-labor activities of the Ku Klux Klan. A permanent FEPC is an essential part of the League's program.

WDL charges no fees for legal representation, but secures funds to carry its cases through appeals to its members and supporters. By its effectiveness it has become important nationally as a defender of workers' rights. The WDL has never withdrawn from a fight concerning injustice, intolerance or denial of civil rights to workers because of political considerations or the personal beliefs of the individuals involved.

Membership dues (regular, $5 a year; minimum, $2) and contributions from supporters all over the United States finance the work of the League. Organizations, both national and local, also may join. For membership or information, write to:

FIFTEEN CENTS

The Way to Full Employment

ON JANUARY 22, 1945, Senator Murray introduced a full-employment bill in the Senate on behalf of himself and Senators Wagner, Thomas and O'Mahoney. The Full-Employment Act of 1945 is certain to arouse attention and interest unequaled since the days of the NRA. Hearings are about to be held. Economists have been asked by Senator Wagner to express their views. Many government departments and privately organized groups are preparing for the titanic struggle to come. The cry of liberty versus security is being raised.

The full-employment bill marks a departure in economic objectives to be sought by this government. Provision of full-time employment for all seeking work; maintenance of our system of private enterprise; a rise in the standard of living of the American people; the full utilization of the national resources of the country—these are the major objectives. The responsibilities of the federal government under this bill include: the pursuit of economic policies and programs which will stimulate and encourage the highest feasible levels of employment opportunities through private and other non-federal investment and expenditure; and to the extent that continuing full employment cannot otherwise be achieved, the provision of such volume of federal investment and expenditure as may be needed to assure continuing full employment.

In order to achieve these objectives and fulfill governmental responsibilities, the bill provides that the President be required to transmit to Congress a National Production and Employment Budget. This budget will estimate the total number on the labor market; the aggregate value of expenditures required to provide employment opportunities for this number; the anticipated value of expenditures, private and public. If the last is not large enough to provide full employment, the President shall recommend legislation which will contribute toward filling the gap: monetary, trade, fiscal and other policies are to be examined. If this is inadequate, the government will suggest additional federal expenditures and investment adequate to provide employment for the potentially unemployed.

What should be the basic responsibilities of the federal government in the maintenance of continuing full employment after the war?

First, let us consider the case for full employment.

We all desire a high level of employment and, if possible, full employment. Full employment gives each individual who is able to work a stake in the flow of goods. For most of us that is the only manner in which we can obtain the required goods to provide us with the desired standard of living. Full employment, moreover, means non-wastage of economic resources. For example, if this country had attained and maintained the 1944 level of income in the thirties, it might have had one trillion dollars more of income than it actually had. One trillion dollars is arrived at as the difference between attainable income as indicated by the 1944 achievement and actual income in the thirties. The sum is an overestimate because it is probable that we would not have liked to work so hard in the thirties as we have had to work during the war; also, the output per man-hour was not so great, and the numbers on the labor market less. It is, however, significant because it indicates what might have been achieved at that time through a full-employment policy. Nor should we forget that full employmeant means high morale, and a large amount of unemployment, particularly if it is concentrated on the same people, means a breakdown of morale.

Second, is full employment an appropriate goal?

There are economists who say that it is not desirable to have full employment. They argue, for example, that it is necessary to have a reserve of a few million workers in order to have a well functioning labor market. Sir William Beveridge, on the other hand, contends that the ideal system is one in which there are more jobs than there are workers. This would, in his view, considerably strengthen the bargaining position of workers and make for improvement in the institutional set-up. A full-employment economy does not rule out a minimum number of unemployed. For example, Sir William pointed out that a minimum of three percent unemployed is to be expected in Great Britain. In this country it might well be that five-percent unemployment, i. e., three million unemployed, is unavoidable. I can even envisage a situation in which five million unemployed would not be a serious matter —if we had an adequate social-security program and the unemployment were not concentrated on the same people. The difficulty, however, is that we may not stabilize at five million unemployed. A decline in employment results in reduced spending and income, and therefore brings about a further cumulative decline.

Third, what is full employment?

We should also be clear as to what we mean by full employment. If the American people want to work 40 hours a week and they are only allowed to work 30 hours a week, then they are three-quarters employed and one-quarter unemployed. Our recent experience of increased hours of work may suggest, for example, that American labor, prior to the war, was in fact unemployed in so far as it worked 37 hours before the war though it may have preferred to work 44 hours. It may also be that the unemployment in the thirties, which averaged nine millions, may actually have been greater than it seemed, since many would gladly have been on the labor market had there been a reasonable chance of getting a job. This is suggested by the addition of seven millions to the labor force during this war who ordinarily would not be there.

Fourth, let us consider the relation of the numbers on the labor market to unemployment.

One aspect of this problem is that the amount of employment and of unemployment will depend upon the numbers on the labor market and the hours of work. It is, therefore, necessary to consider what is the appropriate number of hours of work per week and whether we should encourage people to stay on the labor market or discourage them from it. For example, if we have a 35-hour instead of a 40-hour week, which is generally assumed, the reduction to 35 hours might make available some seven million more jobs, or reduce the amount of unemployment by seven million. This problem, however, requires further investigation, for the reduction of hours and income in turn reduces demand. In the years 1900-40 the number of hours a week in manufacturing dropped from 60 to 37, and it is conceivable that the public might continue to take part of its gains in increased leisure. It is also possible to encourage an additional five million people to continue their education for a longer period, and to this extent the numbers on the labor market and the amount of unemployment may be reduced. If that is what the American people want, it might be an excellent solution of the problem of unemployment. We must, however, be sure that it is what they want, because if they do not want this, then they are really suffering an undesired reduction in their standard of living. Even then this solution may be preferable to widespread unemployment: the incidence of unemployment might be evenly distributed and wastage of resources reduced. There are, however, better solutions.

Fifth, the government's responsibility.

The government should take some responsibility for employment. This is, however, a decision for the American people, not for economists. It is a political, rather than an economic, issue. Certainly the experience of the last few generations indicates that our system of private enterprise does not yield full employment. Sir William Beveridge has found that over several generations there have been large amounts of unemployment. Even at peaks, the amount of unemployment has been 10 percent or more of the numbers seeking work. In the United States in the thirties, our unemployment must have averaged 20 percent of the labor force; and if you allowed for those who would have preferred to be members of the labor market had jobs been available, the percentage might well have been greater.

Sixth, have the American people expressed themselves on this subject?

In the thirties, when there was a large amount of unemployment, the government reacted by introducing such programs as the FERA, the WPA, the PWA, etc. These were, however, inadequate to deal with the large amount of unemployment. In fact the government, through the introduction of social insurance, assumed that a certain amount of unemployment was inevitable. This insurance coverage has not been adequate nor have the benefits been large enough; and in periods of sustained unemployment the reserves of some states might quickly be wiped out. Under our present unemployment-insurance program, we may make the following assumptions for an early postwar year: 1. Unemployment—10 millions. 2. Benefits—$15 a week. (Roughly the present average.) 3. Duration—16 weeks. (Roughly the present average.) 4. Numbers eligible—one-half of 10 millions. 5. Cost—$1.2 billion, or about 20 percent of the total reserves. We may conclude, then, that given good distribution, the reserves of $6 billion are large enough to cover benefits for several years even with a large amount of unemployment. The loss of wages would, however, be about $20 billion per year on these assumptions and benefits would be only $1.2 billion, or six percent. We may conclude that our present unemployment insurance is at best a palliative.

Seventh, are the American people prepared to accept large amounts of unemployment?

It is particularly the war experience that raises doubts as to whether the American public will be content to accept large amounts of unemployment over long periods, as, to some extent, they did in the thirties. In this war we have increased the number of jobs, including military service, from 45 to 66 million, and there has been a considerable amount of upgrading. Compensation to employees is up from $48 to $116 billion. Even on very favorable assumptions as regards unemployment, most experts would estimate that as a result of a loss of $13 billion from reduced overtime—in addition to losses associated with downgrading, movement out of the labor market, etc.—wages and salaries will fall from $25-$30 billion. That will be a very difficult pill for labor to swallow. And will the American public be willing to accept, say, from five to 15 million unemployed? There have been 26 million people mobilized for war and for war industries, and these people must find jobs—frequently new jobs. The federal government will cut its expenditures by $75 billion. Alternative-spending methods must be found for a large part of that sum.

Furthermore, the distribution of workers and capital has changed considerably since 1939. The problem of unemployment is, therefore, not merely a question of providing adequate demand, but also one of ensuring the distribution of capital and labor in such a way that, given the total demand, employment may be maximized.

Eighth, can private enterprise provide the jobs?

Many doubt it can. Certainly our experience of the last generation supports this position. Perhaps if we could establish a free competitive system, with price flexibility, free trade, absence of monopoly, flexible wages, complete mobility of capital and labor—a system we have never had—then an important contribution might be made to the maintenance of a high level of employment. Another condition, however, would be that the income earned in any period should be spent. This is the great contribution that Lord Keynes has made to our economic thinking. Keynesian economists argue that unless measures are taken to keep spending up to income earned in a given period, there will be unemployment, and this unemployment may spread cumulatively. If the workers and others earn $100 billion in any period and only spend $80 billion, then there will be a $20-billion reduction in demand, and those who suffer from this reduction will in turn cut their spending. Though business is making a valiant effort to bring us back to a state more nearly like the competitive system which Mr. Hayek and others talk about, but which has not existed for a long time, I very much doubt whether they will succeed. It is necessary then to take measures to assure an adequate level of spending.

It is clear that we must depend on government to some extent, and apparently to an increasing extent. Government tax collections in the United States have increased from $166 million, or 4 percent of the national income in 1860, to $937 million, or 7.3 percent in 1890, to $2,260 million, or 6.5 percent of our 1913 income, to $14.8 billion, or 22.7 percent in 1938, and roughly to $55 billion, or almost one-third of the national income, in 1945.

Ninth, what is the magnitude of the problem?

There is general agreement that consumption must rise by at least 50 percent above prewar levels; and, whereas net investment in the thirties was around zero, it must rise to around $25 billion in order to give us a full-employment economy. As incomes rise, the public tends to spend less, or at least tends to save more. Its elementary needs are soon satisfied. Therefore, it becomes necessary to find some other types of consumption. It is not easy to envisage what these new types of additional consumption will be. It is simple to say that at an income of $80 billion, the public consumes so much housing and so many automobiles, etc., and therefore at an income of $160 billion it will consume so many automobiles and so many houses. These estimates are obtained simply by extending curves which show the relationship between consumption and income at an earlier period. But unfortunately what the public does when it has an income of $60 or $70 billion tells us little about what it will do when it has an income of $160 billion, and projections on the basis of the past yield saturation of markets at an early point. Similarly, in the case of investment it is not easy to see how the public will be able to spend $25 billion productively on investment. A dollar of investment is very efficient today, and in view of the large amount of investment that has been made in the war period, the openings are not too numerous. We have approximately $20 billion worth of new plant, although some part of this addition will not be available for non-war purposes. Nevertheless, plants and equipment are available in large quantities and in modern form.

Tenth, the right to a job versus the right to profits and interest.

The struggle becomes one primarily of those who are inclined to overemphasize the protection of financial rights against those who argue that every American has a right to a job. Those who support the position of property owners argue that the country must not get into debt. Yet I am not sure they are not arguing against their own interests. If the government could succeed in providing a sustained period of full employment or a very high level of employment, both job-seekers and the owners of capital would be protected.

Geoffrey Crowther, the British economist, has estimated that this country should have a national income of $330 billion in the year 2000. This is not by any means an unreasonable estimate and assumes a less rapid rate of progress than we have made in the past. At this income we can stand a high level of public debt. At this level of income we shall have full employment and also easily meet our financial obligations. We must not forget that against the rise of public debt are to be put the income-earning assets that are provided through the expansion of debt, the rise of income and the corresponding rise of tax capacity. Are the propertied classes better protected with a national income of $60 or $160 billion?

We should not overlook the following aspects of the growth of public debt: (a) There will be periods of repayment, that is, periods of inflation or potential inflation, as well as periods of increasing public debt. (b) The creation of public debt is not necessarily inflationary. The debt would rise in periods of idle savings. These would be taken by the government and be used to put unemployed resources to work. Against the rise of active money there would be a rise of output, and, therefore, the net effect should not be inflationary. Moreover, if the net effect is an expansion of money, we are putting one possible danger which could be controlled—the danger of large supplies of money relative to the supply of goods—against the even greater danger that we encountered in the thirties, of inadequate supplies of purchasing power against the supply of goods available, which brings deflation and unemployment. (c) We should never forget that the burden of the debt is a function of, and is related to, the total amount of income. A $150-billion income can yield us $20 billion worth of federal taxes which will easily carry our present debt burden. If, on the other hand, we allow our income to fall to $100 billion, we shall need more than $20 billion worth of taxes to take care of our ordinary needs plus unemployment expenses and the like. A tax burden of $30 billion (federal, state and local) requires only 20 percent of the national income in the first case, and one of $35 billion (second case) requires 35 percent of the national income.

The Wagner-Murray full-employment bill, however appealing, is not perfect. It is based on the philosophy that adequate total demand and full employment are all that matters. But full employment is not only a question of adequate total demand. That the magnitude of demand is the most important single variable, we can be sure, however.

Another important factor is the distribution of capital and labor, both regionally and occupationally. We may have adequate total demand and yet have a considerable amount of unfilled vacancies and unemployment at the same time, the reason being that capital is in one place and labor is in another. This is a particularly important fact in view of the large distortions brought about both regionally and occupationally by the war. The rate of growth, for example, in some parts of the country (e. g., California, Washington and some sections of the South) has been several times the rate of growth in the New England area or in New York or Pennsylvania. This is evidenced by the rise of employment, the increase of bank deposits, the rise of income payments and the like. Unless the government takes some responsibility for assuring the best possible distribution of capital and labor, large amounts of unemployment and reduced productivity will result.

We must not consider full employment to the exclusion of productivity. Latin America does not suffer greatly from unemployment, but its per-capita income is probably less than one-tenth of ours. Our task is not only to find jobs for all who want them, but also to make sure that abilities are used to a maximum degree.

Let us not be ungrateful, however. If Senator Wagner and his colleagues offer the prospect of three square meals a day, we should not cry because caviar and strawberries are not included.

SEYMOUR E. HARRIS

London Letter

EVEN the oldest delegate at Blackpool recognizes that this conference is one of the most dramatic in the forty-year history of the Labor Party. On Sunday night, May 20, party leader Clement Attlee, newly returned from San Francisco, read Churchill's letter to the National Committee. Churchill, hoping to split the Labor leadership, offered Labor two alternatives: either remain in the coalition to the end of the Japanese war, or proceed with an immediate election. Thereby the Prime Minister, advised by Beaverbrook and Bracken that the Tories must hold the election while their war-winning prestige is untarnished, rejected Labor's proposal for an autumn election.

The Labor Executive unanimously decided to accept the challenge. While pledging first priority to the Japanese war, the Executive was unable to agree to a further prolongation of the ten-year-old Parliament, branded as savoring of fascism a suggestion for a referendum, and declared that a coalition of Tories and Labor would be unable to tackle reconstruction of the war-damaged cities and industries of Britain. Nor did Labor on the grounds of national or party advantage favor an immediate election: the Electoral Register is defective, many servicemen are disfranchised, there is little opportunity to make the public aware of the issues. The conference endorsed the Executive decision.

Labor's answer went to Downing Street on Monday. On Tuesday back to Blackpool came Churchill's pained reply. On Wednesday Churchill resigned. On Friday the Labor conference ended after a week-long demonstration of unity in the resolve to win what one speaker called the most important election in the history of Britain. From the brilliant Morrison to the powerful Bevin, from Dalton to Bevan, Laski, Shinwell, Cripps and Wilkinson, every leader backed the Executive's published five-year plan.

The general opinion is that Churchill's action harmed the Tories. Servicemen are especially irritated. Already the non-party Daily Mirror has attacked Churchill for failing to honor his earlier declaration against rushed elections. A Wednesday Mirror cartoon showed an ex-soldier talking to his son: "What else did you do in the war, Daddy?" "I lost my vote."

But the final results will be decided by a choice of the people between the broad issues of constructive planning versus private enterprise. The Gallup Poll favors Labor. The Stock Exchange is seven-to-four on the Tories. The battle is now on.

Before Labor accepted the Tory challenge to an immediate election, there was a sharp exchange between Ernest Bevin and Churchill's aide, Minister of Information Brendan Bracken. Bevin blamed the Tories, in power for 19 out of 21 inter-war years, for losing the last peace. Bracken countered with the charge that before the war the Labor Party was a bunch of pacifists who prevented Britain from rearming. And then

TESTIMONY OF RUSSELL SMITH, LEGISLATIVE SECRETARY, NATIONAL FARMERS UNION, TO HOUSE COMMITTEE ON POST-WAR MILITARY POLICY, IN OPPOSITION TO H.R.515, THE COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING BILL. June 13, 1945.

The National Farmers Union opposes H.R.515 and any similar bills to provide for compulsory peacetime military training. Our people always have opposed such measures, believing them contrary to American experience and tradition. They believe even more strongly that such a departure from what they feel is democratic precedent and practice, is ill-advised and dangerous. We oppose the bill on the following principal grounds.

1. Peace-time conscription always has been repugnant to the American people. Forced military service, quartering of British troops on civilians, and other practices associated with militarism played a considerable part in creating the tensions that finally erupted into the American Revolution. On the other hand, that war and all of our wars have been fought, on our side, by citizen soldiers.

We believe that World War II has simply reinforced the argument for continuing this practice. We have been unable to discover any evidence that those countries where universal military service was in force were superior from a military standpoint to those countries which relied upon citizen soldiers. At all times those armies that fought from free devotion to their cause have been superior material for war, and we believe that history shows they have triumphed in all instances where other factors were equal.

Our faith is that democracy is superior to all other political systems in drawing forth the virtues of self-reliance, of initiative, of displined yet independent action, and our faith in democracy extendsalso to its ability to defend itself against other systems.

2. We believe, moreover, that peace-time conscription will tend inevitably toward the strengthening of militarism as a threat to democratic peace-time ways of life. The inevitable tendency of the military bureaucracy is to entrench itself more and more deeply. The stake of officers in ever larger armies and navies, in ever larger appropriations, in ever larger authority, is such that we believe establishment of compulsory military training would set up a continuing conflict between the military and civilian establishments that would be extremely unfortunate.

The presence of large bodies of troops also is a standing invitation to their use in times of domestic stress, as was proved during the dark days of 1929-32. None of us can forget the driving of the veterans from Anacostia flats by troops, and our people well remember that the widespread suffering and unrest among farmers in those days might have brought troops down upon them if the United States had been a militaristic nation. We dislike the thought of troops being called out against workers whether on factory or farm, and we believe that the permanent retention of the large military establishment that would be required with the adoption of peace-time conscription would be a constant threat to peaceable resolution of economic differences.

3. Compulsory military training is anti-democratic also in that it tends to provide a refuge from the hard thought and action that a democracy requires of its citizens in the solution of their problems. In other words, permanent military training tends toward the regimentation of the mind as well as the body, an exceedingly dangerous thing in a democracy that depends upon the wisdom of the great masses of the people for its successful functioning.

Furthermore, such a program of expenditures offers a specious way out of the hard necessity that confronts us as a nation of finding ways of achieving prosperity and full employment without infringement of those personal liberties that always have been the foundation of the American kind of life. Compulsory military training will not solve this problem, and, indeed, to the extent that it is offered as a substitute for a smoothly functioning economic system, its adoption would be an active handicap to the achievement of that kind of system.

At the same time, a large standing army -- which is what universal military training in effect means -- is also a provocation to any national administration to embark upon foreign war as a means of solving pressing domestic issues. Historically, that has been the resort of governments that found themselves unable to cope domestically with domestic troubles. We do not believe the American people want their sons offered up in battle for any such reason as that.

4. Preparation for another war -- and that is what peace-time conscription means -- in the midst of our efforts to exert world leadership for permanent peace is a contradiction that cannot be explained away. We do not see how the other nations of the world can be expected to take literally our protestations of peaceful intent if at the same time that we are making them we embark upon the greatest program of preparation for war that we have ever embarked upon in time of peace. If, despite sincere efforts, it proves impossible in the post-war period to enter it may be necessary to maintain a larger standing army than in the past. But the stakes are too high for us to take any step now that imperils the possibility of lasting peace. It is possible that our whole civilization is at stake. Certainly the country at large is not prepared to act now in such a way as to cast doubt upon the firmness of our conviction that a workable peace structure is possible of achievement.

5. Finally, we believe that compulsory military training would defeat the ends even of those who advocate it. We are as strongly for the security of the United States from military aggression as any of the proponents of peace-time conscription. But we believe that it would be a grave mistake for the Nation to adopt a law such as is proposed, then to relapse into a blind self-satisfaction in the belief that it was secure. This war has shown us conclusively that the decisive factor in modern war is industrial power and technological dexterity. It would be idle to try to fight a war ten or twenty years from now with the airplanes, the tanks, the flame-throwers and the other waapons of today, just as it would have been disastrous had we tried to fight this war with the weapons of 1917.

The best way of assuring success if another war comes -- and we earnestly pray that it will not come -- is simply by being the most prosperous, the most advanced, and the most skilled nation in the world in peace. Our successors in this war have been due to the industrial miracle that we have worked. We have a splendidly trained army, trained without peace-time conscription, but if it had been trained in the use of obsolete weapons, it would have been gravely, perhaps fatally handicapped. An industry made up of modern plant, manned by skilled and healthy workers, equipped with the best brains that science can afford, managed efficiently -- and decentralized so as to be as nearly invulnerable to air attack as possible -- this is the guarantee of that production that is indispensable to the waging of successful war in our times. Moreover, the speed with which weapons become obsolete makes it wasteful and ineffective to train large bodies of men to their use. Rather, modern war calls for a small, highly skilled corps of expert technicians prepared at all times to train large bodies of tropps in the use of weapons when they need to be used and when they are still the best available.

Peace-time conscription, by offering a substitute for that kind of program, deludes us and actually works against effective preparedness.

This is not to say that we would oppose a youth-training program, combining the features of the former Civilian Conservation Corps, the National Youth Administration, and other civilian agencies. We believe in the principles of cooperation and a program of that kind simply extends to the nation as a community the principle of cooperation and good neighborliness of a community. We believe that all men have obligations to their neighbors, and we can see much good from a consciously democratic, cooperative training program of that kind. But we must oppose any such military program as those that have been proposed in H.R.515 and similar measures.

TESTIMONY OF RUSSELL SMITH, LEGISLATIVE SECRETARY, NATIONAL FARMERS UNION ON HR-3422, THE FARM CREDIT BILL, IN HEARINGS OF THE HOUSE AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE TUESDAY, JUNE 19, 1945.

The bill pending before the committee has the merits of clarity and simplicity, and to that extent is a considerable improvement over some previous bills designed to reorganize the agricultural credit system. It also contains some specific provisions with which the National Farmers Union agrees. In general, however, the bill goes counter to a number of fundamental tenets of the Farmers Union, and we therefore are regretfully forced to oppose the enactment of the measure.

In the first place, it does not appear to us that the present is an appropriate time for reorganization of the agricultural credit structure. A new Secretary of Agriculture and War Food Administrator, Congressman Clinton P. Anderson, will take office July 1. So far as we have discovered, his views concerning this legislation have not been made known, yet if the bill were adopted as it now stands it would strip the new secretary of a considerable part of the power he has just been appointed by President Truman to exercise.

Moreover, it is our understanding that President Milton S. Eisenhower of Kansas State College has been asked by the Administration to undertake a special survey of the agricultural organization changes desirable in the period of transition from war to peace and in the post-war period. Action of this kind in advance of President Eisenhower's report would deprive this committee of suggestions and recommendations that it might well find exceedingly valuable, in view of Mr. Eisenhower's competence and experience in the field of agricultural organization in both a Federal and State capacity.

The forthcoming report by President Eisenhower, and Congressman Anderson's use of that report, also relate directly to President Truman's general program for reorganization of the executive establishment to fit it for the long range jobs of a peace-time government. Reorganization of the kind proposed in HR-3422 either would be suject to change later as a part of the President's own program or else would handicap him in that reorganization because of the natural reluctance he would feel to go counter to so recent a Congressional action.

There also appears to be reasonable doubt whether removal of agricultural agencies from the Department of Agriculture coincides with the President's view of proper administrative alignment. If it be recalled that his message to Congress on reorganization of the executive branch came the day following his announcement of the prospective return of the War Food Administration to the Department, then these statements of Mr. Truman become of special interest in connection with the pending bill: 1/

> "It is imperative that these matters be dealt with continuously if the Government structure is to be reasonably wieldy and manageable, and be responsive to proper direction by the Congress and the President on behalf of the people of this country. The question is one that goes directly to the adequacy and effectiveness of our government as an instrument of democracy. Suitable reshaping of those parts of the executive branch of the government which require it from time to time is necessary and desirable from every point of view. A well organized executive branch will be more efficient than a poorly organized one. It will help materially in making manageable the government of this great nation. A number of my predecessors have urged the Congress to take steps to make the executive branch more business-like and efficient. I welcome and urge the cooperation of Congress to the end that these objectives may be attained."

We are aware that the point has been made to this committee that the President, while yet a Senator from Missouri, offered a bill in the Senate providing for removal of Farm Credit Administration from the Department of Agriculture. But it appears to us plain that that bill was offered under different circumstances and in a different context from the present, and that it would not be working toward the goal of a more "manageable" government to separate agencies with related functions. Rather, it appears to go in the opposite direction from that implied in the President's message.

1/ New York Times, May 26, pp 1.

There are even more important reasons, however, than those of immediate governmental relationships for our view that action ought to be delayed on this bill. It seems clear that American agriculture faces changes of far-reaching import as a result of the war, of technological advance, and of the changing composition of the American economy generally. We believe that the administration of agricultural credit, must be based upon the function it performs, if it is to be an adequate structure. In other words, it will be idle to reorganize and rebuild to be specific jobs unless the nature of the jobs to be done is clear. The dangers inherent in providing administrative machinery on the basis of mistaken assumptions or incomplete information can be readily illustrated by a few quotations from the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture for 1933 2/, a time of extensive agricultural credit reorganization under the impact of emergency conditions.

After describing the terrible distress then prevalent in rural sections, Secretary Hyde said:

> "The Federal Government relieved this situation in several ways. It authorized production loans out of relief appropriations remaining unexpended in 1931. It made additional provision for production loans in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. It amended the laws governing the operations of the Federal intermediate credit banks in such a manner as to increase their lending power. It appropriated $125,000,000 to increase the capital stock of the Federal land banks. Another measure authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans out of a $10,000,000 revolving fund to assist individuals in organizing or enlarging agricultural-credit corporations and livestock-loan companies. This fund may not be much used, because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is organizing regional agricultural-credit corporations to occupy the same field. Other Federal legislation, suggested by the President, helped to relieve the farm-credit stringency. The Glass-Steagall bill permitted the Federal reserve banks to use the direct obligations of the United States Government as collateral for Federal reserve notes, and thus released gold for other credit purposes. It also authorized the Federal reserve banks to make advances to member banks on paper eligible for rediscount. This legislation relieved pressure on country as well as on city banks and put many of them in a position to increase their loans. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation helped agriculture through the relief it extended to banks generally."

The mere listing of the steps taken at that illustrates the inadequacy of the actions, so far as long-time adjustment of the credit structure to the needs of farmers is concerned. The emergency actions did provide emergency relief, but even the later reorganizations whereby the Farm Credit Administration was organized and whereby, later, it was placed in the Department of Agriculture did not wholly meet the long-range needs of farmers.

The National Farmers Union thus is in accord with the committee's view that the structure of agricultural credit needs overhauling. But we believe that it is approaching the matter backwards to approach it from the administrative standpoint first. We believe that the first determination must be functional rather than administrative, and that the administrative mechanisms should proceed from the job to be done, rather than the reverse. This is not to say that we do not approve of portions of the bill, for example that providing a public appraisal system. In view of these facts, therefore, it seems desirable to discuss the bill section by section first, and to state in conclusion our general views as to the appropriate functions and the consequent administrative devices of agricultural credit in the years ahead.

Section 2 of HR-3422 provides for the establishment of the Agricultural Credit Agency and for the transfer to that agency of the "functions, powers and duties" of FCA and the Farm Security Administration. Historically, the National Farmers Union has advocated an even closer relationship of credit agencies and operating programs for agriculture, and has supported the various measure proposing to give FSA permanent legislative status. Clearly this provision is counter to the tenets of the Farmers Union.

It is our view, to be spelled out in more detail later, that there has never been an adequately developed relationship between credit and program agencies, and that instead of providing for their further separation Congress might well direct that they be brought into more intimate contact. Agricultural credit is like no other credit, in that at bottom it rests upon the land and the way it is used. Production, conservation, rehabilitation and other programs, therefore, are inherently of concern to farm credit programs, and vice versa. The Use of land in effect is the basic collateral securing any farm credit -- even, in the final analysis, marketingcredit — hence, it appears probable that a miniature Department of Agriculture inevitably must be established in the new Agricultural Credit Agency, if it is set up. It is difficult to see how, otherwise, it will be able to do its work effectively. A simpler procedure, it seems to us, would be to retain the credit agencies in the Department and to work toward their closer integration with the operating programs.

As to the absorption of Farm Security into the new agency, here again the Farmers Union traditionally has taken the position that rehabilitation and tenant purchase loans differ so widely from the orthodox loan operations of the Federal Land Banks and the Production Credit Associations that it is desirable to have them administered separately 3/. It is true, however, that in the conditions likely to face agriculture in the post-war period a good deal of hard thought needs to be given to the use of both kinds of credit, as I propose to indicate later, but fitting credit machinery to credit needs cannot be accomplished by providing for administrative coherence, on the basis alone of existing machinery, however appealing it may be in theory.

More important, so far as FSA is concerned, is the failure of this section to provide firm legislative sanction for the rehabilitation loan program. We understand, of course, that HR-3422 confines itself wholly to administrative coordination and does not deal substantively with the content existing legislation under which any of the affected agencies operates. Nevertheless, the FSA case is considerably different from that of any of the other agencies involved. All of the other agencies have firmly established authorities pursuant to legislative enactments, and none of them would be left, as would FSA, hovering uncertainly between life and death.

Activities other than rehabilitation make up only a fraction of FSA's work, hency that agency alone of all those concerned in this bill would, if it should be adopted, be left in doubt as to its status. If the committee, therefore, should decide that it wishes to report the bill at this time, we urge strongly that it amend this section to add specific authorization for the conduct of the rehabilitation loan program as it is now being operated. This would require only a single sentence, would then enable FSA to proceed with some assurance of a continuing function, and would in no way hamper the committee in its later task of adopting a comprehensive measure dealing with the future course of direct lending activities. If the bill is reported without making such provision for Farm Security's work, FSA's future will indeed be hazardous.

Section 3 of the bill establishes an Agricultural Credit Board of 7 members, with staggered terms, to be paid $12,500 annually and to serve ultimately for 14-year periods. We recognize the validity, from the point of view of the sponsors of the bill, of the argument that such an arrangement will remove political influence from the administration of the credit system. But we disagree as to the validity of this fear of politics. We believe there are just as many dangers inherent in rigidity, in the tendency toward extreme conservatism that is induced by security, as there are in leaving the credit system open to charges of politic cal favoritism. Neither, of course, is inevitable. But most of the credit troubles of farmers have proceeded from over-conservatism and most of their remedies for their troubles have proceeded from election of members of Congress who understood their problems.

Moreover, the very device of a board seems to us to be unwise and to work toward complexity rather than clarity, in that there is no clear delineation of function as between this board and the boards already existing in some of the agencies to be transferred to the ACA. What, for example, would be the respective jurisdictions of the new board and the boards of directors of the Land Banks? It is clear, of course, that this bill, if it should become law, would be followed by supplementary legislation. But this does not alter our conviction that the Agricultural Credit Board is undesirable. If the supplementary legislation does not establish a clear line of authority, insofar as policies are concerned, then it amounts largely to highly expensive window-dressing. In other words, it would cost the tax-payers $87,500 a year in salaries along to maintain 7 gentlemen without very clearly defined functions. On the other hand, it is wholly possible that the supplementary legislation would follow the lines advocated by some organizations of splintering credit and other Federal programs into largely State-dominated units, thus opening the way to far more local political influence and pressure than would a genuine federal program.

Finally, we are inclined to question the parallel between the proposed Agricultural Credit Board and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System that sometimes has been drawn. The Federal Reserve Board was established primarily to afford adequate discounting facilities for the private banking system, and to maintain continuous scrutiny of the total operations of private banks as they affect the national interest. There is little comparable function with respect to agricultural credit for the board proposed in HR-3422, since it deals not at all with private banking but with direct governmental and cooperative agricultural credit. These functions are more susceptible of administration through an administrator than through a board, and the establishment of policies to guide that administrator is the function of Congress. The policies are subject to annual review, at least to a considerable degree, in the consideration of the appropriations for the agencies, and we believe that such review is wholly adequate.

Section 4 of the bill is that dealing with the administrative organization of ACA, and the above remarks cover much of our comment on the administratorship, except that we of course would prefer to see the Administrator appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, as now. As to the remainder of the section, we agree that the proposed five divisions, headed by deputy administrators, compose a logical and orderly administrative establishment, on the basis of existing credit functions.

As to Section 5, dealing with the responsibilities of the Board, we believe that it is adequate, if the bill should be approved, except as regards the omission of the rehabilitation loan program from the listing of responsibilities. In view of existing land valuations and the scarcity of good farmland available for purchase, the possibilities of really large-scale program for moving sharecroppers and tenants into ownership are likely to be severely limited, at least for a number of years. We believe, furthermore, that very large numbers of farmers need production credit based on individual farm plans. Thus, failure to make such credit a major responsibility of the board would, if the bill is adopted, leave a major gap. In line with our advocacy of definite authorization of the rehabilitation loan program, therefore, we urge that, if the committee should report the bill, it include as a fourth major responsibility the promotion of a rehabilitation loan program for those farmers unable to obtain other credit.

We are glad to endorse Section 6 unreservedly. In the 1945 program of the National Farmers Union, adopted by its convention delegates last November, is contained the following, as the first recommendation of measures to assist returning veterans: "We propose a public appraisal system to be made available to any veteran or any other person to determine the true productive value of any property acquired". Section 6 proceeds along this line, hence we are very glad to see that it is being considered. We hope that the provision will be strengthened to insure that the service shall be provided at no more than actual cost.

All of the other provisions of the bill appear to be routine legislative directions flowing from sections previously discussed, except Section 8 (d), calling for transfer to the ACA of labor supply centers, homes and camps for liquidation no later than 6 months after the end of the war. Our view is that the need for such camps and centers is likely to be more imperative after the war than now. Comprehensive and complex economic adjustments clearly are coming when the war is over. It is our view that a labor program of the kind operated so successfully by FSA prior to the transfer of the labor program to the War Food Administration is going to be greatly needed, and if the bill shouldbe approved we commend to the committee's consideration the desirability of preparing now for such a contingency.

So much for the bill as it stands. As I have indicated earlier, however, we hope that legislation such as this will not be adopted now. We should greatly prefer to see the committee conduct an inquiry into thetotal agricultural program needs in the post-war period, and to act on the credit phases of those needs after it has obtained as detailed indications as possible of the direction agriculture itself is likely to take. I know that the committee is limiting itself to administrative proposals in this bill, but I hope the members will bear with me while I discuss briefly the credit requirements that we believe will dominate the next decade and that in turn should dominate consideration of the administrative machinery of agricultural credit.

What lies ahead, then, for agriculture? There are many different answers, but there is a surprising thread of agreement in most of them. For instance, T. W. Schultz of the University of Chicago, says 5/ that "with farm prices as low as 90% of parity, agricultural production is likely to increase upwards of 15% during the decade, which certainly is much more than the demand will absorb without marked changes in relative prices." The Guaranty Trust Co. of New York says 6/ the "unless the government adopts sweeping measures of control....it is likely to find itself confronted with a set of unmanageable surpluses" and adds that this would mean new administrative machinery and payment of huge benefits by government. The Land-Grant College Association's post-war policy committee says 7/ that "the domestic market for farm products....will exceed in importance all other factors affecting the farmers' prosperity, with high employment a 'must' if trouble is to be averted."

There are random examples chosen simply to make the point that major agricultural adjustments are going to be required in the coming years. Credit must be attuned to those adjustments. We suggest, therefore, to the committee that the logical approach to the administrative problems of farm credit is to see first how it is to be used in relation to the adjustments that inevitably will be needed. The committee has at hand an excellent start in that direction in the report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics entitled "A Conversion Program for the Cotton South". 8/ The problem of cotton are symptomatic of the problems of American agriculture, and the BAE's recommendations for the handling of that crop could well set the pattern for most other crops.

The core of the BAE proposal is that a definite program of conversion from cotton to other crops be instituted for those farmers who will be better off out of cotton, "with a broad program of assistance to farmers who needed to go out of cotton, reduce their cotton acreage, enlarge their farms, or make other basic changes in order to establish a stable, diversified pattern of farming that could be expected to yield adequate income" and an "integrated program of conversion payments and credit facilities to help farmers make the required changes, with aid conditioned on following long-range individual farm plans".

In addition to direct conversion payments to these farmers, the BAE says that "in many instances a change in the size and type of farm will call for such major improvements as new farm buildings or extensive repairs to existing buildings, as well as purchase of livestock, of machinery and equipment, or of additional land". But the important point to be stressed today, in the consideration of HR-3422, is that the real basis for both the conversion payments and the loans proposed in this program is a farm plan.

Such a farm plan, the BAE goes on, "should be developed by the farm family in cooperation with a technical worker, and should fit the farm and the family. It should provide for a good system of farming and farm living, including a crop and livestock system adapted to physical resources and to prospective market outlets. The first year's operating plan should be worked out as one step in a 5-year conversion program. Annual operating plans would be worked out for each of the succeeding years of the program. If the farm is too small at the start to provide an adequate living, and if the family is capable of operating a full-time farm, ways should be sought to add more land....If additional land cannot be found, the farm plan would provide for part-time work off the farm."

The significance for the committee at this time of this program is that the farm plan itself is the credit base. It is the belief of the National Farmers Union that such a farm plan must be the credit base for the great majority, at least, of all American farms. As a minimum, such a farm plan ought to be the credit base of the two-thirds of American farms which, according to the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, produce but 21 percent of the commercially sold farm products. 9/

We have advocated the use of such a farm plan for the past three years, first as a means of increasing production of food during the war, then later as a long-time device for promoting an American agriculture predominantly composed of family farms. For those members of the committee interested in pursuing this line of thought I shall be glad to send them a detailed outline prepared last year by the National Farmers Union. 10/

This is why we believe that credit must be kept close to the operating programs of the Department. This is why we believe that it will be idle to seek to promote administrative integration of credit agencies simply by lumping them in a single independent agency. The central credit problems of American agriculture are central also to the operating programs and to the plan of operations of the individual farmer.

10/ A Farmers' Farm Program. National Farmers Union, Denver, Colo., 1944.

We suggest, therefore, that the committee tackle the question of administration of agricultural credit on a different basis from that used in this bill. The real significances of agricultural credit is the way it is used out on the farm, not in the streamlining of streamlining of banking procedures. The most efficient banking methods in the world will not save the Treasury and the taxpayers from loss if they are applied to farms that are inadequate to produce a return that will enable the borrower to repay his loan.

Accordingly, we believe that the committee should think first in terms of integration of the operating agencies of the Department. Perhaps it should explore the desirability of consolidating FSA and AAA and SCS. Perhaps then it should think in terms of how credit is required to make those programs effective. And then perhaps it will want to look into the possibility of setting up the purely banking functions outside of the Department of Agriculture.

Under such a system, the use of credit would be determined by the need in relation to the operating program, while the provision of the money for that purpose would be handled by an agency modeled on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. If that is done, then of course Congress should spell out carefully the kinds of credit that will be needed, and make sure that the lending agency makes available adequate funds and on adequate terms to do the job that Congress intended.

The two outstandingnneeds in the conversion period will be in the field of direct credit. They will be production credit adapted to meet conversion needs, and longer-term credit for the acquisition of additional land to form economic-sized units and of buildings or equipment. Both should be based on farm plans that will enable operators to pay out, should include variable payment provisions, and should conform to a state and national adjustment pattern.

It is our conviction that the great majority of American farmers can only be benefited by the adaption of agricultural credit to uses such as this, and that the machinery for the provision of agricultural credit should not be reorganized until the committee has surveyed comprehensively the credit needs of the post-war period.

FOR RELEASE A.M.PAPERS
June 10, 1945

WASHINGTON — James G. Patton, President of the National Farmers Union, has sent the following telegram to Senator Carter Glass, Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee:

"Destruction of the Fair Employment Practices Committee, as proposed by the House of Representatives in its failure to provide funds for the agency in the War Agencies Appropriation Bill, threatens gravely the conduct of the war against Japan and even more gravely the prospect for smooth reconversion from war to a prosperous peace.

"Both major parties have pledged support of the FEPC in their platforms and failure to carry on with it would constitute a betrayal of millions of voters.

"The FEPC has made a contribution to the war effort far greater than the size of its appropriation or staff, or the extent of the authority granted it, would indicate. We believe it has been a very large factor in the magnificent production job done by American management and labor during the war. We believe, too, that it can make an equally great contribution to the full employment and production that are an essential if the peace we have won and are winning by arms is to be made secure.

"The National Farmers Union urges that you exert your efforts to the end that funds requested by the Budget Bureau for the FEPC be included in the War Agencies Bill, and that the Senate, in line with President Truman's request, stand firm for retention of the provision in the completed bill. We should appreciate it if all members of the Appropriations Committee could be informed of our views and this message inserted in the record of the hearings."

79TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 1274

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 17 (legislative day, JULY 9), 1945

Mr. KILGORE (for himself, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. WAGNER, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, and Mr. PEPPER) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance

A BILL

To amend the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 to provide for an orderly transition from a war to a peacetime economy through supplementation of unemployment compensation payable under State laws, and for other purposes.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3 That the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944
4 is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the follow-
5 ing new title:

1 "TITLE VII—TEMPORARY RECONVERSION
2 UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

3 "DEFINITIONS

4 "SEC. 701. When used in this title—

5 "(a) The term 'reconversion period' means the period
6 (1) beginning with the fifth Monday after the date of enact-
7 ment of this title, and (2) ending June 30, 1947;

8 "(b) The term 'State' includes the District of Colum-
9 bia, Alaska, and Hawaii;

10 "(c) The term 'compensation' means cash benefits pay-
11 able to individuals with respect to their unemployment,
12 exclusive of any payments with respect to dependents;

13 "(d) The term 'State weekly benefit amount' means
14 the amount of compensation to which an individual is en-
15 titled (exclusive of any portion thereof payable with respect 16 to dependents) with respect to a week of total unemploy-
17 ment, under the provisions of a State unemployment com-
18 pensation law;

19 "(e) The term 'adjusted weekly benefit amount' means 20 the sum of (1) the State weekly benefit amount of an 21 individual, and (2) any supplementary compensation pay-
22 able with respect to a week of total unemployment under 23 an agreement or regulation pursuant to this title.

24 "AGREEMENTS WITH STATES

25 "SEC. 702. (a) The Director is authorized on behalf

1 of the United States to enter into agreements with any State,
2 or with the unemployment compensation agency of any State,
3 under which such State agency will make, as agent of the 4 United States, payments of compensation as authorized in 5 this section with respect to unemployment occurring in the 6 reconversion period.

7 "(b) Any such agreement shall provide—

8 "(1) for supplementing the amount of compensa-
9 tion payable to any individual during his benefit year
10 in such amount that compensation will not be denied
11 to any individual, by reason of exhaustion of his bene-
12 fit rights, until he has been paid an amount of com-
13 pensation equal to twenty-six times his adjusted weekly
14 benefit amount; and

15 "(2) for such payments as are necessary to pro-
16 vide compensation on the basis of their adjusted weekly
17 benefit amounts to individuals entitled to the maximum
18 State weekly benefit amount payable under the State
19 unemployment compensation law of any State in which 20 such maximum State weekly benefit amount is less than 21 $25: Provided, That the adjusted weekly benefit amount
22 of each such individual shall be determined by an appro-
23 priate extension (with a maximum adjusted benefit
24 amount of $25) of the method used under the State
25 unemployment compensation law in determining the

1 State weekly benefits amounts of individuals entitled to 2 less than the maximum State weekly benefit amount;
3 and

4 "(3) for the payment of compensation to any indi-
5 vidual who performed services as a civilian in the employ
6 of the Federal Government, including any wholly owned
7 instrumentality thereof, and to any individual who per-
8 formed services, in employment as defined in title II
9 of the Social Security Act as an officer or member of 10 the crew of a vessel, equal to the compensation which 11 would be payable to such individual under the District 12 of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act, as 13 amended (as supplemented under paragraphs (1) and 14 (2) of this subsection), if such services had been per-15 formed in the District of Columbia and had not been 16 excluded from the definition of employment in such 17 Act; and

18 "(4) for the payment of compensation to any indi-
19 vidual who performed services in handling, drying,
20 packing, processing, freezing, grading, storing, or de-
21 livering to storage or to market or to a carrier for trans-
22 portation to market, any agricultural or horticultural 23 commodity, equal to the compensation which would 24 be payable to such individual under the State unem-
25 ployment compensation law (as supplemented under

1 paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection) if such 2 services had not been excluded from the definition of 3 employment in such law.
4 "(c) Any State which enters into an agreement to 5 pay compensation in accordance with subsection (a) of this 6 section may include in its agreement provision for—7 "(1) payment of compensation to individuals on 8 the basis of adjusted weekly benefit amounts which do
9 not exceed $25 and do not exceed two-thirds of the 10 individual's previous weekly earnings, as defined and 11 determined by the State unemployment compensation
12 agency;
13 "(2) payment of compensation to any class or 14 classes of individuals who would be entitled to compen-
15 sation under the State unemployment compensation law
16 except for existing or prior exclusions from the definition
17 of employment in such law, or except for existing or 18 prior limitations of coverage in such law based on the 19 amount of pay roll or number of employees of, or the 20 duration or frequency of employment by, the employ-
21 ing unit, such compensation to be in the same amounts,
22 on the same terms, and subject to the same conditions
23 as are provided in such law (including payments there-
24 under with respect to dependents), together with sup-

1 plemental payments made in accordance with subsection
2 (a) of this section.

3 "PAYMENTS BY THE DIRECTOR

4 "SEC. 703. If a State fails to enter into an agreement
5 with the Director or fails to make payments specified in 6 section 702 (b), the Director, in accordance with regula-
7 tions prescribed by him, shall make payments to individuals
8 under conditions, for period, and in amounts, substantially 9 equivalent to payments which would have been made to 10 them from Federal funds had the State made payments
11 under an agreement meeting, but not exceeding, the require-12 ments of such subsection. Final determinations by the 13 Director of entitlement to such payments shall be subject
14 to review in court in the same manner and to the same
15 extent as is provided in title II of the Social Security Act,
16 as amended, with respect to decisions by the Social Security
17 Board under such title.

18 "REDUCTION OF BENEFITS

19 "SEC. 704. Any agreement under this title shall pro-
20 vide that compensation otherwise payable to any individual
21 under the State's unemployment compensation law will not
22 be denied or reduced for any week by reason of any payment
23 made pursuant to such agreement or section 703 and that 24 no compensation shall be paid under such agreement on 25 account of any employment or service which may be the

1 basis for payments under any Federal law providing un-
2 employment compensation.

3 "ADMINISTRATION

4 "SEC. 705. (a) Determination of entitlement to supple-
5 mentary payments of compensation made by a State unem-
6 ployment compensation agency under an agreement under 7 this title shall be subject to review in the same manner and 8 to the same extent as determinations under the State unem-
9 ployment compensation law, and only in such manner and 10 to such extent.

11 "(b) For the purpose of payments made to a State
12 under title III of the Social Security Act, as amended, the 13 administration by the unemployment compensation agency
14 of such State of an agreement under this title shall be deemed 15 to be a part of the administration of the State unemploy-
16 ment compensation law.

17 "PAYMENTS TO STATES

18 "SEC. 706. (a) Each State entering into an agree-
19 ment under this title shall be entitled to be paid an amount 20 equal to the total of all supplementary payments made in 21 accordance with such agreement.

22 "(b) In making payments pursuant to subsection (a) of 23 this section, there shall be paid to the State, either in ad-
24 vance or by way of reimbursement, as may be determined
25 by the Director, such sum as the Director estimates the

1 State will be entitled to receive under this title for each
2 calendar quarter; reduced or increased, as the case may be,
3 by any sum by which the Director finds that his estimates
4 for any prior calendar quarter were greater or less than the 5 amounts which should have been paid to the State. The 6 amount of such payments may be determined by such statis-
7 tical, sampling, or other method as may be agreed upon by 8 the Director and the State agency.

9 "(c) The Director shall from time to time certify to 10 the Secretary of the Treasury for payment to each State the 11 sums payable to such State under this section. The Secre-
12 tary of the Treasury, prior to audit or settlement by the 13 General Accounting Office, shall make payment, at the time
14 or times fixed by the Director, in accordance with such certi-
15 fication from the funds appropriated to carry out the pur-
16 poses of this Act.

17 "(d) All money paid to a State under this section shall 18 be used solely for the purposes for which it is paid; and 19 any money so paid which is not used for such purposes
20 shall be returned to the Treasury, upon termination of the 21 agreement or the reconversion period, whichever first occurs.

22 "(e) An agreement under this title may require any 23 officer or employee of the State certifying payments of 24 disbursing funds pursuant to the agreement, or otherwise
25 participating in its performance, to give a surety bond to

1 the United States in such amount as the Director may deem 2 necessary, and may provide for the payment of the cost of 3 such bond from appropriations for carrying out the purposes
4 of this Act.

5 "(f) No person designated by the Director, or desig-
6 nated pursuant to an agreement under this title, as a certify-
7 ing officer shall, in the absence of gross negligence or intent
8 to defraud the United States, be liable with respect to the 9 payment of any compensation certified by him under this 10 title.

11 "(g) No disbursing officer shall, in the absence of gross
12 negligence or intent to defraud the United States, be liable
13 with respect to any payment by him under this title if it was 14 based upon a voucher signed by a certifying officer designated 15 as provided in subsection (e).

16 "SEC. 707. The State unemployment compensation
17 agency of each State shall furnish to the Social Security
18 Board, for the use of the Director, such information as the 19 Director may find necessary in carrying out the provisions
20 of this title, and such information shall be deemed reports
21 required by the Social Security Board for the purposes of 22 section 303 (a) (6) of the Social Security Act.

23 "TRANSPORTATION ALLOWANCES

24 "SEC. 708. In order to facilitate the placement of un-
25 employed workers in jobs and to reduce the burden on com-

1 munities and unemployment insurance funds, the United
2 States Employment Service is authorized to provide trans-
3 portation, including transportation of dependents and house-
4 hold effects, for civilian workers who have been employed in 5 activities essential to the war effort, from the place of such
6 employment to any place at which the United States Em-
7 ployment Service certifies there are available suitable job
8 opportunities: Provided, That the cost of such transportation
9 shall not exceed for any worker the amount allowable for 10 civilian employees of the several departments and inde-
11 pendent establishments of the Federal Government under 12 the Standard Government Travel Regulations upon transfer
13 from one official station to another."

14 SEC. 2. (a) Section 700 (a) of the Servicemen's Re-
15 adjustment Act of 1944 is amended by striking out the word
16 "weeks" which occurs after the word "fifty-two" and in-17 serting in lieu thereof the following: "times his allowance
18 for a week of total unemployment,".

19 (b) Section 900 of such Act is amended to read as 20 follows:

21 "SEC. 900. (a) The allowance for a week shall be—22 "(1) $25, plus—
23 "(2) $5 if the claimant has one or more depend-24 ents: less that part of the wages payable to him for 25 such week which is in excess of $3: Provided, That

1 where the allowance is not a multiple of $1, it shall be
2 computed to the next highest multiple of $1; and 3 "(b) As used in this section the term 'dependent' means
4 any dependent as defined in the Servicemen's Dependents
5 Allowance Act of 1942, as amended, who, in the week for 6 which an allowance is claimed, has not received $5 or more
7 either as wages, or as an allowance under this title, or under 8 any Federal or State unemployment or disability compensa-
9 tion law;
10 "(c) The Administrator may find an individual to be
11 a dependent of the claimant if the claimant has certified
12 the facts required by the provisions of this section."
13 (c) This section shall become effective with respect to 14 unemployment which occurs after the first Sunday of the 15 first calendar month which begins after the date of enact-
16 ment of this Act.

S. 2477

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 24 (legislative day, JULY 5), 1946

Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. GEORGE, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. CORDON, Mr. STEWART, and Mr. HILL) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance

A BILL

To authorize the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans, and for other purposes.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3 That section 3 of Public Law Numbered 16, Seventy-eighth
4 Congress, as amended by section 401 of the Servicemen's
5 Readjustment Act of 1944, is amended by inserting at the 6 end thereof a new sentence as follows: "Any such appro-
7 priation shall also be available for use by the Administrator
8 in reimbursing State and local agencies for reasonable ex-

1 penses incurred by them in (1) rendering necessary services
2 in ascertaining the qualifications of industrial establishments
3 for furnishing on-the-job training to veterans under the pro-
4 visions of part VIII of such regulation, and in the supervision
5 of industrial establishments furnishing such training, or (2)
6 furnishing, at the request of the Administrator, any other
7 services or facilities in connection with the administration of 8 programs for training on the job under such provisions, or
9 (3) furnishing, at the request of the Administrator, informa-
10 tion concerning educational opportunities available in schools
11 and colleges."

12 SEC. 2. Paragraph 6 of part VIII of Veterans Regu-
13 lation Numbered 1 (a) as amended, is hereby amended to 14 read as follows:

15 "6. While enrolled in and pursuing a course under this
16 part, such person, upon application to the Administrator,
17 shall be paid a subsistence allowance of $65 per month, if
18 without a dependent or dependents, or $90 per month, if
19 he has a dependent or dependents, including regular holidays
20 and leave not exceeding thirty days in a calendar year.
21 Such person attending a course on a part-time basis, and 22 such person receiving compensation for productive labor
23 whether performed as part of their apprentice or other
24 training on the job at institutions, business, or other estab-
25 lishments, or otherwise, shall be entitled to receive such

1 lesser sums, if any, as subsistence or dependency allowances,
2 as may be determined by the Administrator: Provided, That
3 in no event shall the rate of such allowance plus the com-
4 pensation received exceed $175 per month for a veteran
5 without a dependent or $200 per month if he has a dependent
6 or dependents."

7 SEC. 3. Paragraph 11 of part VIII of Veterans Regu-
8 lation Numbered 1 (a) is hereby amended, to read as
9 follows:

10 "11. (a) As used in this part, the term 'educational or
11 training institutions' shall include all public or private ele-
12 mentary, secondary, and other schools furnishing education
13 for adults, business schools and colleges, scientific and tech-
14 nical institutions, colleges, vocational schools, junior col-
15 leges, teachers colleges, normal schools, professional schools,
16 universities, and other educational institutions, and shall also 17 include buiness or other establishments providing apprentice
18 or other training on the job, including those under the super-
19 vision of an approved college or university or any State
20 department of education, or any State apprenticeship agency
21 or State board of vocational education, or any State appren-
22 ticeship council or the Federal Apprentice Training Service
23 established in accordance with Public Law Numbered 308,
24 Seventy-fifth Congress, or any agency in the executive

1 branch of the Federal Government authorized under other
2 laws to supervise such training.
3 "(b) As used in this part the term 'Other training on 4 the job' shall include courses offered by establishments
5 approved by the appropriate agency of the State or the 6 Administrator whenever such courses of training on the job
7 are furnished in accordance with the following provisions:
8 "1. Any establishment desiring to undertake an on-the-
9 job training program will be required to submit to the appro-
10 priate State approving agency a written application setting
11 forth the course of training for each job for which a veteran
12 is to be trained. The written application covering the train-
13 ing program will include the following:
14 "a. Title and description of the specific job objective
15 for which the veteran is to be trained.
16 "b. Length of the training period.
17 "c. Schedule listing various operations for major kinds
18 of work or tasks to be learned and showing for each, job
19 operations or work, tasks to be performed, and the approxi-
20 mate length of time to be spent on each operation or task.
21 "d. Wage or salary to be paid at the beginning of the 22 training program, at each successive step in the program,
23 and at the completion of training.
24 "e. Entrance wage or salary paid by the establishment

1 to employees already trained in the kind of work for which
2 the veteran is to be trained.
3 "f. Number of hours of supplemental instructions
4 required.
5 "2. The appropriate approving agency of the State or
6 the Administrator may approve the application of the estab-
7 lishment when such establishment is found upon investigation
8 to have met or made provision for meeting the following
9 criteria:
10 "a. The training content of the program is adequate to 11 qualify the veteran for appointment to the job for which he 12 is to be trained.
13 "b. There is reasonable certainty that the job for which 14 the veteran is to be trained will be available to him at the end
15 of the training period.
16 "c. The job is one in which progression and appointment
17 to the next higher classification are based upon skills learned
18 through organized training on the job and not on such factors
19 as length of service and normal turn-over.
20 "d. The wages to be paid the veteran for each successive 21 period of training are not less than those customarily paid in 22 the establishment and the community to a learner in the same
23 job and who is not a veteran and are in conformity with 24 State and Federal laws and applicable bargaining agreements.

1 "e. The job customarily requires a period of training of 2 not less than three months and not more than two years of 3 full-time training.

4 "f. The length of the training period is no longer than 5 that customarily required by the establishment and other
6 establishments in the community to provide the trainee
7 with the required skills, arrange for the acquiring of job
8 knowledge, technical information, and other facts which 9 the trainee will need to learn in order to become competent
10 on the job for which he is being trained.

11 "g. Provision is made for related instruction for the 12 individual veteran who may need it.

13 "h. There is in the establishment adequate space, equip-
14 ment, instructional material, and instructor personnel to pro-
15 vide satisfactory training on the job.

16 "i. Adequate records are kept to show the progress made
17 by the veteran toward his job objective and a periodic report
18 showing the conduct and progress made in the course of 19 training on the job will be provided for the Veterans' Admin-
20 istration.

21 "j. Appropriate credit is given the veteran for previous 22 job experience, whether in the military service or elsewhere,
23 his beginning wage adjusted to the level to which such credit
24 advances him and his training period shortened accordingly.
25 No course of training will be considered bona fide if given

1 to a veteran who is already qualified by training and experi-
2 ence for the job objective.

3 "k. A copy of the training program as approved by the
4 State agency is provided to the veteran and to the Veterans'
5 Administration by the employer.

6 "l. Upon completion of the training the veteran is given
7 a certificate by the employer indicating the length and type
8 of training provided and that the veteran has completed the 9 course of training on the job satisfactorily.

10 "3. The Veterans' Administration is not authorized to 11 award the benefits under this part, if it is found by the 12 Administrator that the course of apprentice training or other
13 training on the job fails to meet the requirements of this 14 paragraph."

79TH CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 2477

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JULY 30, 1946

Referred to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation

AN ACT

To authorize the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3 of Public Law Numbered 16, Seventy-eighth Congress, as amended by section 401 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, is amended by inserting at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "Any such appropriation shall also be available for use by the Administrator in reimbursing State and local agencies for reasonable expenses incurred by them in (1) rendering necessary services

1 in ascertaining the qualifications of industrial establishments
2 for furnishing on-the-job training to veterans under the pro-
3 visions of part VIII of such regulation, and in the supervision
4 of industrial establishments furnishing such training, or (2)
5 furnishing, at the request of the Administrator, any other
6 services or facilities in connection with the administration of 7 programs for training on the job under such provisions, or
8 (3) furnishing, at the request of the Administrator, informa-
9 tion concerning educational opportunities available in schools
10 and colleges."

11 SEC. 2. Paragraph 6 of part VIII of Veterans Regu-
12 lation Numbered 1 (a) as amended, is hereby amended to 13 read as follows:

14 "6. While enrolled in and pursuing a course under this
15 part, such person, upon application to the Administrator,
16 shall be paid a subsistence allowance of $65 per month, if
17 without a dependent or dependents, or $90 per month, if
18 he has a dependent or dependents, including regular holidays
19 and leave not exceeding thirty days in a calendar year.
20 Such person attending a course on a part-time basis, and
21 such person receiving compensation for productive labor
22 whether performed as part of their apprentice or other
23 training on the job at institutions, business, or other estab-
24 lishments, or otherwise, shall be entitled to receive such
25 lesser sums, if any, as subsistence or dependency allowances,

1 as may be determined by the Administrator: Provided, That
2 in no event shall the rate of such allowance plus the com-
3 pensation received exceed $175 per month for a veteran
4 without a dependent or $200 per month if he has a dependent
5 or dependents."

6 SEC. 3. Paragraphs 11 of part VIII of Veterans Regu-
7 lation Numbered 1 (a) is hereby amended, to read as
8 follows:

9 "11. (a) As used in this part, the term 'educational or
10 training institutions' shall include all public or private ele-
11 mentary, secondary, and other schools furnishing education
12 for adults, business schools and colleges, scientific and tech-
13 nical institutions, colleges, vocational schools, junior col-
14 leges, teachers colleges, normal schools, professional schools,
15 universities, and other educational institutions, and shall also 16 include business or other establishments providing apprentice
17 or other training on the job, including those under the super-
18 vision of an approved college or university or any State
19 department of education, or any State apprenticeship agency
20 or State board of vocational education, or any State appren-
21 ticeship council or the Federal Apprentice Training Service
22 established in accordance with Public Law Numbered 308,
23 Seventy-fifth Congress, or any agency in the executive
24 branch of the Federal Government authorized under other
25 laws to supervise such training.

1 "(b) As used in this part the term 'Other training on
2 the job' shall include courses offered by establishments ap-
3 proved by the appropriate agency of the State or the Ad-
4 ministrator whenever such courses of training on the job
5 are furnished in accordance with the following provisions:
6 "1. Any establishment desiring to undertake an on-the-
7 job training program will be required to submit to the appro-
8 priate State approving agency a written application setting
9 forth the course of training for each job for which a veteran
10 is to be trained. The written application covering the train-
11 ing program will include the following:
12 "a. Title and description of the specific job objective
13 for which the veteran is to be trained.
14 "b. Length of the training period.
15 "c. Schedule listing various operations for major kinds
16 of work or tasks to be learned and showing for each, job
17 operations or work, tasks to be performed, and the approxi-
18 mate length of time to be spent on each operation or task.
19 "d. Wage or salary to be paid at the beginning of the 20 training program, at each successive step in the program,
21 and at the completion of training.
22 "e. Entrance wage or salary paid by the establishment
23 to employees already trained in the kind of work for which
24 the veteran is to be trained.

1 "f. Number of hours of supplemental instructions
2 required.
3 "2. The appropriate approving agency of the State or
4 the Administrator may approve the application of the estab-
5 lishment when such establishment is found upon investigation
6 to have met or made provision for meeting the following
7 criteria:
8 "a. The training content of the program is adequate to 9 qualify the veteran for appointment to the job for which he
10 is to be trained.
11 "b. There is reasonable certainty that the job for which 12 the veteran is to be trained will be available to him at the end
13 of the training period.

19 job experience, whether in the military service or elsewhere,
20 his beginning wage adjusted to the level to which such credit
21 advances him and his training period shortened accordingly.
22 No course of training will be considered bona fide if given
23 to a veteran who is already qualified by training and experi-
24 ence for the job objective.

25 "k. A copy of the training program as approved by the

1 State agency is provided to the veteran and to the Veterans'
2 Administration by the employer.
3 "1. Upon completion of the training the veteran is given
4 a certificate by the employer indicating the length and type
5 of training provided and that the veteran has completed the
6 course of training on the job satisfactorily.
7 "3. The Veterans' Administration is not authorized to
8 award the benefits under this part, if it is found by the 9 Administrator that the course of apprentice training or other
10 training on the job fails to meet the requirements of this
11 paragraph."

S. 2477

AN ACT

To authorize the Veterans' Administration to reimburse State and local agencies for expenses incurred in rendering services in connection with the administration of certain training programs for veterans, and for other purposes.

JULY 30, 1946

Referred to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation

Legislation

DIGEST OF WAGNER-MURRAY-DINGELL BILL FOR SOCIAL SECURITY (S. 1050 and HR-2393)

A Unified System

The bill provides for a unified system of social insurance financed by contributions from employers and workers, and including the following benefits:

1. Old age retirement and survivors' insurance; extended disability insurance; lump sum death benefits;
2. Unemployment and temporary disability insurance; maternity benefits;
3. Prepaid personal health service insurance.

Old Age and Survivors' Insurance

The present system would be liberalized and extended in the following ways:

1. Approximately 15,000,000 additional persons not now covered would be added, including owners of small businesses, self-employed, professional persons and farmers, agricultural workers, domestic servants, employees of non-profit institutions. (Title II Part F, Sec. 275 (b) (c) (d) (e) (f).) Employees of state and local governmental units who are not under existing pension systems may be covered by voluntary compacts between these units and the Social Security Board. (Title II Part F, Sec. 276)
2. Benefits are increased by revising the calculation of average wage and adjusting the benefit formula, depending on the amount of the insured person's wages. The minimum monthly benefit is increased from $10 to $20 for a single worker, and to $30 for a worker and his wife; the maximum monthly benefit is increased from $85 to $120. (Title II Part C, Sec. 226 and Sec. 227)
3. Women are eligible to receive benefits at age 60 instead of 65. (A widow with dependent children would receive benefits regardless of her age, as heretofore.) (Title II Part C, Sec. 225 (a) (1) (b) (e).)
4. The provisions for determining insured status are adjusted to overcome the handicap of persons not previously in covered employment, and to protect the insured status of persons employed in government arsenals or other war work not covered by social insurance.
5. The maximum amount an individual may receive in wages and still retain insurance benefit is increased from $15 to $25 per month. (Title II Part C, Sec. 227 (c) (1).)

Extended Disability Insurance

1. Old age and survivors' insurance system is broadened to include monthly cash benefits to an insured worker who is totally disabled for six months or more before he reaches the retirement age. These benefits would be equal to those paid under old age insurance and would include additional payments for wife, children or dependent parents. (Title II Part C, Sec. 225 (a) (2) (3).)
2. Benefits are provided for disabled husband 65 years and over, of a woman entitled to primary benefit, and to the disabled widower of 65 and over of a woman who died fully insured. (Title II Part C, Sec. 225 (c) (f).)

Table 1.—Illustrative monthly old-age retirement or extended disability benefits under the bill.

Lump Sum Death Benefit

A lump sum death benefit payment to widow or widower of an insured worker is provided if he or she was living with the insured worker at the time of death; the payment to be equal to six times the primary benefit. (Title II Part C, Sec. 225 (i).)

Unemployment Insurance

A new federal unemployment insurance system to be administered by the Social Security Board has the following provisions:

1. Weekly benefits are payable from $5 to $20 per week for a single person, depending on wages, plus additional amounts for workers with dependents; the maximum is $30 per week. (Title II Part B, Sec. 220 (b).)
2. Benefits are payable after a one-week waiting period for 26 weeks of unemployment. Extended benefits to total a maximum of 52 weeks may be provided if funds are sufficient. Attendance at a training course may be made a condition for receiving such benefits. (Title II Part B, Sec. 220 (a), Sec. 221.)
3. Coverage is extended to agricultural workers, domestic servants, seamen, employees of non-profit institutions, and employees of employers of one or more. (Title II Part F, Sec. 275 (b).) Persons eligible for these benefits must register and report regularly for work at the public employment office. Failure to report, or to accept suitable work when offered, is one of the grounds for disqualification.

(Title II Part B, Sec. 221 (a) (2) (3) Sec. 222 (a) (3).)

Temporary Disability and Maternity Benefits

1. Temporarily disabled workers are eligible for benefits equal in amount to unemployment benefits;
2. Benefits are payable for 12 weeks of maternity leave to married women workers in addition to the maximum duration for temporary disability and unemployment benefits. Title II Part B, Sec. 220 (c) Sec. 221 (b).)

Prepaid Personal Health Service Insurance

All persons covered under old age and survivors' insurance, and their dependents, will be covered by this insurance. The Surgeon-General will administer the technical and professional aspects of the program, which includes the following services:

1. Services of the physician, with the right to choose any doctor among those in the community who have voluntarily agreed to go into the system;
2. On the doctor's advice, services of a specialist or consultant, and laboratory services (including X-Rays, appliances, eye glasses); certain dental and home nursing services, and necessary hospital care;
3. Hospital care would be limited to 60 days a year, with a possible maximum of 120 days if the insurance fund could afford it.
4. Doctors are left free to enter or remain out of the system, to accept or reject patients who may wish to select them, and every qualified hospital is eligible to participate.
5. Provisions are included to insure that medical benefits will be of high quality, will promote personal relations between doctor and patients, will emphasize prevention of disease, and will be adapted to the needs of the community in both rural and urban areas. (Title II Part A, Secs. 201 to 216 (inclusive).)

Other Health Provisions

The health service insurance system would be strengthened by the following public health provisions:

1. A 10-year program for the construction and improvement of hospitals and health centers is to be provided through federal loans and grants-in-aid to the States. This will be administered by the Surgeon-General of the Public Health Service. (Title VI Part B, Secs. 611 to 615 (inclusive).)
2. Increased federal grants for public health are provided; also to be administered by the Public Health Service. (Sec. 314 (a) to (k) (inclusive).)
3. Federal grants for maternal and child welfare and health under Title V of the Social Security Act would be increased. This would be administered by the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor. (Sec. 501, 502, 511, 512, 521, 522, 531-536 (inclusive).)

Public Assistance

A comprehensive public assistance program of federal grants to the States for assistance to needy persons is set up, including the following provisions:

1. Variable grants to the States ranging from 50% to 75% of the total expended, depending upon the State's per capita income: (Title XIII Sec. 1306)
2. Federal sharing of State costs, for money payments to any needy individual without any maximum limitation on such payments. (Title XIII, Secs. 1303 and 1305.)
3. Federal sharing of costs to the States for medical services; such services as may assist in making needy individuals self-supporting, and payments for foster children. (Title XIII Sec. 1303 (a), Sec. 1305)
4. Provision for permitting the States to exempt any amount up to $20 per month from the income of an individual applying for assistance. (Title XIII Sec. 1302 (a) (8).)
5. States may retain their present systems by which persons in the categories of needy aged, dependent children, and the blind receive public assistance; or they may adopt a plan by which all needy individuals irrespective of age or special disability may receive assistance. In either case federal matching of funds is available. (Title XIII Sec. 1302 (a) (9).)

Social Security Rights of the Armed Forces

The social security rights of all persons in the armed forces would be protected and extended by giving them "wage credits" of $160 per month for the entire period of their military service without deductions from their pay. This cost would be borne by the federal government out of general revenue. (Title II Part E, Secs. 260 & 261, 285.)

Financial Basis

1. The entire program of social insurance would be financed by equal contributions from employees and employers—4% of all wages received or paid up to the first $3,600 a year. (Title II Part G, Secs. 280 & 281)
2. Self-employed persons would pay a 5% contribution; (Title II Part G, Sec. 282)
3. Employing State and local governmental units which come under the system by voluntary compact would pay a 2½% contribution, and their employees the same amount. (Title II Part G, Secs. 283 & 284)
4. All funds are to be deposited in a Social Security trust fund, managed by a board of trustees. (Title II Part D, Sec. 250)
5. Provision is made for a government contribution to the social insurance system in an amount and at such times as the Congress may determine, presumably at such time as the contributions become insufficient to meet current disbursements. (Title II Part D, Sec. 250 (a).)

Public Employment Offices

A permanent national system of public employment offices would be established to be administered by the Social Security Board. The present Employment Service would be transferred six months after the end of the war from the War Manpower Commission to the new U. S. Employment Service. The Wagner-Peyser Act would be repealed. (Sec. 7 (a) to (h) inclusive)

Advisory Council

A national Social Security Advisory Council is established, representing employers, employees, and the general public, to formulate policies on legislation and administration, and to investigate and make recommendations on coverage, adequacy of benefits, financing, and on methods of providing incentives to beneficiaries for rehabilitation and employment. (Title II Part H, Sec. 296).)

The Need for S. 1274, Providing for Emergency Unemployment Compensation

Message From President Truman—Coverage of Unemployment Compensation During Postwar Transition Period

Reconversion Unemployment Benefits Provided by S. 1274, Sponsored by Senators Kilgore, Murray, Wagner, Guffey, Thomas, and Pepper

REMARKS

HON. HARLEY M. KILGORE

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

August 1, 1945

The Need for S. 1274, Providing for Emergency Unemployment Compensation

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, as of this date, Congress has defaulted in its obligation to provide for the human aspects of reconversion. As far back as May 1944 Senate leaders of both parties firmly promised to enact legislation directed to this problem. Despite this declaration, nothing has since been enacted for the benefit of the mass of the people and returning veterans who face the reconversion from war to peace. By contrast, the Congress has passed all the measures demanded by business. The revenue acts and in particular the Tax Adjustment Act of 1945 guarantee corporations vast postwar tax refunds at the same time that they have permitted industry to build up tremendous reserves in themselves sufficient to weather reconversion disturbances. Amortization of plants has been accelerated, permitting industry to pay out of war profits the full cost of new plant facilities before payment of taxes. A liberal Contract Settlement Act provides for speedy termination of war contracts and makes available additional funds to companies engaged in war production. And Congress has passed laws dealing with the disposition of surplus property and with the removal of Government property from the plants of private contractors.

While steps safeguarding the profits of industry are necessary to a smooth reconversion to peace, domestic prosperity cannot be attained and world peace secured unless Congress gives equal attention to finding and creating employment for war veterans and released war workers and to maintaining the purchasing power of the Nation at the high levels needed for a full production-full employment economy. With this in mind, Senators MURRAY, WAGNER, GUFFEY, THOMAS, PEPPER, and I have introduced an emergency unemployment compensation bill which will protect the living standards of veterans and war workers and protect the national purchasing power from impairment during the temporary dislocations of the reconversion period. Such an emergency measure is necessary because of the inadequacies of the existing system of unemployment compensation both as to its coverage and its rates of payment.

S. 1274 seeks to remedy these deficiencies by amending the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act for 1944 to provide supplementary unemployment compensation payable under State laws, as requested by President Truman in his message to Congress of May 28, 1945.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS OF EMERGENCY RECONVERSION UNEMPLOYMENT BILL

In detail, the bill provides:

First. Supplementation, out of Federal funds, of benefits payable to workers now covered under State unemployment compensation laws so that every eligible unemployed worker will be entitled to 26 weeks of benefits, in an amount, based on past wages, up to a ceiling of $25. In States which provide that an individual's unemployment benefit is computed at one-half of wages, only persons earning $50 per week or more would be eligible to receive the $25 ceiling payment. A $40 per week worker would receive only $20; a $30 per week worker would still receive only $15 in benefits.

Second. Financing similar benefits to Federal workers, maritime workers, agricultural processing workers, and workers employed by small firms who are not now covered by State laws.

Third. Payment of the supplementary benefits outlined under (1) and (2) by the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion, if a State does not elect to do so.

Fourth. Supplementation out of Federal funds, to workers not now covered under State laws, and to liberalize payments up to two-thirds of wages—but not more than $25—if a State so elects.

Fifth. Payment of traveling allowances to workers referred to employment in another city by the United States Employment Service.

Sixth. Amendment of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944—the GI bill of rights—so that every eligible unemployed serviceman will be entitled to 52 weeks of benefits at $25 per week for a single person and $30 per week for a person with dependents. Under the existing law, servicemen are entitled to $20 per week irrespective of whether they have dependents or not, and are only entitled to 52 weeks of benefits if they have been in the armed forces 9½ months or more. Thus under the present law a serviceman who is discharged after 90 days of service is entitled not to 52 weeks if unemployed that long, but to only 24 weeks of benefits. The amendment provided by this bill would enable every serviceman with 90 days of service to be entitled to the full 52 weeks of benefits if he remained unemployed that long.

The life of the bill, except for the amendment to the GI bill of rights, runs only until June 30, 1947, the date on which the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 expires.

I should like to make clear what the bill does not do. It does not give $25 every Thursday to everyone. An applicant must be ready, able, and willing to work as now required under State law, and he must have earned wages high enough so that the percentage rate yields at least this figure. The bill does not federalize the unemployment compensation system. It leaves the administration of unemployment compensation in the hands of the States and allows them to administer the supplementary benefits if they so choose. On an emergency basis it expands the present system, whose principles remain unchanged, in order to meet pressing reconversion problems. Finally the bill does not take the place of permanent amendments to the unemployment compensation system which are now being studied by the Congress.

A typical example of the effect of enactment into law of S. 1274 is found in my own State of West Virginia. The maximum weekly benefit amount in West Virginia is now $20 based on annual earnings of $1,800 or more. The average benefit amount paid for total unemployment is currently about $15. S. 1274 would raise the maximum to $25 for workers with annual earnings of $2,700 or more while the average would go up to about $20. Workers with annual earnings of $300 or more are eligible for benefits in West Virginia for duration up to 21 weeks. S. 1274 would give every eligible worker the right to five more weeks of benefits if he remained unemployed that long.

About 10,000 Federal workers in West Virginia who now have no protection against unemployment would be covered as well as about 50,000 workers in firms with less than eight workers who are now excluded but who could be protected under the optional agreements provisions of S. 1274.

In addition, returning war veterans would be entitled for a week of total unemployment to $25 if single and $30 if they had dependents. This compares with a weekly amount of $20 now provided by law.

Those who oppose emergency unemployment compensation legislation take the position that present State laws provide adequate protection to workers during the reconversion period. An analysis of the State laws, however, shows that, although they have been adjusted from time to time, on the whole they have not kept pace with war conditions. Commenting on the supposed adequacy of existing State laws an outstanding labor authority on social insurance stated:

> The inadequacy of the State unemployment insurance programs—especially in light of the needs of postwar readjustment—is revealed in the small benefit payments being made. During the first quarter of 1945 there were two States where the weekly benefits averaged less than $10. One of these was in the North and one in the South. In 33 States the benefits averaged less than $15 per week and in only 6 did they average above $18 per week. In no State did they average as high as $20 per week. Nor was the average weekly benefit in any single State equal to 50 percent of the average weekly earnings of covered employees, whereas 60 percent of previous earnings is the usually accepted standard for sound unemployment insurance payments. (NELSON H. CRUIKSHANK, American Federationist, August 1945.)

That this opinion is not confined to labor is evidenced by the following statement by the editors of Business Week on April 28, 1945:

> At any continuous level of unemployment, drains on reserve funds will decline during the first few years as workers exhaust benefits. So, with 6,000,000 unemployed, present aggregate reserves of over $6,000,000,000 would last almost indefinitely. As many as 9,000,000 unemployed year after year would drain reserve funds in 10 years or a little less. But, as we said 5 years ago, "It was never contemplated that funds would be built up to take care of workers during a severe depression. At best unemployment insurance was looked upon as a stopgap—a temporary economic alleviator."
> And as a stopgap the system today hardly measures up, for, with the average beneficiary receiving little more than one-third or so of his former weekly wages, and with, at most, two-thirds of the eligibles on the rolls at any one time, less than 25 percent of the income of laid-off insured workers would be maintained.

Message From President Truman—Coverage of Unemployment Compensation During Postwar Transition Period

May 28, 1945

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The Congress and the executive branch of the Government have already moved to prepare the country for the difficult economic adjustments which the Nation will face during the transition from war to peace.

First. The Congress has created the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion to coordinate the reconversion activities of all Federal agencies, and that Office has established basic reconversion policies.

Second. Specific laws have been enacted by the Congress setting forth the policies and providing the administrative machinery for contract termination, plant clearance, financial aid to business, and the disposition of surplus property.

Third. Our military and civilian agencies have prepared themselves to expedite industrial reconversion and reemployment.

Fourth. As part of an over-all program for returning veterans the GI bill of rights provides "readjustment allowances," weekly cash benefits to veterans until they are able to obtain jobs.

Fifth. Congress has permitted business to carry back postwar losses against excess-profits-tax payments during the reconversion period.

Sixth. Congress has established support prices for agricultural products so that farmers will be protected against a postwar collapse of income.

There remains, however, a major gap in our reconversion program: the lack of adequate benefits for workers temporarily unemployed during the transition from war to peace. I urge the Congress to close this gap.

I am confident that, with appropriate measures, we can avoid large-scale and lengthy unemployment during the transition period. However, some temporary unemployment is unavoidable, particularly when total demobilization becomes possible. Even if reconversion proceeds rapidly, no amount of planning can make jobs immediately available for all displaced personnel. We must provide maximum security to those who have given so fully of themselves on the fighting and production fronts. The transition from war to peace is part and parcel of the war and we cannot shirk our obligation to those temporarily unemployed through no fault of their own.

To produce what is needed for the Pacific war, we must appeal to the workers to accept and remain in jobs which they ultimately must lose when munitions production ceases. The Government has thus incurred a moral obligation to these workers and to those who have stuck faithfully to their posts in the past.

To fulfill this obligation, we must rely principally upon our existing system of unemployment insurance. However, the existing State laws embrace three major defects:

First. Only about 30,000,000 of our 43,000,000 nonagricultural workers are protected by unemployment insurance. The absence of protection for Federal Government employees—in navy yards, arsenals, and Government offices—is particularly inequitable, since these workers are subject to risks of unemployment similar to the risks of those who work for private employers. Lack of protection for employees of small establishments and for maritime workers also constitutes a serious shortcoming in the present programs.

Second. The weekly benefit payments provided under many of the State laws are inadequate to maintain purchasing power and to provide a reasonable measure of economic security for the workers. Most States fix a maximum rate of $15 to $18 a week. This is clearly inadequate to protect unemployed workers against ruthless cuts in living standards, particularly if they have families.

Third. The length of time for which benefits are paid is too short. In nearly one-third of the States, no worker can receive more than 16 weeks of benefits in any year, and many workers do not qualify even for this length of time.

Therefore, I recommend specifically that Congress take emergency action to widen the coverage of unemployment compensation and to increase the amount and duration of benefits, at least for the duration of the present emergency period of reconversion. Basically this can be accomplished only by amending the Social Security Act so as to induce State laws to provide more adequately for anyone who is unemployed.

To be sure, the States have large sums in the unemployment trust fund. But since changes of State laws cannot be effected overnight, I propose that the Congress, during this emergency period, extend the coverage of unemployment compensation to include Federal employees, maritime workers, and other workers not now insured. Moreover, I see no feasible way to make benefits payable to such workers, unless they are financed entirely by the Federal Government during the present emergency. The benefits should appropriately be administered by the States.

I also recommend that Congress provide, through supplementary Federal emergency benefit payments, minimum standards for the weekly rate and duration of unemployment benefits. Every eligible worker should be entitled to 26 weeks of benefits in any one year, if his unemployment continues that long. The maximum payment, at least for the worker who has dependents, should be raised from present levels to not less than $25 per week. In this connection, Congress will no doubt wish to reexamine the readjustment allowance provisions of the GI bill of rights. All payments should be made through the existing unemployment compensation machinery of the several States, just as payments to veterans are now made.

These provisions are essential for the orderly reconversion of our wartime economy to peacetime production. They are badly needed for the duration of the reconversion emergency.

Decent unemployment benefits would serve as a bulwark against postwar deflation. By assuring workers of a definite income for a definite period of time, Congress will help materially to prevent a sharp decline in consumer expenditures which might otherwise result in a downward spiral of consumption and production. Adequate unemployment insurance is an indispensable form of prosperity insurance.

Congress will soon deal with the broader question of extending, expanding, and improving our social-security program, of which unemployment insurance is a part. Although such improvement is fundamental, congressional deliberations on the broad issues will take time. On the specific issue of unemployment benefits, we may not have time available. We are already entering the first phase of reconversion; we must be prepared immediately for the far larger problems of manpower displacement which will come with the end of the war in the Pacific.

I earnestly hope, therefore, that the appropriate committees of Congress will undertake immediate consideration of the emergency problem.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 28, 1945.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Reconversion Unemployment Benefits Provided by S. 1274, Sponsored by Senators Kilgore, Murray, Wagner, Guffey, Thomas, and Pepper

July 17, 1945

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to carry out President Truman's request made in his special message to Congress on May 28 last for supplementary unemployment benefits during the reconversion period.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, in order not to interfere with the debate now in progress, I have reduced to writing a statement and summary respecting the bill which I have just introduced. I ask that the statement and summary be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement and summary were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The bill which we are introducing was worked out after consultation with experts on the subject in both the legislative and executive branches and with representatives or organized labor. It represents a sincere attempt to present a simple and straightforward bill to carry out President Truman's request without in any way impairing or interfering with the present State unemployment compensation laws. The bill does not require any State to administer the supplementary Federal benefits if it does not voluntarily elect to do so. The entire bill is voluntary insofar as the States are concerned.

All the bill attempts to do is to enable each State to bring its unemployment insurance benefits up to the standard outlined by President Truman, namely, a duration of 26 weeks of benefits and a maximum benefit of $25 per week, and to cover Federal and maritime employees, by making an agreement to do so with the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion. If any State does not voluntarily agree to supplement its State benefits in this way, the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion is authorized to make such supplementary payments.

I want to make it clear at the outset that the bill does not provide for paying each unemployed person a uniform amount of $25 per week. The bill specifically provides that each individual will receive the same percentage of his wages now provided by the State law except that if this amount is limited by an arbitrary ceiling of $15 or $20, the ceiling will be increased so that a maximum payment of $25 can be paid. Thus, in a State like Tennessee which pays benefits of approximately one-half of an individual's previous wage, at the present a person earning $30 or more in wages in a week can only get $15 per week in benefits. Under the bill, not a single cent more would be paid to persons earning less than $30 per week in wages. But persons now earning $40 per week would get $20 in benefits instead of the present $15. Persons earning $50 or more would get $25 in benefits. In other words, benefits would still be related to the person's previous wages and would not be modified in any respect except to give recognition to the fact that many persons now receive low benefits solely because of the low ceilings on the benefits which can be paid.

Several illustrations of how this would work out are contained in a summary of the bill which I have had prepared and I ask unanimous consent that it be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The bill also provides that if a State wishes to cover additional employees who are not now covered by State law, a State may make an agreement to do so with the Director and receive from the Federal Government the necessary funds for this purpose. In this way States may elect to cover employees in small firms, agricultural employees, domestic-service employees, employees in nonprofit institutions, or State employees—if the State wishes. A State may elect to cover all or any part of these groups which are now unprotected.

In addition, a State is given the option of liberalizing its benefit payments below the $25 ceiling. However, the bill specifically provides that no individual may receive benefits of more than two thirds of his wages—and in no case above $25.

We are glad to note that the Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, the Honorable ROBERT L. DOUGHTON of North Carolina, introduced a substantially similar bill in the House on Monday of last week. There are a few differences in the two bills which I feel sure can be ironed out in the hearings held by the respective Houses or in conference. The present bill differs from the bill introduced in the House by providing increased benefits for returning veterans, which the House bill does not include; second, in starting payments under the Act without waiting for mass unemployment to descend upon the Nation; third, in covering Federal and maritime employees under the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act; fourth, in including processing workers; and finally, in providing travel allowances to displaced workers. In practically every other respect, we have sought to conform the Senate bill to the House bill. We trust that, with unemployment already appearing in substantial amounts in many sections and with the grave danger of large-scale, Nation-wide unemployment hanging over our heads, the two Houses of Congress will move speedily in considering these bills.

Mr. President, the sponsors of this bill do not claim that the bill we have introduced is a perfect bill. Many technical problems were encountered in the drafting of the bill for which completely satisfactory solutions could not be found because of the complexity of the State unemployment compensation laws. Nor does the bill attempt to correct all the many defects which the sponsors believe exist in the present State unemployment compensation laws such as the harsh and restrictive disqualification provisions, and the inevitable inequities which exist under a State-by-State system. We have tried to draft a bill which would take care of the most important immediate problems, leaving it to Congress to consider basic changes in the Social Security Act at a later date.

The reconversion period will involve human readjustment on a scale beyond anything in our Nation's previous history. About 9,000,000 workers who were employed in munitions industries on VE-day and about 9,000,000 veterans released from the armed forces must move from wartime activities to civilian pursuits. This transfer is already under way; it will be vastly greater after Japan's defeat.

Some of the released workers—especially women—will leave the labor force. Others will be able to stay on their present job, as their employers begin producing the same products for civilian rather than military use. The great majority, however, must find new jobs. Even if reconversion is handled perfectly, jobs cannot be provided overnight for every released worker and veteran. It is estimated by the War Manpower Commission that unemployment will reach a level of 7,500,000 during the year after VJ-day. This estimate is based on optimistic assumptions regarding the withdrawal of women and older workers from the labor force, and it is assumed that civilian industries will reach a level of employment higher than in any prewar year. Under these optimistic assumptions, much of the unemployment will be temporary, but for millions of families an adequate unemployment compensation program will be the only protection against sharp cuts in living standards.

In spite of increases which have been made in many States, the maximum weekly benefit rate in most States provides less real purchasing power today than it did when benefits first began in 1938. The cost of living index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in May 1945, was 28 percent above the 1935–39 average. The President's Committee on the Cost of Living, in its report last November, found that this index has a downward bias of 3 to 4 points—which means that the actual cost of living now is about one-third higher than in prewar years. For the family dependent on unemployment benefits, this does not tell the whole story. The prices of food and clothing, which represent a larger proportional part of the expenditures of such family have risen 30 and 44 percent respectively. It is for this reason that we feel that the maximum compensation must be raised to $25 if we are to even keep in line with the 1938 standards.

We urge that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance hold hearings on the proposal and obtain the suggestions of all of the various interested groups. Our hope is that in this way a noncontroversial measure can be enacted which will carry out the President's request quickly and effectively.

STATES MAY VOLUNTARILY CHOOSE TO ADMINISTER BENEFITS

The bill amends the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 (Public Law 458) by adding a new title VII to that law authorizing the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion to enter into voluntary agreements with State unemployment compensation agencies whereby the States, if they so desire, agree to administer the supplementary benefits provided under the legislation and the Federal Government agrees to pay the cost of the supplementary benefits. Section 702 (a) and (b)). The bill also provides that if a State wishes to go beyond these minimum requirements, it may do so with respect to the amount of benefits under the maximum of $25 and with respect to coverage (Section 702 (c)). A State is given the option of liberalizing its benefit payments provided that no individual receives benefits of more than two-thirds of his wages and in no case above $25. A State may, if it wishes, liberalize its entire benefit formula, add dependent benefits, or in any other way adjust its benefits up to this ceiling. Moreover, if a State wishes it may extend coverage to any other groups not now covered under State law such as agricultural labor, domestic service, employees in nonprofit institutions, or State employees. A State may elect to cover all or any part of these groups which are now unprotected.

If the States do not wish to participate in an agreement to supplement their laws so as to provide 26 weeks of benefits up to a maximum of $25 per week and to extend coverage to Federal or maritime employees the Federal Government will do so. (Section 703.)

MAXIMUM WEEKLY BENEFIT, DURATION OF BENEFITS, AND COVERAGE

To the extent that the States wish to enter into any voluntary agreement, the agreements between the States and the Director must provide for a maximum payment of $25 for 26 weeks and for the coverage of Federal and maritime employees. (Section 702.)

1. Duration of benefits: Section 702 (b) (2) provides for payment of benefits for 26 weeks' uniform duration to any eligible worker entitled to benefits under the State law. This provision leaves unchanged the verying qualifying earnings requirements of the different State laws but provides that every claimant who meets the States' qualifying earnings requirements shall receive benefits to which he is entitled under the State law supplemented so that he will not exhaust his benefits until he has been paid an amount of benefits equivalent to benefits for 26 weeks of total unemployment within a benefit year.

2. Maximum benefit: Section 702 (b) (1) provides that the raising of the maximum to $25 must be accomplished by extending the relationship between benefits and wages now included in State unemployment compensation laws. For example, in those States using a percentage of high quarterly wages to compute the weekly benefit rate, the maximum provided will merely be raised to $25 and the same percentage used in computing the amounts above the existing maximum; in those States using a table in their law to compute benefit rates, the table will be extended by a continuation of the relationship between wages and benefits already incorporated to a ceiling of $25.

The following table illustrates the total amount which would be paid under the bill to an unemployed person in a particular State which now provides benefits of one-half of wages up to a ceiling of $15. No change would be made in the amount of benefits paid to individuals below the maximum paid by the State.

TABLE 1.—Illustrative unemployment benefits under the bill in a State which at the present time provides benefits of 50 percent of wages up to a maximum of $15 per week

Average wage of unemployed individual	Total benefit (State plus Federal)	Amount paid by State	Amount paid by Federal Government
$20	$10	$10	$0
$30	15	15	0
$40	20	15	5
$50	25	15	10
$60 or more	25	15	10

For a State which now pays 60 percent of wages up to a ceiling of $20, the bill would work out as shown in the following table:

TABLE 2.—Illustrative unemployment benefits under the bill in a State which at the present time provides benefits of 60 percent of wages up to a maximum of $20 per week

Average wage of unemployed individual	Total benefit (State plus Federal)	Amount paid by State	Amount paid by Federal Government
$20	$12	$12	$0
$30	18	18	0
$40	24	20	4
$50	25	20	5
$60 or more	25	20	5

3. Coverage: Section 702 (b) (3) provides for paying unemployment compensation to Federal and maritime employees, as if their services were included under the unemployment compensation law of the District of Columbia, and to agricultural processing employees. At the present time there are about 4,000,000 persons employed in these two excluded groups. The benefits payable to Federal and maritime employees will be the same as those payable to other workers covered under the District of Columbia law supplemented on the same terms as to the maximum amount and duration of benefits.

FEDERAL PAYMENTS IF STATES DO NOT ELECT TO SUPPLEMENT

If, however, a State does not voluntarily elect to supplement its State law to provide 26 weeks of benefits up to a maximum of $25 and to extend coverage to Federal or maritime employees, the Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion is given the responsibility of making such payments as if the State had done so.

SUPPLEMENTATION UP TO TWO-THIRDS OF WAGES

If a State voluntarily elects under section 702 (c) to supplement its State law beyond the minimum requirements specified in section 702 (b), it may not pay benefits of more than two-thirds of an individual's wages.

For a State which elects to pay up to two-thirds of wages up to a ceiling of $25 per week, the bill would work out as shown in the following table:

TABLE 3.—Illustrative unemployment benefits under the bill in a State which at the present time provides benefits of 50 percent of wages up to a maximum of $15 per week and which under the bill increases its payments to 66⅔ percent of wages up to a maximum of $25 per week

Average wage of unemployed individual	Total benefit (State plus Federal	Amount paid by State	Amount paid by Federal Government
$10	$6.66	$5	$1.66
$20	13.33	10	3.33
$30	20.00	15	5.00
$40	25.00	15	10.00
$50	25.00	15	10.00
$60 or more	25.00	15	10.00

AMENDMENT OF TAX ACT TO COVER SMALL FIRMS

Section 3 of the bill also provides for amendment of the Federal Unemployment Tax Act to cover employees of one or more, effective January 1, 1946. It thus provides for the collecting of the entire 3 percent Federal tax on employers of less than 8 workers until the States act to include such workers under State systems, since most of the States will probably not extend coverage until then. In the meantime, these workers will be receiving protection against unemployment through the temporary supplemental plan and the Federal Government will be collecting contributions from their employers thus helping to finance the benefit costs to such workers.

TRANSPORTATION ALLOWANCES

Section 708 provides that in order to aid in the proper relocation of war workers and prevent the growth of local areas of unemployment, the Federal Government agrees to pay the transportation expenses of such workers, not exceeding the amounts payable to civilian employees of the Federal Government, transferring from one locality to another, when they are referred to a job at a distance by the United States Employment Service.

GI BILL OF RIGHTS

Section 2 of the bill amends the unemployment insurance provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 (the GI bill of rights) by providing more adequate unemployment insurance benefits to servicemen. At the present time a serviceman gets only $20 per week while he is unemployed irrespective of whether he is a single person or has several dependents. The bill changes this amount to $25 for all persons and adds $5 per week if the serviceman has any dependents. The maximum payment under the bill would be $30.

The bill also repeals two restrictive provisions of the existing law. At the present time an individual must have served 9½ months or more to be eligible to the full 52 weeks of benefits. For each month of service less than 10 months, the individual's right to benefits is reduced by 4 weeks. Thus, if an individual served only 90 days, he is entitled to only 24 weeks of benefits. This provision is unfair to the serviceman with only 90 days' service who has broken his ties with his employer and his community and cannot find a job when he returns. It will be unfair to servicemen who are discharged at the end of the war with short periods of service and who find themselves unemployed after 24 weeks.

The bill also remedies the defect in the present law which charges an unemployed serviceman with a full week of benefits even if he draws only a partial benefit for a week. Instead of charging the serviceman with weeks of benefits toward the total to which he is eligible, the bill charges only the amount of dollars he has received. This is the customary provision under State unemployment compensation laws.

AN EXTRACT FROM THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO THE CONGRESS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDED JUNE 30, 1944

ANNUAL REPORT ON THE FINANCES

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 3, 1945.

SIR: I have the honor to make the following report on the finances of the Federal Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1944.

From the commencement of the national defense program in 1940 to the end of the fiscal year 1943, the Federal Government's expenditures for war purposes and its receipts each advanced steadily and rapidly. Expenditures for peacetime purposes declined substantially, expressed as a percentage of their former level; but this contraction was small in amount compared with the huge totals of wartime outlays and taxation.

By the beginning of the fiscal year 1944, the annual rate of war expenditures had nearly stabilized, as the Nation approached its effective production potential and this stability is likely to continue at least through the fiscal year 1945.

The annual rate of Federal receipts during the fiscal year 1944 covered somewhat less than half of total expenditures, and it appears that approximately the same relationship will obtain during the fiscal year 1945.

I said in my report last year, and I still believe, that it would be better for the economy of the United States and fairer to the men in the armed forces if a larger portion of the current cost of the war were paid for by taxation. Congress has decided otherwise, however; and there appears to be little likelihood of a substantial upward revision in our tax system during the continuance of the present conflict. I believe that the time is opportune, therefore, to review the impact of the wartime fiscal operations of the Federal Government on the national economy, and to consider, in broad outline, some of the steps which should be taken to adjust these operations to the new conditions which will prevail when victory is finally achieved.

The following table summarizes the receipts and expenditures of the Federal Government for the fiscal years 1940 through 1945.

[1] Figures are on the basis of classifications appearing in the 1946 Budget Message. They include net expenditures of Government corporations and the totals are not, therefore, the same as the figures in certain other tables in this report. They exclude statutory debt retirements and trust funds.

[2] Includes only Treasury outlays for the war activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its affiliates. Figures are excess of expenditures over receipts.

[3] Comprises principally Treasury outlays for Commodity Credit Corporation, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and nonwar activities of Reconstruction Finance Corporation and its affiliates. Figures are excess of expenditures over receipts. Negative figures indicate excess of receipts.

[4] Net budgetary receipts, i. e., total receipts less net appropriation to Federal old-age and survivors insurance trust fund.

The figures on expenditures shown in the table include both budgetary expenditures and net outlays made by the Treasury for the operation of Government corporations. The figures for the fiscal years 1940 through 1944 reflect actual results. Those for the fiscal year 1945 are the estimates presented in the Budget Message of the President.

The table shows that Federal Government expenditures for war purposes rose rapidly from $1.7 billions in the fiscal year 1940, the last fiscal year before the beginning of the national defense program, to $89.7 billions in the fiscal year 1944. For the fiscal year 1945, war expenditures are estimated to remain almost unchanged at $89.0 billions.

Net receipts advanced from $5.4 billions in the fiscal year 1940 to $44.1 billions in the fiscal year 1944, and are estimated to remain almost unchanged at $45.7 billions for the fiscal year 1945.

The excess of expenditures over receipts amounted to $51.1 billions for the fiscal year 1944, and is estimated at $54.0 billions for the fiscal year 1945. This excess of expenditures had been as high as $57.4 billions in the fiscal year 1943, however.

A rough measure of the impact of Federal fiscal operations on the national economy may be made by relating expenditures and receipts to the total production of goods and services, known as the gross national product.[1] This is done in the following table.

Proportion of gross national product represented by expenditures, receipts, and excess of expenditures of the Federal Government, fiscal years 1940 through 1945

Fiscal year	Gross national product (in billions)	Proportion represented by—
		Federal expenditures	Federal receipts	Excess of expenditures
		Percent	Percent	Percent
1940	$93	10	6	4
1941	106	13	7	6
1942	134	26	10	16
1943	172	46	13	33
1944	194	49	23	26
1945	198	50	23	27

The gross national product has tended to stabilize at about $200 billions, apparently reflecting the approach to our effective wartime productive capacity. It is estimated that Federal expenditures during the fiscal year 1945 will be about 50 percent of the gross national product. Federal receipts will amount to about 23 percent of the product; and the excess of expenditures, to about 27 percent. These proportions are approximately the same as in the fiscal year 1944.

An excess of Federal Government expenditures over Federal Government receipts, amounting to 27 percent of the gross national product, means that an amount of income corresponding to that proportion of the gross product is paid out, which the recipients may spend or save as they choose; but that the earning of this income gives rise to no corresponding flow of civilian goods and services upon which it can be spent. A corresponding proportion of the total income flow created by the gross national product must, therefore, be saved by the people if a rise in prices is to be averted.

The experience of the past three years has shown us that, with the aid of appropriate controls, and thanks to the common sense of the American people, this higher rate of savings can be attained in fact, and economic stabilization thereby achieved. I believe that, with suitable controls, and with the continued cooperation of the people with the stabilization program, inflation can and will be avoided throughout the rest of the war period and during the post-war adjustment.

Factors in the stabilization program

Federal receipts from taxation have increased eightfold since 1940. The major proportion of the remaining excess money incomes that might otherwise have exerted an inflationary pressure has been invested in war bonds, or retained unspent as liquid savings. And the direct controls over consumption and prices—rationing, allocations, price ceilings, etc.—have prevented the cumulation of cost and price increases. While the removal of purchasing power from the market by wartime taxes and savings campaigns has contributed greatly to the success of the direct controls, the direct controls at the same time have facilitated and strengthened the effectiveness of the taxation and savings programs. In short, the wartime level of taxes, the war loans and other savings campaigns and the direct controls have formed an interrelated program, each part of which has been essential to the whole.

[1] Federal Government receipts and expenditures are not strictly comparable with gross national product estimates without certain technical adjustments. These adjustments, however, are sufficiently small, for the period covered, to permit them to be omitted in this discussion. See section on Sources of Funds for Federal Borrowing, which begins on p. 79, for further discussion of the relationship of Federal fiscal operations to the rest of the economy.

The following table shows the increase in the gross public debt and guaranteed obligations during each of the fiscal years 1940 through 1944, the amount of this increase held unspent in the General Fund of the Treasury, and the amount absorbed by nonbank investors, respectively. The remainder of the debt increase, after making the deductions just referred to, represents funds borrowed directly or indirectly from the banking system and actually spent by the Government during the period. This includes the entire portion of the expenditures of the Federal Government which resulted in the creation of currency and deposits in commercial banks (including time deposits) during each period. As shown in the table, Federal expenditures resulting in an increase in currency and deposits amounted to 7 percent of the gross national product in the fiscal year 1944, as compared with 14 percent in the preceding year. This sharp fall was caused in part, however, by the fact that two complete war loan drives and the major portion of a third fell within the fiscal year 1944, with the result that the proportion of nonbank absorption of the debt in that year was higher than it would have been otherwise.

Comparison, with the gross national product, of the portion of the increase in the Federal debt which resulted in the creation of bank deposits and currency in the hands of the public

Debt which resulted in an increase in commercial bank deposits or currency in the hands of the public [2]	1.7	2.5	6.5	24.8	13.2
Percent of gross national product	2%	2%	5%	14%	7%

NOTE.—Figures are rounded and will not necessarily add to totals.

[1] Interest-bearing debt absorbed by nonbank investors, as shown by the table on page 91, plus the entire increase in United States savings stamps, excess profits tax refund bonds, and matured debt.

[2] Interest-bearing debt absorbed by commercial and Federal Reserve Banks, as shown in the table on page 91, plus the increase in deposits in the Treasury for the retirement of Federal Reserve Bank notes and national bank notes, less the increase in the General Fund balance in the Treasury.

By no means all of the increase in the debt absorbed by the banking system has contributed to net inflationary pressure. A large increase in currency and bank deposits was required by the doubling of the gross national product which took place during the period; and this necessary increase in money supply could be furnished, under existing statutes, only by a substantial absorption of debt by the banking system. Also, individuals and corporations paid back substantial amounts of debt, including debt held by the banking system, offsetting in part the increase in commercial bank holdings of Government securities; and increased their savings deposits in commercial banks substantially during the period. In the case of many business enterprises, the proceeds of inventory liquidation and depreciation are held in the form of deposits to facilitate reinvestment in the post-war period. Furthermore, experience has shown that a large proportion of the demand deposits and currency accumulated by individuals and corporations during this period has been regarded by its owners as part of their permanent savings and has not entered into active circulation for the purchase of goods and services.

Tax policy

Our wartime tax policy has been to adapt the tax structure to achieve important wartime objectives.

Through heavy wartime taxes a large part of the financial cost of the war is being paid currently by wartime civilians instead of being deferred to be met by returning service men and women. The large revenue collections during the war are restricting the growth of the debt, thereby moderating post-war fiscal and economic problems. By channeling billions of dollars of spending power into the Treasury, wartime taxes are strongly buttressing the program of economic stabilization. Civilian demands are thereby made more controllable and the strain is eased on direct controls, such as priorities, rationing, wage ceilings, and price ceilings. High taxes on war profits and on large incomes, moreover, have helped to gain popular acceptance of the stabilization program.

The eightfold increase in tax yields has been accomplished in successive stages, thus minimizing shock to the economic system. Moreover, standards of equity in taxation have not been sacrificed. The test of taxation according to ability to pay has been met through heavy reliance on progressive taxes, through special relief provisions to alleviate hardships, and through continued efforts to close avenues of escape from just taxation. The budgeting and payment of taxes have been made more convenient through the introduction of withholding and current payment methods. Individual income tax returns and compliance have been greatly simplified.

Wartime taxes must continue as long as war conditions require. For the post-war period, however, the tax system must be readjusted to the then existing fiscal and economic needs. A strong tax system must be maintained, for post-war expenditures will be far higher than pre-war expenditures and we should plan to reduce the debt as rapidly as economic considerations permit. But selective tax reductions and adjustments will be needed to encourage private expenditures for consumption and investment. Such measures are essential to the realization of full employment in a peacetime economy of free enterprise and competition.

Timing the changes from the wartime tax structure to the post-war tax structure will present an important and difficult problem. Little, if any, reduction in tax rates should be anticipated until after the cessation of major hostilities on all fronts. An important factor affecting timing of downward adjustments is whether the transition and immediate post-war periods will involve continued inflationary pressures and, if so, at what point of time these will disappear. The premature relaxation of our efforts on the tax front might jeopardize the continuing success of the economic stabilization program. On the other hand, too great delay in adjusting the tax structure and rates might jeopardize the post-war maintenance of high levels of employment and business activity.

The problem of adjusting taxes to match the shift of emphasis from wartime objectives to post-war objectives will require foresight and coordinated action. The Treasury has been cooperating with other executive departments and agencies and with the Congressional Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation in the study of tax adjustments for the transition and post-war periods.

Debt management

It is certain that the present war will leave the United States with a large public debt. There is no question of the ability of the country to service this debt. As the tables on pages 2 and 3 indicate, estimated expenditures on account of interest on the debt, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945, amount to less than 2 percent of the anticipated gross national product for the same period. Production will probably be at a lower level, and the debt will certainly be somewhat larger after the war than now. The interest charge will thus represent a larger proportion of the national product; but it will still be a relatively small proportion. The payment of interest on the debt, furthermore, does not decrease the amount of the gross national product available for consumption or capital expansion. It is a transfer operation by which the amount of the interest is collected from taxpayers and paid to the holders of the debt, who are also numbered among the taxpayers.

The burden of the debt, therefore, consists of the necessity of collecting a large amount of money from some persons and repaying it to others, and of the possible adverse economic effects of the resulting redistribution of income upon the amount of the national product. This burden is a real one, however, and it should be a major object of fiscal policy in the post-war period to reduce the amount of the debt in so far as this is compatible with the maintenance of full employment.

All borrowing during the wartime period has been by the issuance of securities, the interest on which is subject to the Federal income tax. The exclusive issuance of such securities, which is now a permanent part of our public debt policy, has been achieved without any substantial increase in the interest rates on Federal securities above the rates which it would have been necessary to pay on tax-exempt securities. The taxability of the interest on the wartime debt will both ease the problem of public debt management in the post-war period and make possible a more equitable and better balanced Federal tax system.

The low level of interest rates on the public debt (the computed interest rate on June 30, 1944, was 1.93 percent) lightens the burden of the debt and will tend to simplify debt management in the post-war period. Moreover, the fundamental factors underlying interest rates on Government securities, which apply also to interest rates in other fields, give no indication of a change in the direction of a higher level of rates in the foreseeable future. Continued low interest rates will be a major contribution to economic stability and the maintenance of full employment after the war, for low interest rates stimulate business and encourage new enterprise.

Borrowing during the war period has been carried on with a constant eye to the transitional and post-war effects of the types of securities offered and the classes of investors appealed to. The Treasury has so diversified its offerings of securities as to provide a security adapted to the requirements of each major class of investors. Long-term marketable bonds have been sold principally to insurance companies and savings banks. Commercial banks have been offered more liquid marketable obligations having terms of 10 years or less. One-year certificates of indebtedness, and Treasury savings notes having a maturity of three years, but redeemable at the owners' option after six months, have been especially attractive for the investment of temporary accumulations of business concerns. The principal emphasis in sales of securities to individuals has been upon Series E savings bonds, which have a maturity of ten years, but which are redeemable at the owners' demand after 60 days.

In offering securities to different classes of investors, the Treasury has always borne in mind the fact that the time which the original purchaser of a security will hold it will depend, principally, upon his own future needs and convenience, and to a very minor extent upon the nominal maturity of the security. The indiscriminate issuance of long-term securities to all classes of investors would not insure their being held to maturity by their original purchasers, but would result merely in premature market liquidation. The adaptation of the securities offered to the particular needs of different classes of investors, taken in conjunction with appropriate open market policy, obviates the possibility of a disorderly liquidation of securities through the market, such as might have occurred had a single type of marketable security been issued to all. Such liquidation as is inevitable in the post-war period will take the form principally of the redemption of securities by the Treasury, either at maturity or at the owners' demand, rather than by sale in the open market. The refinancing of these obligations, to the extent that a net reduction in the outstanding debt is not possible, can be conducted in an orderly manner by the sale of new Treasury securities adapted to market conditions at the time. Thus one factor of economic instability, the demoralization of the security markets, will be eliminated.

Smooth transition to a peacetime economy will be promoted by the distribution of public debt securities of different types among various classes of investors. Corporations which have invested their reserves for reconversion and post-war expansion in certificates of indebtedness and Treasury savings notes suffer no impairment in the liquidity of their reserves by such investment. After the war they may sell or allow their holdings of certificates to run off and may present their savings notes for redemption without loss of principal.

The composition of the public debt will also contribute to economic stability by releasing purchasing power when the stimulus of increased spending is needed. Although individuals will probably not liquidate their savings bond investments on a large scale in the post-war period, they are likely to spend more freely of their current incomes because of the sense of security afforded by their savings bond holdings. The distribution of savings bonds among many individuals in the relatively low income groups will enhance the contribution of such spending to the maintenance of economic stability.

The same circumstances which have made it advisable to concentrate a large proportion of the wartime debt in securities of short maturity will continue in time of peace. The contribution which such a structure of the public debt furnishes to the liquidity of the whole economy will be an important factor in the maintenance of full employment in the post-war period. The funding of a major portion of the short-term debt into longer-term securities, on the other hand, would serve merely to increase the interest cost to the Government and to shift the risk of future changes in interest rates (and corresponding movements, in the opposite direction, of bond prices) from the Government to private investors. Such a policy would increase, rather than reduce, the factors making for instability in the post-war economy, as the Government is in a better position to bear the risk of changes in interest rates than most classes of investors, and—unlike any class of investors—is also in a position to minimize it. I see no need, therefore, for any large-scale refunding of short-term Government securities into long-term ones during the transition or post-war periods.

International monetary and financial cooperation

During the past year further steps have been taken to assure cooperation among the United Nations in dealing with international monetary and financial problems after the war.

For more than a decade we have tried to secure currency stabilization through cooperation with friendly governments. In 1936 we joined with England and France in the Tri-Partite Declaration, to which Belgium, the Netherlands, and Switzerland adhered, to maintain stable exchange arrangements and to consult on important exchange problems. The Treasury also entered into bilateral stabilization agreements with a number of American Republics and other friendly countries. These measures, while helpful, were not adequate to assure stable exchanges in a world of restriction and economic aggression.

On the basis of this experience the Treasury came to the conclusion that international monetary and financial problems could be dealt with only by broad cooperation among all countries. After extended study by the Treasury, with the cooperation of other departments of this Government, tentative proposals were formulated for an international stabilization fund and an international bank. In 1943, drafts of these proposals were sent to the Ministers of Finance of the United Nations for consideration by their technical experts. After a year of discussion among the technical representatives of some thirty countries, a joint statement was published recommending an international monetary fund. In May 1944, President Roosevelt called the United Nations Monetary and Financial Conference which was held at Bretton Woods, N. H., in July. The Conference prepared articles of agreement for an international monetary fund and an international bank for reconstruction and development for submission to the participating governments.

World prosperity and world peace will depend in large measure upon the existence of a high level of balanced international trade in the post-war period. All nations are economically dependent upon one another, both as consumers and as producers. With stable and orderly exchanges world trade can be increased. Productive foreign investments will make possible reconstruction of the war-torn areas of Europe and Asia, and the development of new countries. As one of the leading foreign trading countries of the world, we have a special interest in these measures for international monetary and financial cooperation which will facilitate the revival and growth of world trade.

The United Nations have shown that they regard international monetary and financial problems as an international responsibility that can be dealt with by cooperation through the fund and the bank. By providing stable and orderly exchange arrangements and encouraging productive international investment, the fund and the bank will make possible the balanced growth of international trade. Together, they can help provide a sound foundation for a prosperous and peaceful world.

AN ACT

To amend the Act of June 8, 1936, relating to vocational education, so as to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act approved June 8, 1936, entitled "An Act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories" (49 Stat. 1488, ch. 541), is amended to read as follows:

"SHORT TITLE

"SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the 'Vocational Education Act of 1946'.

1 "DEFINITIONS

2 "SEC. 2. As used in this Act—

3 "(1) the term 'States and Territories' means the 4 several States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii,
5 the island of Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia;

6 "(2) the terms 'State plan' and 'State board' shall
7 have the meaning which said terms have in the Smith-
8 Hughes Vocational Education Act; and

9 "(3) the term 'Smith-Hughes Vocational Educa-
10 tion Act' means the Act approved February 23, 1917
11 (39 Stat. 929, ch. 114).

12 "AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS FOR VOCATIONAL
13 EDUCATION

14 "SEC. 3. (a) For the purpose of assisting the several 15 States and Territories in the further development of voca-
16 tional education, there is authorized to be appropriated for 17 the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1946, and annually there-
18 after—

19 "(1) $10,000,000 for vocational education in agri-
20 culture, including supervision by the vocational agricul-

23 and the New Farmers of America, to be apportioned
24 for expenditure in the several States and Territories in 25 the proportion that their farm population bears to the total farm population of the States and Territories, according to the last preceding United States census;

"(2) $8,000,000 for vocational education in home economics, to be apportioned for expenditure in the several States and Territories in the proportion that their rural population bears to the total rural population of the States and Territories, according to the last preceding United States census;

"(3) $8,000,000 for vocational education in trades and industry, to be apportioned for expenditure in the several States and Territories in the proportion that their nonfarm population bears to the total nonfarm population of the States and Territories, according to the last preceding United States census; and

"~~(4) $1,500,000 for vocational guidance, to be apportioned for expenditure in the several States and Territories in the proportion that their total population bears to the total population of the States and Territories, according to the last preceding United States census; and~~

"~~(5)~~ (4) $2,500,000 for vocational education in distributive occupations, to be apportioned for expenditure in the several States and Territories in the proportion that their total population bears to the total population of the States and Territories, according to the last preceding United States census;

"(b) The funds appropriated under authority of paragraphs (1) to ~~(5)~~ (4), inclusive, of subsection (a) of this section may be used for assisting the several States and Territories, for the purposes therein specified, in the maintenance of adequate programs of administration, supervision, and teacher-training; for salaries and necessary travel expenses of teachers, teacher-trainers, vocational counselors, supervisors and directors of vocational education and vocational guidance; for securing necessary educational information and data as a basis for the proper development of programs of vocational education and vocational guidance; for training and work-experience training programs for out-of-school youth; for training programs for apprentices; for purchase or rent of equipment and supplies for vocational instruction: Provided, That all expenditures for the purposes as set forth in this section shall be made in accordance with the State plan for vocational education.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the amount to be available for expenditure in any State or Territory shall be not less, for any fiscal year, than $40,000 each for vocational education in agriculture, in home economics, and in trades and industry; $15,000 ~~each for vocational guidance and~~ for vocational education in distributive occupations and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1946, and anuually thereafter, such additional sums as may be needed for the purpose of providing such minimum amounts.

"REQUIREMENTS AS TO MATCHING OF FUNDS

"SEC. 4. The several States and Territories, in order to receive the benefits of this Act, shall be required to match by State and local funds or both ~~50~~ 100 per centum of the appropriations made under authority of section 3 ~~until June 30, 1951; 60 per centum for the year ending June 30, 1952; 70 per centum for the year ending June 30, 1953; 80 per centum for the year ending June 30, 1954; 90 per centum for the year ending June 30, 1955; and annually thereafter 100 per centum of the appropriations so made~~.

"MAKING OF PAYMENTS

"SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury, through the Fiscal Service of the Treasury Department, shall, upon the certification of the United States Commissioner of Education, pay, in equal semiannual payments, on the first day of July and January of each year, to the custodian for vocational education of each State and Territory designated in the Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act, the moneys to which the State or Territory is entitled under the provisions of this Act.

"AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR SALARY AND EXPENSES OF STATE DIRECTORS

"SEC. 6. Funds appropriated under authority of section 3 shall be available, on a prorated basis determined by the State board, for the salary and necessary travel expenses of a State director of vocational education selected by the State board, in accordance with the requirements of the State plan, on the basis of his technical and professional qualifications including experience in vocational education ~~as a teacher and supervisor~~.

"APPLICABILITY OF SMITH-HUGHES VOCATIONAL EDUCATION ACT

"SEC. 7. The appropriations made under authority of this Act shall be in addition to, and shall be subject to the same conditions and limitations as, the appropriations made to carry out the Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act; except that (1) the appropriations made under authority of this Act for home economics shall be subject to the conditions and limitations applicable to the appropriation for agricultural purposes under the Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act, with the exception of that part of section 10 thereof which requires directed or supervised practice for at least six months per year; (2) such moneys as are provided under authority of this Act for trade and industrial subjects, and public and other service occupations, may be

1 expended for part-time classes operated for less than one
2 hundred and forty-four hours per year; (3) the provisions
3 of section 11 of the Smith-Hughes Vocational Education
4 Act, requiring at least one-third of the sum appropriated to 5 any State to be expended for part-time schools or classes
6 shall be held to include any part-time day-school classes
7 for workers sixteen years of age and over, and evening-
8 school classes for workers sixteen years of age and over;
9 (4) the appropriations made by this Act for distributive
10 occupational subjects shall be limited to part-time and eve-
11 ning schools as provided in the Smith-Hughes Vocational 12 Education Act, for trade, home economics, and industrial 13 subjects and as qualified by the provisions of this section;
14 (5) preemployment schools and classes organized for per-
15 sons over eighteen years of age or who have left the full-time
16 school may be operated for less than nine months per year
17 and less than thirty hours per week and without the require-18 ment that a minimum of 50 per centum of the time must 19 be given to shop work on a useful or productive basis; and 20 (6) the appropriations available under section 9 of this Act
21 shall be available for expenses of attendance at meetings of 22 educational associations and other organizations and for 23 expenses of conferees called to meet in the District of Colum-
24 bia or elsewhere, which, in the opinion of the Commissioner, are necessary for the efficient discharge of the provisions of this Act.

"RESTRICTIONS AND CONDITIONS

"SEC. 8. (a) No part of the appropriations made under authority of this Act shall be expended in industrial-plant training programs, except such industrial-plant training be bona fide vocational training, and not a device to utilize the services of vocational trainees for private profit.

~~"(b) In order to receive the benefits of the appropriations made under authority of this Act, the State board for vocational education of each State and Territory shall include in its State plan provision for the utilization of representative advisory committees, and where the interests of labor and management are involved they shall have equal representation.~~

"~~(c)~~ (b) After June 30, 1951; not more than 10 per centum of the amount appropriated for each of the purposes specified in section 3 (a) shall be used for the purchase or acquisition of equipment.

"APPROPRIATIONS FOR OFFICE OF EDUCATION

"SEC. 9. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Office of Education, Federal Security Agency, for vocational education, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937, and annually thereafter the sum of $350,000, to be expended

1 for the same purposes and in the same manner as provided
2 in section 7 of the Smith-Hughes Vocational Education Act,
3 as amended October 6, 1917."

United Nations Charter

SAN FRANCISCO.—(AP)—The text of the final draft of the United Nations charter follows:

PREAMBLE

We the peoples of the United Nations, determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and

To reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and

To establish conditions under which justice and respect for law and the pledged word can be maintained, and

To promote social progress and better standards of life in larger freedom, and for these ends

To practice tolerance and live together in peace as good neighbors, and

To unite our strength to maintain international peace and security, by the acceptance of principles and the institution of methods to insure that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest, and

To employ international means for the economic and social advancement of all peoples have resolved to combine our efforts to accomplish these aims.

Accordingly, our respective governments, through representatives assembled in the city of San Francisco, who have exhibited their full powers found to be in good and due form, have agreed to the present chapter of the United Nations and do hereby establish an international organization to be known as the United Nations.

CHAPTER I

Purposes and Principles

PURPOSES

ARTICLE 1

The purposes of the United Nations are:

1. To maintain international peace and security, and to that end: To take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;

2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for the fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; and

4. To be a center for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

PRINCIPLES

ARTICLE 2

The organization and its members, in pursuit of the purposes stated in Article I, shall act in act in accordance with the following principles:

1. The organization is based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all its members.

2. All members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfill in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present charter.

3. All members shall settle their international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace, and security, and justice, are not endangered.

4. All members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any member or state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

5. All members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the provisions of the present charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The United Nations shall ensure that states not members act in accordance with these principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under the present charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

CHAPTER II

Membership

ARTICLE 3

The original members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the conference on International Organization at San Francisco, or previously have signed the Declaration by United Nations of January 1, 1942, sign the present charter and subsequently ratify it in accordance with Articles 108 and 109.

ARTICLE 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present charter and, in the judgment of the organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of such states to membership in the United Nations will be effected by the decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the limit the general scope of Article 10.

ARTICLE 13

1. The general assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:

(A.) Promoting international co-operation in the political field and encouraging the progressive development of international law and its codification;

(B.) Promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational and health fields and assisting in the realization of human rights and basic freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

2. The further responsibilities, functions and powers of the general assembly with respect to matters mentioned in Paragraph B above are set forth in Chapters IX and X.

ARTICLE 14

Subject to the provisions of Article 12, the General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment of any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations, including situations resulting from a violation of the provisions of the present charter setting forth the purposes and principles of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 15

1. The general assembly shall receive and consider annual and special reports from the Security Council; these reports shall include an account of the measures that the Security Council has adopted or applied to maintain international peace and security.

2. The general assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other bodies of the organization.

ARTICLE 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the International Trusteeship System as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

ARTICLE 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the organization.

2. The general assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with Specialized Agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such Specialized Agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

3. The expenses of the organization shall be borne by the members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

VOTING

ARTICLE 18

Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. These majorities will include the members elected of the Security Council, the election of the members of the Economic and Social Council, the election of the members of the Trusteeship Council in accordance with the provisions of Article 86 (C), the admission of new members to the United Nations, the expulsion of members, the suspension of rights and privileges of members, questions relating to the operations of the trusteeship system, and budgetary questions. Decisions on other questions—including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority—shall be made by a majority of those present and voting.

ARTICLE 19

1. Each member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the General Assembly.

2. A member which is in arrears in the payments of its financial contributions to the organization shall have no vote if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the member.

PROCEDURE

ARTICLE 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the secretary general at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the members of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure consideration by the Security Council shall be invited to participate in the discussion relating to the dispute. The Security Council shall lay down such conditions as it may deem just for the participation of a state which is not a member of the United Nations.

CHAPTER VI

Pacific Settlement of Disputes

ARTICLE 33

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

ARTICLE 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether its continuance is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

ARTICLE 35

1. Any member of the United Nations may bring any dispute or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 24 to the attention of the Security Council, or of the General Assembly.

2. A state which is not a member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party, if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dis-this article will be subject to the provisions of Articles 11 and 12.

ARTICLE 36

1. The Security Council may, at any stage of a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.

2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.

3. In making recommendations under this article the Security Council should take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the statute of the court.

ARTICLE 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.

2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

ARTICLE 38

Without prejudice to the pro-

sponsibilities requires the participation of that member in its work.

3. The Military Staff Committee shall be responsible under the Security Council for the strategic direction of any armed forces placed at the disposal of the Security Council. Questions relating to the command of such forces shall be dealt with subsequently.

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional subcommittees.

ARTICLE 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

ARTICLE 49

The members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the measures decided upon by the Security Council.

ARTICLE 50

If preventive or enforcement measures against any state are taken by the Security Council, any other state, whether a member of the United Nations or not, which finds itself confronted with special economic problems arising from the carrying out of those measures shall have the right to consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

ARTICLE 51

Nothing in the present charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a member of the organization, until the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by members in the exercise of this right of self-defense shall be immediately reported to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present charter to take at any time such action as it may deem necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

CHAPTER VIII

Regional Arrangements

ARTICLE 52

1. Nothing in the present charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as an

where appropriate, utilize such arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the ex-peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace;

2. To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace;

3. To achieve international co-operation in solving international problems of an economic, social, cultural or humanitarian character, and in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for the fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion; and

4. To be a center for harmonizing the actions of nations in the attainment of these common ends.

PRINCIPLES

ARTICLE 2

The organization and its members, in pursuit of the purposes stated in Article I, shall act in act in accordance with the following principles:

1. The organization is based their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any member or state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

5. All members shall give the United Nations every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the provisions of the present charter, and shall refrain from giving assistance to any state against which the United Nations is taking preventive or enforcement action.

6. The United Nations shall ensure that states not members act in accordance with these principles so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security.

7. Nothing contained in the present charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state or shall require the members to submit such matters to settlement under the present charter; but this principle shall not prejudice the application of enforcement measures under Chapter VII.

CHAPTER II

Membership

ARTICLE 3

The original members of the United Nations shall be the states which, having participated in the United Nations Conference on international organization at San Francisco, or have previously signed the declaration of the United Nations of January 1, 1942, sign the present charter and ratify it in accordance with Article 110.

ARTICLE 4

1. Membership in the United Nations is open to all other peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present charter and which, in the judgment of the organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations.

2. The admission of any such state to membership in the United Nations will be effected by a decision of the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

ARTICLE 5

A member of the United Nations against which preventive or enforcement action has been taken by the Security Council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council. The exercise of these rights and privileges may be restored by the Security Council.

ARTICLE 6

A member of the United Nations which has persistently violated the principles contained in the present charter may be expelled from the organization by the General Assembly upon the recommendation of the Security Council.

CHAPTER III

Organs

ARTICLE 7

1. There are established as the principal organs of the United Nations: A General Assembly, a Security Council, an Economic and Social Council, a Trusteeship Council, an International Court of Justice, and a Secretariat.

2. Such subsidiary organs as found necessary may be established in accordance with the present charter.

ARTICLE 8

The United Nations shall place no restrictions on the eligibility of men and women to participate in any capacity and under conditions of equality in the principal and subsidiary organs.

CHAPTER IV

The General Assembly

COMPOSITION

ARTICLE 9

The General Assembly shall consist of all the members of the United Nations. Each member shall have not more than five representatives in the General Assembly.

FUNCTIONS AND POWERS

ARTICLE 10

The General Assembly may discuss any questions or any matters within the scope of the present charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided in the present charter, and, except as provided in Article 12 may make recommendations to the members of the United Nations or to the Security Council or both on any such questions or matters.

ARTICLE 11

1. While the Security Council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned to it in the present charter, the General Assembly shall not make any recommendation with regard to that dispute or situation unless the Security Council so requests.

2. The secretary general, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council and shall similarly notify the General Assembly, or the members of the United Nations if the General Assembly is not in session, immediately the Security Council ceases to deal with such matters.

ARTICLE 12

1. The General Assembly may consider the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, including the principles governing disarmament and the regulations of armaments, and may make recommendations with regard to such principles to the members or to the security council or both.

2. The General Assembly may discuss any questions relating to the maintenance of international peace and security brought before it by any members of the United Nations, or by the Security Council, or by a non-member state in accordance with the provisions of Article 35, Paragraph 2, and, except as provided in Article 12, may make recommendations with regard to any such questions to the state or states concerned or to the Security Council or both. A question on which action is necessary shall be referred to the Security Council by the General Assembly either before or after discussion.

3. The General Assembly may call the attention of the Security Council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

4. The powers of the General Assembly set out in Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this Article shall not ternational peace and security.

2. The general assembly shall receive and consider reports from the other bodies of the organization.

ARTICLE 16

The General Assembly shall perform such functions with respect to the International Trusteeship System as are assigned to it under Chapters XII and XIII, including the approval of the trusteeship agreements for areas not designated as strategic.

ARTICLE 17

1. The General Assembly shall consider and approve the budget of the organization.

2. The general assembly shall consider and approve any financial and budgetary arrangements with Specialized Agencies referred to in Article 57 and shall examine the administrative budgets of such Specialized Agencies with a view to making recommendations to the agencies concerned.

3. The expenses of the organization shall be borne by the members as apportioned by the General Assembly.

VOTING

ARTICLE 18

Decisions of the General Assembly on important questions shall be made by a two thirds majority of those present and voting. These questions shall include: Recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the election of the nonpermanent members of the Security Council, sions on other questions—including the determination of additional categories of questions to be decided by a two-thirds majority—shall be made by a majority of those present and voting.

ARTICLE 19

1. Each member of the United Nations shall have one vote in the General Assembly.

2. A member which is in arrears in the payments of its financial contributions to the organization shall have no vote if the amount of its arrears equals or exceeds the amount of the contributions due from it for the preceding two full years. The General Assembly may, nevertheless, permit such a member to vote if it is satisfied that the failure to pay is due to conditions beyond the control of the member.

PROCEDURE

ARTICLE 20

The General Assembly shall meet in regular annual sessions and in such special sessions as occasion may require. Special sessions shall be convoked by the secretary general at the request of the Security Council or of a majority of the members of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 21

The General Assembly shall adopt its own rules of procedure. It shall elect its president for each session.

ARTICLE 22

The General Assembly may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

CHAPTER V

The Security Council

COMPOSITION

ARTICLE 23

1. The Security Council shall consist of eleven members of the United Nations. The United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Republic of China, and France shall be permanent members of the Security Council. The General Assembly shall elect six other members of the United Nations to be non-permanent members of the Security Council, due regard being specially paid, in the first instance to the contribution of members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the organization, and also to equitable geographical distribution.

2. The non-permanent members of the Security Council shall be elected for a term of two years. In the first election of the non-permanent members, however, three shall be chosen for a term of one year. A retiring member shall not be eligible for immediate re-election.

3. Each member of the Security Council shall have one representative.

PRIMARY RESPONSIBILITY

ARTICLE 24

1. In order to ensure prompt and effective action by the United Nations, its members confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security, and agree that in carrying out its duties under this responsibility the Security Council acts on their behalf.

2. In discharging these duties the Security Council shall act in accordance with the purposes and principles of the United Nations. The specific powers granted to the Security Council for the discharge of these duties are laid down in Chapters VI, VII, VIII and XII.

3. The Security Council shall submit annual and, when necessary, special reports to the General Assembly for its consideration.

ARTICLE 25

The members of the United Nations agree to accept and carry out the decisions of the Security Council in accordance with the provisions of the present charter.

ARTICLE 26

In order to promote the establishment and maintenance of international peace and security with the least diversion for armaments of the world's human and economic resources, the Security Council shall be responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee, plans to be submitted to the members of the United Nations for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armaments.

ARTICLE 27

Each member of the Security Council shall have one vote.

Decisions of the Security Council on procedural matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members.

Decisions of the Security Council on all other matters shall be made by an affirmative vote of seven members including the concurring votes of the permanent members; provided that, in decisions under Chapter VI and under Paragraph 3 of Article 52, a party to a dispute shall abstain from voting.

PRECEDURE

ARTICLE 28

1. The Security Council shall be so organized as to be able to function continuously. Each member of the Security Council shall for this purpose be represented at all times at the seat of the organization.

2. The Security Council shall hold periodic meetings at which each of its members may, if it so desires, be represented by a member of the government or by some other specially designated representative.

3. The Security Council may hold meetings at such places other than the seat of the organization as in its judgment may best facilitate its work.

ARTICLE 29

The Security Council may establish such subsidiary organs as it deems necessary for the performance of its functions.

ARTICLE 30

The Security Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its president.

ARTICLE 31

Any member of the United Nations may participate in the discussion of any question brought before the Security Council whenever the latter considers that the interests of that member are specially affected.

ARTICLE 32

Any member of the United Nations which is not a member of the Security Council or any state not a member of the United Nations, if it is a party to a dispute under

1. The parties to any dispute, the continuance of which is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, shall, first of all, seek a solution by negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement, resort to regional agencies or arrangements, or other peaceful means of their own choice.

2. The Security Council shall, when it deems necessary, call upon the parties to settle their dispute by such means.

ARTICLE 34

The Security Council may investigate any dispute, or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute, in order to determine whether its continuance is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

ARTICLE 35

1. Any member of the United Nations may bring any dispute or any situation of the nature referred to in Article 24 to the attention of the Security Council, or of the General Assembly.

2. A state which is not a member of the United Nations may bring to the attention of the Security Council or of the General Assembly any dispute to which it is a party, if it accepts in advance, for the purposes of the dispute, the obligations of pacific settlement provided in the present charter.

3. The proceedings of the General Assembly in respect of matters brought to its attention under ture referred to in Article 33 or of a situation of like nature, recommend appropriate procedures or methods of adjustment.

2. The Security Council should take into consideration any procedures for the settlement of the dispute which have already been adopted by the parties.

3. In making recommendations under this article the Security Council should take into consideration that legal disputes should as a general rule be referred by the parties to the International Court of Justice in accordance with the provisions of the statute of the court.

ARTICLE 37

1. Should the parties to a dispute of the nature referred to in Article 33 fail to settle it by the means indicated in that article, they shall refer it to the Security Council.

2. If the Security Council deems that the continuance of the dispute is in fact likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security, it shall decide whether to take action under Article 36 or to recommend such terms of settlement as it may consider appropriate.

ARTICLE 38

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 33-37 of this chapter, the Security Council may, if all the parties to any dispute so request, make recommendations to the parties with a view to a peaceful settlement of the dispute.

CHAPTER VII

Action With Respect to Threats to the Peace, Breaches of the Peace and Acts of Aggression

ARTICLE 39

The Security Council shall determine the existence of any threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression and shall make recommendations, or decide what measures shall be taken in accordance with the provisions of Articles 41 and 42, to maintain or restore international peace and security.

ARTICLE 40

In order to prevent an aggravation of the situation, the Security Council may, before making the recommendations or deciding upon the measures provided for in Article 41, call upon the parties concerned to comply with such provisional measures as it deems necessary or desirable. Such provisional measures shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims or position of the parties concerned. The Security Council shall duly take account of failure to comply with such provisional measures.

ARTICLE 41

The Security Council may decide what measures not involving the use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions, and it may call upon members of the United Nations to apply such measures. These may include complete or partial interruptions of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication, and the severance of diplomatic relations.

ARTICLE 42

Should the Security Council consider that measures provided for in Article 41 would be inadequate or have proved to be inadequate, it may take such action by air, sea or land forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security. Such action may include demonstrations, blockade and other operations by air, sea or land forces of members of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 43

1. All members of the United Nations, in order to contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security, undertake to make available to the Security Council, on its call and in accordance with a special agreement or agreements, armed forces, assistance, and facilities, including rights of passage, necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

2. Such agreement or agreements shall govern the numbers and types of forces, their degree of readiness and general location, and the nature of the facilities and assistance to be provided.

3. The agreement or agreements shall be negotiated as soon as possible on the initiative of the Security Council. They shall be concluded between the Security Council and member states or between the Security Council and groups of member states and shall be subject to ratification by the signatory states in accordance with their constitutional processes.

ARTICLE 44

When the Security Council has decided to use force it shall, before calling upon a member not represented on it to provide armed forces in fulfillment of the oblizations assumed under Article 43, invite that member, if the member so desires, to participate in the decisions of the Security Council concerning the employment of contigents of that member's armed forces.

ARTICLE 45

In order to enable the United Nations to take urgent military measures, members shall hold immediately available national air force contingents for combined international enforcement action. The strength and degree of readiness of these contingents and plans for their combined action shall be determined, within the limits laid down in the special agreement or agreements referred to in Article 43, by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

ARTICLE 46

Plans for the application of armed force shall be made by the Security Council with the assistance of the Military Staff Committee.

ARTICLE 47

1. There shall be established a Military Staff Committee to advise and assist the Security Council on all questions relating to the Security Council's military requirements for the mainitenance of international peace and security, the employment and command of forces placed at its disposal, the regulation of armaments, and possible disarmament.

2. The Military Staff Committees shall consist of the chiefs of staff of the permanent members of the Security Council or their representatives. Any member of the United Nations not permanently represented on the committee shall be invited by the committee to be associated with it when the efficient discharge of the committee's re-

4. The Military Staff Committee, with the authorization of the Security Council and after consultation with appropriate regional agencies, may establish regional subcommittees.

ARTICLE 48

1. The action required to carry out the decisions of the Security Council for the maintenance of international peace and security shall be taken by all the members of the United Nations or by some of them, as the Security Council may determine.

2. Such decisions shall be carried out by the members of the United Nations directly and through their action in the appropriate international agencies of which they are members.

ARTICLE 49

The members of the United Nations shall join in affording mutual assistance in carrying out the consult the Security Council with regard to a solution of those problems.

ARTICLE 51

Nothing in the present charter shall impair the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a member of the organization, until the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain international peace and security. Measures taken by members in the exercise of this right of self-defense shall be immediately reported to to the Security Council and shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council under the present charter to take at any time such action as it may deem necessary in order to maintain or restore international peace and security.

CHAPTER VIII

Regional Arrangements

ARTICLE 52

1. Nothing in the present charter precludes the existence of regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as an appropriate for regional action, provided that such arrangements or agencies and their activities are consistent with the purposes and principles of the organization.

2. The members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve peaceful settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council.

3. The Security Council should encourage the development of peaceful settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies either on the initiative of the states concerned or by reference from the Security Council.

4. This article in no way impairs the application of Articles 33 and 34.

ARTICLE 53

1. The Security Council shall,

where appropriate, utilize such arrangements or agencies for enforcement action under its authority. But no enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council, with the exception of measures against any enemy state, as described below, provided for pursuant to Article 107, or in regional arrangements directed against renewal of aggressive policy on the part of any such state, until such time as the organization may, on request of the governments concerned, be charged with the responsibility for preventing further aggression by such a state.

2. The term "enemy state" as used in paragraph 1 of this article applies to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory of the present charter.

ARTICLE 54

The Security Council shall at all times be kept fully informed of activities undertaken or in contemplation under regional arrangements or by regional agencies for the maintenance of international peace and security.

CHAPTER IX

International Economic and Social Co-operation

ARTICLE 55

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

(A) Higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;

(B) Solutions of international economic, social, health and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation and

(C) Universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

ARTICLE 56

All members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

ARTICLE 57

1. The various Specialized Agencies established by intergovernmental agreement, and having wide international responsibilities as defined in their basic instruments in economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related fields, shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of Article 63.

2. Specialized Agencies thus brought into relationship with the organization are hereinafter referred to as "the specialized agencies."

ARTICLE 58

The organization shall make recommendations for the co-ordination of the policies and activities of the Specialized Agencies.

ARTICLE 59

The organization shall, where appropriate, initiate negotiations among the states concerned for the creation of any new Specialized Agency required for the accomplishment of the purposes set forth in Article 55.

ARTICLE 60

Responsibility for the discharge of the organization's functions set forth in this chapter shall be vested in the General Assembly and, under the authority of the General Assembly, in the economic and social council, which shall have for this purpose the powers set forth in Chapter X.

CHAPTER X

Economic and Social Council

COMPOSITION

ARTICLE 61

1. The Economic and Social Council shall consist of 18 members of the United Nations elected by the General Assembly. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one representative.

2. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 3, six members of the Economic and Social Council shall be elected each year for a term of three years. A retiring member shall be eligible for immediate re-eltction.

3. At the first election, 18 members of the Economic and Social Council shall be chosen. The term of office of six members so chosen shall expire at the end of one year, and of si xother members at the end of two years, in accordance with arrangements made by the General Assembly.

FUNCTIONS AND POWERS

ARTICLE 62

1. The Economic and Social Council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the General Assembly, to the members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

2. It may make recommendations for the purpose of promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms.

3. It may prepare draft conventions for submission to the General Assembly, with respect to matters falling within its competence.

4. It may call, in accordance with the rules prescribed by the United Nations, international conferences on matters falling within its competence.

ARTICLE 63

1. The Economic and Social Council may enter into an agreement, approved by the General Assembly, with any of the agencies referred to in Article 57, defining the terms on which the agency concerned shall be brought into relationship with the United Nations.

2. It may co-ordinate the activities of the specialized agencies through consultation with and recommendations to such agencies and through recommendations to the General Assembly, and to the members of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 64

1. The Economic and Social Council is authorized to take appropriate steps to obtain regular reports from the Specialized Agencies. It is authorized to make arrangements with the members of the United Nations and with the Specialized Agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and falling within its competence which are made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observancce on these reports to the General Assembly.

ARTICLE 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

ARTICLE 66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions as falls within its competence in connection with the carrying out of the recommendations of the General Assembly.

2. It may, with the approval of the General Assembly, perform services at the request of the members of the United Nations and at the request of the Specialized Agencies.

3. It may perform such other functions as are specified elsewhere in the present charter and such functions as may be assigned to it by the General Assembly.

VOTING

ARTICLE 67

1. Each member of the Economic and Social Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Economic and Social Council shall be taken by a majority of the members present and voting.

PROCEDURE

ARTICLE 68

The Economic and Social Council shall set up commissions in economic and social fields and for the promotion of human rights, and such other commissions as may be required for the performance of its functions.

ARTICLE 69

The Economic and Social Council shall invite any member of the United Nations to participate, without vote, in its deliberations on any matter of particular concern to that member.

ARTICLE 70

The Economic and Social Council may make arrangements for representatives of the specialized agencies to participate, without vote, in its deliberations and in those of the commissions established by it, and for its representatives to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

ARTICLE 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the member concerned.

ARTICLE 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its president.

2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on request of a majority of its members.

ARTICLE 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and Specialized Agencies brought into relationship with it, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

CHAPTER XV

The Secretariat

ARTICLE 97

There shall be a Secretariat comprising a secretary-general and such staff as the organization may require. The secretary-general shall be appointed by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the organization.

ARTICLE 98

The secretary-general shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The secretary-general the staffs shall be responsible only to the organization. They shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials.

2. Each member of the organization undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the secretary-general and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

ARTICLE 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the secretary-general under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Eco-

It is authorized to make arrangements with the members of the United Nations and with the Specialized Agencies to obtain reports on the steps taken to give effect to its own recommendations and falling within its competence which are made by the General Assembly.

2. It may communicate its observancce on these reports to the General Assembly.

ARTICLE 65

The Economic and Social Council may furnish information to the Security Council and shall assist the Security Council upon its request.

ARTICLE 66

1. The Economic and Social Council shall perform such functions to participate in the deliberations of the specialized agencies.

ARTICLE 71

The Economic and Social Council may make suitable arrangements for consultation with non-governmental organizations which are concerned with matters within its competence. Such arrangements may be made with international organizations and, where appropriate, with national organizations after consultation with the member concerned.

ARTICLE 72

1. The Economic and Social Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its president.

2. The Economic and Social Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provision for the convening of meetings on request of a majority of its members.

CHAPTER XI

Policy Regarding Non-Self-Governing Territories

ARTICLE 73

Members of the United Nations which have or assume responsibilities for the administration of territories whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government recognize the principle that the interests of the inhabitants of these territories are paramount, and accept as a sacred trust the obligation to promote to the utmost, within the system of international peace and security established by the present charter, the well-being of the inhabitants of these territories, and

(A) To ensure, with due respect for the culture of the peoples concerned, their political, economic, social and educational advancement, their just treatment and their protection against abuses;

(B) To develop self-government, to take due account of the political aspirations of the peoples, and to assist them in the progressive development of their free political institutions, according to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and their varying stages of advancement;

(C) To further international peace and security;

(D) To promote constructive measures of development, to encourage research, and to co-operate with one another and with appropriate international bodies with a view to the practical achievement of the social, economic and scientific purposes set forth in this paragraph; and

(E) To transmit regularly to the secretary-general for information purposes, subject to such limitation as security and constitutional considerations may require, statistical and other information of a technical nature relating to economic, social and educational conditions in the territories for which they are respectively responsible other than those territories to which Chapters XII and XIII of the present charter apply.

ARTICLE 74

Members of the United Nations agree that their policy in respect of the territories, to which this chapter applies, no less than in respect of their metropolitan areas, must be based on the general principle of good-neighborliness, due account being taken of the interests and well-being of the rest of the world, in social, economic and commercial matters.

CHAPTER XII

International Trusteeship System

ARTICLE 75

The United Nations shall establish under its authority an International Trusteeship System for the administration and supervision of such territories as may be placed thereunder by subsequent individual agreements. These territories are hereafter referred to as trust territories.

ARTICLE 76

The basic objectives of the Trusteeship System in acordance with the purposes of the United Nations laid down in Article I of the present charter, shall be:

(A) To further international peace and security;

(B) To promote the political, economic, social and educational advancement of the inhabitants of the trust territories, and their progressive development toward self-government or independence as may be appropriate to the particular circumstances of each territory and its peoples and the freely-expressed wishes of the peoples concerned, and as may be provided by the terms of each trusteeship agreement;

(C) To encourage respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, and to encourage recognition of the interdependence of the peoples of the world; and

(D) To ensure equal treatment in social, economic and commercial matters for all members of the United Nations and their nationals, and also equal treatment for the latter in the administration of justice, without prejudice to the attainment of the foregoing objectives, and subject to the provisions of Article 80.

ARTICLE 77

1. The trusteeship system shall apply to such territories in the following categories as may be placed thereunder by means of trusteeship agreements: (A) Territories now held under mandate; (B) territories which may be detached from enemy states as a result of the Second World War, and (C) territories voluntarily placed under the system by states responsible for their administration.

2. It will be a matter for subsequent agreement which territories in the foregoing categories will be brought under the trusteeship system and upon what terms.

ARTICLE 78

The trusteeship system shall not apply to territories which have become members of the United Nations, relationship among which should be based on respect for the principle of sovereign equality.

ARTICLE 79

The terms of trusteeship for each territory to be placed under the trusteeship system, including any alteration or amendment, shall be agreed upon by the states directly concerned including the mandatory power in the case of territories held under mandate by a member of the United Nations, and shall be approved as provided for in Articles 83 and 85.

ARTICLE 80

1. Except as may be agreed upon in individual trusteeships agreements, made in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which members may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of such agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as may be concluded in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

ARTICLE 81

The trusteeship agreement shall in each case include the terms under which the trust territory will be administered and designate the authority which shall excercise the administration of the trust territroy. Such authority, hereafter called the Administering Authority, may be one or more states or the United Nations itself.

ARTICLE 82

There may be designated, in any trusteeship agreement, a strategic area or areas which may include part or all of the trust territory to which the agreement applies, without prejudice to any special agreement or agreements made under Article 43.

ARTICLE 83

1. All functions of the United Nations relating to strategic areas, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the Security Council.

2. The basic objectives set forth in Article 76 shall be applicable to the people of each strategic area.

3. The Security Council shall, subject to the provisions of the trusteeship agreements and without prejudice to security considerations, avail itself of the assistance of the Trusteeship Council to perform those functions of the United Nations under the Trusteeship System relating to political, economic, social and educational matters in the strategic areas.

ARTICLE 84

It shall be the duty of the Administering Authority to ensure that the trust territory shall play its part in the maintenance of international peace and security. To this end the Administering Authority may make use of volunteer forces, facilities, and assistance from the trust territory in carrying out the obligations untertaken by the Administering Authority, as well as for local defense and the maintenance of law and order within the trust territory.

ARTICLE 85

1. The functions of the United Nations with regard to trusteeship agreements for all areas not designated as strategic, including the approval of the terms of the trusteeship agreements and of their alteration or amendment, shall be exercised by the General Assembly.

2. The Trusteeship Council, under the authority of the General Assembly, shall assist the General Assembly in carrying out these functions.

CHAPTER XIII

The Trusteeship Council

COMPOSITION

ARTICLE 86

The Trusteeship Council shall consist of specially qualified representatives designated as follows: (a) One each by the members of the United Nations administering trust territories; (b) one each by such of the members mentioned by name in Article 23 as are not administering trust territories; and (c) one each by as many other members of the United Nations elected for three-year terms by the General Assembly as may be necessary to ensure that the total number of representatives is equally divided between administering and non-administering members of the United Nations.

FUNCTIONS AND POWERS

ARTICLE 87

The Trusteeship Council, in carrying out its functions as authorized by the General Assembly, may: (a) Consider reports submitted by the Administering Authority; (b) accept petitions and examine them in consultation with the Administering Authority; (c) provide for periodic visits to the respective trust territories at times agreed upon with the administering authority; and (d) take these and other actions in conformity with the trusteeship agreements.

ARTICLE 88

The Trusteeship Council shall formulate a questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of each trust territory, and the Administering Authority for each trust territory within the competence of the General Assembly shall make an annual report to the General Assembly upon the basis of such questionnaire.

VOTING

ARTICLE 89

1. Each member of the Trusteeship Council shall have one vote.

2. Decisions of the Trusteeship Council shall be taken by a majority of the members present and voting.

PROCEDURE

ARTICLE 90

1. The Trusteeship Council shall adopt its own rules of procedure, including the method of selecting its president.

2. The Trusteeship Council shall meet as required in accordance with its rules, which shall include provisions for the convening of meetings on the request of a majority of its members.

ARTICLE 91

The Trusteeship Council shall, when appropriate, avail itself of the assistance of the Economic and Social Council, and of the specialized agencies in regard to matters with which they are respectively concerned.

CHAPTER XIV

The International Court of Justice

ARTICLE 92

The International Court of Justice shall be the principal judicial organ of the United Nations.

Made in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, placing each territory under the trusteeship system, and until such agreements have been concluded, nothing in this chapter shall be construed in or of itself to alter in any manner the rights whatsoever of any states or any peoples or the terms of existing international instruments to which members may respectively be parties.

2. Paragraph 1 of this article shall not be interpreted as giving grounds for delay or postponement of the negotiation and conclusion of such agreements for placing mandated and other territories under the trusteeship system as may be concluded in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

ARTICLE 93

1. All members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to the statute of the International Court of Justice.

2. A state which is not a member of the United Nations may become party to the statute of the International Court of Justice on conditions to be determined in each case by the General Assembly upon recommendation of the Security Council.

ARTICLE 94

1. Each member of the United Nations undertakes to comply with the decision of the International Court of Justice in any case to which it is a party.

2. If any party to a case fails to perform the obligations incumbent upon it under a judgment rendered by the court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council, which may, if it deems it necessary, make recommendations or decide upon measures to be taken to give effect to the judgment.

ARTICLE 95

Nothing in the present charter shall prevent members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virture of agreements already in excistence or which may be concluded in the future.

ARTICLE 96

1. The General Assembly or the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question.

2. Other organs of the United Nations and Specialized Agencies brought into relationship with it, which may at any time be so authorized by the General Assembly, may also request advisory opinions of the court on legal questions arising within the scope of their activities.

CHAPTER XV

The Secretariat

ARTICLE 97

There shall be a Secretariat comprising a secretary-general and such staff as the organization may require. The secretary-general shall be appointed by the General Assembly on the recommendation of the Security Council. He shall be the chief administrative officer of the organization.

ARTICLE 98

The secretary-general shall act in that capacity in all meetings of the General Assembly, of the Security Council, of the Economic and Social Council and of the Trusteeship Council, and shall perform such other functions as are entrusted to him by these organs. The secretary-general shall make an annual report to the General Assembly on the work of the organization.

ARTICLE 99

The secretary-general may bring to the attention of the Security Council any matter which in his opinion might threaten international peace and security.

ARTICLE 100

1. In the performance of their duties the secretary-general and the staffs shall be responsible only to the organization. They shall not seek or receive instructions from any government or from any other authority external to the organization. They shall refrain from any action which might reflect on their position as international officials.

2. Each member of the organization undertakes to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the secretary-general and the staff and not to seek to influence them in the discharge of their responsibilities.

ARTICLE 101

1. The staff shall be appointed by the secretary-general under regulations established by the General Assembly.

2. Appropriate staffs shall be permanently assigned to the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council, and, as required to other organs of the United Nations.

3. The paramount consideration in the employment of the staff and in the determination of the conditions of service shall be the necessity of securing the highest standard of efficiency, competence and integrity. Due regard shall be paid to the importance of recruiting the staff on as wide a geographical basis as possible.

CHAPTER XVI

Miscellaneous Provisions

ARTICLE 102

1. Every treaty and every international agreement entered into by any member of the United Nations after the present charter comes into force shall as soon as possible be registered with the Secretariat and published by it.

2. No party to any such treaty or international agreement which has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 1 of this article may invoke that treaty or agreement before any organ of the United Nations.

ARTICLE 103

In the event of a conflict between the obligations of the members of the United Nations under the present charter and any other international obligations to which they are subject, their obligations under the present charter shall prevail.

ARTICLE 104

The organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its members such legal capacity as may be necessary for the exercise of its functions and the fulfillment of its purposes.

ARTICLE 105

1. The organization shall enjoy in the territory of each of its members such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the fulfillment of its purposes.

2. Representatives of the members of the organization and officials of the organization shall similarly enjoy such privileges and immunities as are necessary for the independent exercise of their functions in connection with the organization.

3. The General Assembly may make recommendations with a view to determining the details of the application of Paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article or may propose conventions to the members for this purpose.

CHAPTER XVII

Transitional Security Arrangements

ARTICLE 106

Pending the coming into force of such special agreements referred to in Article 43 as in the opinion of the Security Council enable it to begin the exercise of its responsibilities under Article 46, the parties to the four-nation declaration, signed at Moscow, October 30, 1943, and France, shall, in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 5 of that declaration, consult with one another and as occasion arises with other members of the organization with a view to such joint action on behalf of the organization as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

ARTICLE 107

Nothing in the present charter shall invalidate or preclude action in relation to any state which during the Second World War has been an enemy of any signatory to the present charter, taken or authorized as a result of that war by the governments having responsibility for such action.

CHAPTER XVIII

Amendments

ARTICLE 108

Amendments to the present charter shall come into force for all members of the organization when they have been adopted by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the General Assembly and ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two thirds of the members of the organization, including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

ARTICLE 109

1. A general conference of the members of the United Nations for the purpose of reviewing the present charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. Each member shall have one vote in the conference.

2. Any modification of the present charter recommended by a two-thirds vote of the conference shall take effect when ratified in accordance with their respective constitutional processes by two-thirds of the members of the organization including all the permanent members of the Security Council.

3. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly following the entry into force of the present charter, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of that session of the General Assembly, and the conference shall be held if so decided by a majority vote of the members of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council.

CHAPTER XIX

Ratification and Signature

ARTICLE 110

1. The present charter shall be ratified by the signatory states in accordance with their respective constitutional processes.

2. Ratification shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall notify all the signatory states of each deposit as well as the secretary general of the organization when he has been elected.

3. The present charter shall come into force upon the deposit of ratifications by the United States of America, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Republic of China, and France, and by a majority of the other signatory states. A protocol of such deposit shall be drawn up by the Government of the United States of America which shall communicate copies thereof to all the signatory states.

4. The states signatory to the present charter which ratify it after it has come into force will become members of the United Nations on the date of the deposit of their respective ratifications.

ARTICLE 111

The present charter, of which the Chinese, English, French, Russian and Spanish texts are equally authentic, shall remain deposited in the archieves of the Government of the United States of America. Duly certified copies thereof shall be transmitted by that government to the governments of the other signatory states.

In faith whereof the representatives of the United Nations have signed the present charter.

What Social Security Can Mean to the South

By Ellen S. Woodward*

FEW PARTS of the country may be as seriously affected by the conversion from war to peace as the South.[1] With the possible exception of the Northwest, no region has had its economic and social landscape quite so transformed by the war; none may anticipate as rapid a shift in work opportunities and in income. The South therefore seems to me particularly in need of the kind of buttressing of living standards that an expanded social security program can provide.

It was not so many years ago that President Roosevelt called the South the Nation's number one economic problem. Few would recognize that description today. For the war has brought new industries to the South, more employment, higher wages, higher prices to its farmers, and more income all around. Billions have been spent on the expansion of military, manufacturing, and housing facilities. Shipyards, bomber factories, and oil-cracking plants now share the industrial skyline with the textile mill, the sawmill, and the cannery. It is in part to these war industries but also to the expansion of job opportunities in the traditional industries of the South that we must attribute the substantial rise in employment and the doubling of pay rolls between 1939 and 1943. Gains in wage income were paralleled by a substantial growth in farm income. With cotton at 20 cents a pound in 1944 as compared with 9 cents in 1939, and tobacco at 39 cents as compared with 15 cents, it is not surprising that income received by farm operators in the South more than doubled during these years. Little wonder that individual income in the South went up from $300 per capita in 1939 to more than $600 in 1943. That increase, as a matter of fact, was relatively greater than the increase in the United States as a whole.

But much of the South's gain may prove only temporary. We do not know what income will be after the war. Uncertain also is the future of farm prices, to which the well-being of much of the South is tied.

I am not suggesting that a crisis is inevitable in the South when the war ends, any more than it is inevitable in the country as a whole. In the South as elsewhere, much will depend upon the ingenuity, the economic imagination, the boldness we use in putting to peacetime uses our unparalleled productive capacity. Our success in this regard will have a special significance in the South, because no other region stands to gain or lose so much. The low living standards in the South are due primarily to her lack of industry and her dependence upon a limited number of specialized crops. If the gains of the last few years are to be retained, the South must find new industries and must learn to diversify her farming.

I stress the need and the opportunity for fundamental reforms in our southern economy because I want to put what I have to say about social security in its proper setting—not as the solution of the problem of low living standards in the South, but as a necessary adjunct to these other measures. If the South should make no progress in achieving economic parity with the rest of the Nation—which I do not believe will be the case—the contribution that could be made by an expanded social security program is, of course, even more important.

Existing Conditions

For all its recent gains, the South still lags behind the other regions in average income, in health as measured by mortality and morbidity rates, in schooling opportunities, and in most of the other things that go to make up the standard of living.

Per capita income in the South in the war year 1943 was only about two-thirds of that in the country as a whole. In my State, Mississippi, the average was $484, not even half as much as in the country as a whole and only one-third as much as in the richest State in our country.

Low income bears with special harshness upon children, and families with children, as a group, have relatively lower incomes than other families. The high birth rate of the South makes the region one of the chief factors in the continued growth and vigor of the American people. Since many of these children in later life migrate to other regions, the conditions which surround their birth and rearing are of national concern. The South, with more than one-fourth of the estimated civilian population in the United States in 1943 and one-fifth the national income, accounted for nearly one-third of the babies born in that year. Because poverty goes hand in hand with sickness, southern infants have a poorer chance of surviving the first year than children in other States. In 1942 all Southern States, with one exception, had infant death rates above the national average.

A high maternal death rate goes hand in hand with a high infant death rate. Motherhood is a greater hazard in the South than in other regions of the country. Deaths from causes associated with childbirth were in excess of the national average in each of the Southern States, rising in South Carolina to more than twice the national rate. One important reason for such high infant and maternal death rates in the South may be that in 9 of the 13 Southern States less than half the live births occurred in hospitals during 1942. In Mississippi, only 1 baby in 5 was born in a hospital; in Arkansas and Kentucky, 1 in 4; and in Alabama and South Carolina, 3 in 10; while in the Nation as a whole, nearly 7 babies in 10 had this protection at birth.

Southern children who survive the first year remain at a disadvantage as compared with children elsewhere. Many of the so-called children's diseases are more prevalent in the South than in other regions and exact a higher toll of child life.

Adequate food, clothing, and shelter are important for children but they also need health services, and the showing of Southern States in this respect is not very good. A sensitive indicator of the availability of adequate health services is the mortality rates of diseases that are controllable by public health measures, such as typhoid fever, malaria, and tuberculosis. Nearly all malaria deaths occur in the South. The mortality rate for typhoid and paratyphoid fever was four times the national average in Arkansas, at least twice as high in Florida, Kentucky, Louisiana, Oklahoma, South Carolina, and Texas. Deaths from tuberculosis were relatively more frequent in Alabama, Arkansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia than in the rest of the country.

[1] In this article, the "South" is used to refer to 13 States—Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia. The tables appended to the article, on which general statements in the text are based, give selected data on factors in social security for these States and for the United States as a whole.

The burden placed on treatment by the inadequacy of preventive measures is made heavier by the insufficiency of medical personnel and facilities. Doctors tend to stay out of rural areas and areas of low income. The South as a result has less than its proper share of the Nation's doctors, dentists, nurses, hospitals. In 1940 there was one active physician under 65 for every 935 persons in the United States as a whole. In Mississippi the ratio was 1 to 1,784, in Alabama 1 to 1,684. The drawing off of physicians into the armed forces has accentuated the disparity between the South and the rest of the country. In 1941 there were relatively half as many beds for civilians in general and special hospitals in Arkansas and Mississippi as in the United States as a whole. Lack of organized facilities for medical care and the special problem of distributing medical care in rural areas are also reflected in the extent to which the South lags in group hospitalization and prepaid medical care plans.

It is not surprising that the National Health Survey (1935–36) discovered that persons with disabling illnesses received less hospital care in Southern cities than in other cities of the country. Lack of proper food or enough food, poor water supply, poor sanitation, lack of medical attention, all add up in the South as they would anywhere else to lowered vitality, high sickness rates, high death rates, wasted manpower. Little wonder that more than half the registrants examined at local Selective Service boards and induction stations during the period February–August 1943 were rejected for military service in Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia. In no Southern State was the rejection rate below 40 percent. The national average was 39 percent, while the rate for the best State (Oregon) was only 24 percent. The North Carolina rate of 57 percent was the highest in the country. The eight States with the highest rejection rates were all in the South.

Operation of Present Social Security Program

The contribution which the present social security program is making to the amelioration of these conditions is important, if limited. Family income threatened by unemployment, certain types of disability, or old age or death of the family earner has been sustained in many thousands of families, and the development of State public health and child welfare programs has been stimulated, under the programs established by the Social Security Act. In 1944, $33 million was paid out to southern families under old-age and survivors insurance, $6 million under State unemployment compensation programs, and $139 million, $28 million, and $6 million to recipients of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind, respectively. Dollar for dollar, Federal grants to the States under the act for public assistance and welfare programs have probably gone farther in the South than in any other part of the country because of the generally meager character of the services in Southern States prior to 1935.

Helpful as these programs are, however, they fall short of their full potentialities, particularly for the South, because of the limitations of the present act. The act restricts coverage of old-age and survivors insurance and unemployment compensation to wage and salary workers in most industrial and commercial jobs. Left out are the self-employed, including farmers, shopkeepers, and most professional people; agricultural workers, domestic workers, and others. The three largest groups excluded—farmers, farm wage workers, and domestic workers—represent substantial proportions of the southern labor force.

Benefit rights under both old-age and survivors insurance and unemployment compensation depend not only on employment in covered industry but also on continuity of such employment. Where opportunities for covered employment are relatively fewer, as in the South, the shifts of workers between covered and noncovered jobs seriously affect their chance of building up benefit rights. A person who works part of the year on a farm and part in a sawmill or on a construction project has less chance to build up benefit rights than a worker in a textile mill the year round, although both contribute to the insurance funds while they are in covered jobs.

Largely as a result of differences in wage levels and in continuity of covered employment, average old-age and survivors insurance benefits are lower in the South than in the United States as a whole. A larger proportion of all beneficiaries in the South have their benefits increased by the operation of the minimum benefit provision. In 1940, the minimum $10 benefit was awarded to one in every four primary beneficiaries in Mississippi. A higher minimum benefit would be of particular value to the South.

The situation in unemployment compensation is perhaps somewhat more disadvantageous in the South, because the laws of most Southern States are more restrictive in coverage than those of their neighbors to the North and West. Of the 29 States which cover employees in establishments with fewer than 8 workers, only 3 are in the South. These are Arkansas, Kentucky, and Louisiana. This exclusion of employees in smaller firms, of course, reduces opportunities for covered employment and intensifies the problem of movement between covered and noncovered employment, already large in Southern States because they are predominantly agricultural. Small wonder that the relative number of claims for unemployment benefits disallowed because of insufficient wage credits is higher in the South than elsewhere.

Experience throughout the country indicates that too many workers have such meager rights to unemployment benefits that they use up all the benefits due them before they can get a new job, even in relatively prosperous times. In Texas more than half the beneficiaries in 1944 exhausted their benefit rights. Not only the law itself, but administrative interpretation and legal decisions are far too severe in depriving workers of benefits when they have had to leave a job for personal reasons, such as health or family situations, and fail to get other work when they are able again to take a job. Provisions in the laws of Southern States make southern workers particularly vulnerable in this respect.

Many families deprived of income as a result of unemployment, disability, or death of the family earner do not qualify for insurance payments under the act but are eligible for public aid. The public assistance titles of the act, establishing Federal-State programs of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind, are especially important to the South because of the large proportion of workers affected by the limitations in insurance coverage. The usefulness of the public assistance programs in sustaining living standards is circumscribed, however, by present matching provisions governing Federal aid, by the related problem of low State fiscal capacity, and by State-imposed restrictions on eligibility which hark back to an earlier, harsher era in public assistance.

Let us take, for example, aid to dependent children, which provides assistance to children who have lost parental support or care through death, incapacity, or continued absence from home. Southern families received $28 million under this program in 1944. That is very much more than would have been paid had there been no Social Security Act; at the time of the passage of the act in 1935, laws for aid to dependent children were in effect in only 8 Southern States, and annual expenditures for such aid were less than $700,000. But there is considerable evidence that the southern children are not getting their proper share of the benefits of the program. At the end of 1943 the South, with 33 percent of the children in the country under 18, accounted for 31 percent of the number of children receiving this form of assistance. Since there should be a relation between need and eligibility for assistance, surely the South, with its greater poverty, should have shown a higher rather than a lower than average proportion of children receiving assistance. In Southern States, unlike most others, low recipient rates go hand in hand with small payments. Southern families in 1944 received only 21 percent of the total amount of payments made for aid to dependent children.

The principal reason for the poor showing of the South in this respect is the 50–50 matching requirement of the act. Most Southern States cannot put up as much money for public assistance as Northern or Western States, because they have less. As a result they get less than their share of Federal funds, which can only match what the State or the State and its localities provide. With one-third of the Nation's children the South received only one-fourth of Federal grants in 1944 for aid to dependent children.

Limited funds not only reduce the amount of assistance received by the family on the rolls but keep many eligible families off the rolls altogether. Nearly half the families whose application for aid to dependent children was pending at the end of March 1945 were in the South.

Improvements in the Social Security Program

Nearly 10 years have passed since the States and the Federal Government began their joint venture under the Social Security Act to improve the well-being of our people. It is time to ask ourselves how effectively our program fulfills the intention of Congress "to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision" for the security of their people.

This question is especially pertinent today because of the many changes that will come in the wake of the war. A period of economic transition is a testing time for the Nation's social security program. To give it the strength and the resiliency it will need to carry us through the trying days ahead certain changes will be necessary.

If the country recognizes the need for and makes the changes, the South will benefit perhaps just a little more than the rest of the country. The reasons are written large in the evidence of the South's need for greater social security and on the limitation of its place in the present insurance and assistance programs under the Social Security Act.

There is all but universal agreement with the view of the Social Security Board that the insurance protection under the act should be extended to all gainfully employed persons. Such an extension would affect primarily the self-employed (including farmers), farm wage workers, and domestic workers. Nowhere would the effects be quite as far-reaching as in the South, because in no other major region of the country do these groups bulk so large in the working population. Universal coverage of the population, or the nearest practical thing to it, would put an end to taxation without benefit for that large body of workers in the South today who move during the course of the year between covered and noncovered employment, and would make the right to insurance a possibility for farmers and for millions of wage workers on and off farms who now are barred from the system by the law.

Because illness is relatively more frequent in the South, it is the South which would benefit most immediately perhaps from the adoption of the Board's recommendation that wage loss due to sickness or disability and the cost of necessary medical and hospital care be insured under the act. Except for work-connected injury and provisions for veterans, families in the United States today must count on private means or on public assistance when income ceases because of the family earner's illness. By encouraging early treatment of illness and the correction of remediable disabilities, medical care insurance will prevent much of the loss of earnings now attributable to the incapacity or death of the family earner. By providing benefits to replace earnings lost because of incapacity, disability insurance will greatly reduce the need for public assistance. In recent years sickness has been the principal reason for applications for aid in cities reporting regularly to the Board on their general assistance programs.

A medical care program cannot be effective, of course, without doctors and hospitals. To me one of the signal attractions of a program of medical care insurance is that it will help to bring more doctors and hospitals to the South. If funds to pay for hospital care are assured, many communities will be able to find the capital resources to build new hospitals; other communities will need financial aid for hospital construction. Similarly, if doctors are assured of adequate payment for their services and of modern facilities with which to work, they will be less reluctant to settle in the country or in poor communities.

Important too in sustaining family income is an adequate unemployment compensation system, adequate in coverage and in amount and duration of benefits. It is estimated that demobilized servicemen and employees in war-manufacturing industries in Southern States will represent between 20 and 30 percent of April 1940 employment. Because unemployment benefit provisions vary from State to State, this common problem will be handled in a different way in each State. The Social Security Board believes that responsibility for unemployment compensation cannot safely be divided among 51 separate systems and has recommended a uniform Nation-wide program under Federal auspices. This proposal would permit swift concerted action to harmonize insurance activities with national policy during the change-over of our economic system to peace. Valuable to the South, too, would be the extension of coverage, recommended by the Board, to wage and salary workers now outside the system.

We also need improvements in our public assistance programs. However much we extend the coverage and liberalize eligibility requirements and benefit amounts in social insurance, some persons and families will fail to qualify for benefits for one reason or another. When such persons are in need they should be able to turn to an adequately financed assistance program for help.

The first and most obvious change indicated is a shift from a 50-percent to a variable-matching basis in the distribution of Federal funds. At present the States that themselves spend more and therefore presumably need less Federal aid get the lion's share of Federal funds. Under the Board's proposal, the Federal share would remain at 50 percent for States that do not qualify for additional aid, but would be increased for States with limited resources, as measured, for example, by per capita income.

Another limitation in the present act that could be removed with advantage to all the States is the maximum on the amount of the individual payment which the Board may match—$40 in old-age assistance and aid to the blind and $18 (first child) and $12 (all other children) in aid to dependent children. This restriction is particularly severe in the last program because the maximums are so low. States can and do spend more in individual cases than is matched by the Federal Government, but there is less of such nonmatchable assistance in the South because it is least able to afford it.

At present the Board may match payments on behalf of needy children aged 16 and 17 only if they are attending school regularly. Because suitable schools for older children are not available in some areas, particularly in the South, and because for other reasons school attendance may not be feasible or desirable, we would like to see this requirement also removed.

The requirement that only cash payments can be matched means in all three programs that Federal funds may not be used to meet costs of medical care given recipients except as they may be included in the cash payment. Our experience indicates that we need a more flexible method of sharing in medical costs, and the Board has therefore proposed that matching Federal funds be available to pay doctors and hospitals directly. Such an arrangement would enable Southern States to make more effective use of their limited medical facilities. If the Board's broader recommendations for medical care insurance were adopted, public assistance recipients could be entitled to care on the same basis as insured workers, through contributions made on their behalf by public assistance agencies. Such payments also would be matchable with Federal funds.

In aid to dependent children, the act limits Federal participation to children who are in need because of a parent's death, incapacity, or absence from home. A child in need because his father has no job or earns too little to support the family cannot share in the Federal funds granted. There are other needy persons who do not fit into the three categories established under the act. They can turn for aid only to the general assistance program. In 1943, 7 of the 14 States that depended wholly on local funds for general assistance were in the South. In some of these States there were large areas without even local funds for general assistance. The Board believes that Federal grants to the States for general assistance will make it possible for States to set up a program where none now exists and to raise assistance standards in States that have a program but little money to spend. With needed reforms in the special categories, this change should give public assistance as a whole a flexibility of great importance in the immediate postwar years.

Summary

The war has changed the yardsticks by which we measure social values. More of us are beginning to see that we must reduce regional inequalities in wealth, in opportunities, in community services if our country is to prosper as a whole. Members of the armed forces from all parts of the country are on an equal footing with respect to pay, medical care, vocational rehabilitation, allowances to dependents, provisions for disability, and other veterans' compensation. Can we say the same of the peacetime risks veterans and their families will meet after the war?

Some of the inequalities in our social security programs stem directly from inequalities in the flow of income. As long as wage rates differ and we tie our benefit scale to wages, there will be differences in benefit amounts. Only fundamental economic changes can change this situation. I have in mind for effective action today and for the immediate future something more modest and more manageable—changes in our social security legislation which will take the sharp edge off some of the differences.

This objective does not necessitate special legislation for the South. It can be attained by the simple process of amending the Social Security Act along lines generally recognized as desirable for all parts of the country. The case for strengthening and extending our social insurance and public assistance systems rests in the last analysis upon the needs of the American people as a whole. The present is singularly auspicious, in the words of the Board's Ninth Annual Report, for making the changes I have been discussing. That the adoption of these changes will yield extra dividends in the South is a development with which no one, least of all a Southerner, would quarrel.

Give FEPC a Priority

WITH BATTLES against the exponents of race hatred being won on all military fronts, the people of America face victory or defeat on whether we shall have fair employment practices at home. The President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice was set up to make available to the nation's industry in wartime the energies and skills of all men and women regardless of race, creed, color or national origin.

As a temporary committee, FEPC has made a major contribution to the winning of the war through enforcing the American principle that all men and women should have an equal opportunity to earn a living and to contribute to the nation's productive power. This has been done despite the handicap of limited jurisdiction and limited enforcement powers.

FEPC is a matter of concern not only to a few workers. As long as one worker is turned away or discriminated against because he is a Negro or foreign-born, a Catholic or a Jew, no one's job is safe. A nation in which the majority of people belong to one minority or another, such as the U. S. A. is, cannot afford to lose the gains made by the FEPC.

We need FEPC to help in war production until victory; to aid in the equitable distribution of jobs in the reconversion period; to help avoid chaos in gearing America to full production necessary in the postwar years. Both the Republican and Democratic parties have officially pledged themselves to the establishment of a permanent, effective FEPC.

Congress must not be allowed to stall this vital issue. Bills are pending in both houses which would create a permanent, effective FEPC with "teeth." Passage of state laws for fair employment practices, while important as an indication of the sentiments of the people, leave uncovered the major part of American industry. A federal FEPC is needed to cover plants under contract to the government, government agencies and firms engaged in interstate commerce.

In profound sorrow at the death of Franklin Delano Roosevelt, we accept increased responsibility to carry out the program for which he fought and died—freedom and security for all mankind. A basic part of this program is the establishment of a permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission. Such a commission will be an enduring monument to the true democracy he exemplified.

The Labor Committee Bill, H.R. 2232, representing a combination of more than a dozen bills for a permanent, effective FEPC introduced in the House, was reported out of the House Committee on Labor on Feb. 20, with strong bi-partisan support, with the recommendation that it be passed.

In an effort to keep the bill from coming before the entire House for debate and vote, the Rules Committee refused to give it a place on the calendar. Finally on Apr. 27 Rep. Mary T. Norton (D-N.J.), leader of the bill's bi-partisan supporters in the House, introduced Discharge Petition No. 4 to release the bill automatically from the Rules Committee's jurisdiction when 218 Congressmen have signed the Petition.

The same provisions for a permanent, effective FEPC are incorporated in S. 101. A counter-proposal which would limit the FEPC to "study" of discrimination in employment has been introduced by Sen. Taft of Ohio; it's generally considered completely inadequate and unacceptable.

Be sure your Congressman signs Discharge Petition No. 4 —IMMEDIATELY.

A definite commitment from your Congressman that he will vote for H.R. 2232 WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

A definite commitment from your two Senators that they will each vote for S. 101 WITHOUT AMENDMENT.

A further commitment that your Congressman and Senators will work with their party leaders to do everything possible to bring both bills to a favorable vote without further delay.

● Whether or not the historic achievements of the FEPC are actually permitted to continue through making this agency permanent depends on you—you—me—your neighbor and mine. Everyone who ever worked in our nation's capitol on legislative issues knows that the people on Main Street in every part of America are the ones who really can decide these issues. No high-powered lobby in Washington can defeat FEPC if the folks back home send in postcards, letters and wires making their sentiments clearly known.
Here's what needs to be done:

Keep yourself and your organization in touch with the NFCL national office or with your own organization's or union's national office so that week by week you have exact information on the status of this FEPC fight. Know how to make every letter or postcard or wire most effective. Know exactly where the "ball" is, keep your eyes on it so you know what to do next.

When you get the information about what action is needed, send your own letter or postcard to the members of Congress or Senate who are designated as important at that particular time. If it is an emergency, send a wire. (If there's time, a night letter telegram is cheapest.)

At the same time, get in touch with the chairman of the legislative committee (or public affairs or political action committee) of your organization and see that a similar communication goes from the organization itself.
If the group you belong to does not have an emergency telephone squad, organize one. Give each member of the squad a list of 10 or 15 persons to be called whenever word comes in that additional action is needed. See that the squad covers not only members of your own organization but key community leaders who, in turn, will reach out to other groups in your community. Pile up the number of letters and postcards from rank-and-file members as well as leaders of organizations.

If you or any other individual or any organization sends a communication to a Senator or Congressman and you get a general answer—WRITE OR WIRE AGAIN insisting upon a specific commitment to support in every way the fight for a permanent FEPC in the Senate and in the House. DON'T TAKE GENERALITIES OR "NO" FOR AN ANSWER.

Find out where your Congressman and Senators live at home, their addresses and who their secretaries are. When one is coming in from Washington for a home visit, see that one or more groups visit the Senator or Congressman personally and obtain specific commitments in support of FEPC. If you cannot see him on one visit, keep after him.

Organize small but well-informed delegations of citizens to visit every newspaper editor—of the general, labor, farm and other press—in your community and get each editor to write a favorable editorial on S. 101 and H.R. 2232. Clip it out and send to your Congressman and two Senators, asking each of them to put it in the Congressional Record. Organize a flood of letters to the editors in support of FEPC.

Ask the program director of any local or area radio station for time for outstanding speakers (such as churchmen or other civic leaders) to give 15 minute talks on FEPC. (When your Senators or Congressman are home, try to arrange time for each to speak favorably over the radio on FEPC.) Get additional time for 15 or 30 minute radio dramatizations on FEPC—either scripts written by local talent or obtained through the NFCL or other national offices.

Contact every minister, priest or rabbi in the community asking each to devote time in a sermon or discussion group or in club meetings to FEPC. (Every major religious group has testified before both House and Senate committees in support of FEPC and has worked actively with both Senators and Congressmen for a permanent FEPC.) Discuss with other community groups the possibility of holding community-wide rallies for a permanent FEPC.

● All of these suggestions are directed to the one single purpose of making certain that your Congressmen and your two Senators receive an increasing volume of communications insisting that they support this fight for a permanent FEPC without delay. Here are just a few ideas: you'll find others as you work. Constantly planned and consistent sustained activity back home is up to you—and it can tip the scales in favor of a permanent FEPC.

Legislation

A Permanent
FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICE COMMISSION

"The right to a job is . . . the right to live."

This is rooted in the American tradition as set forth in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights, but "basic law is necessary to implement our Constitution, which gives to all people the right and freedom to work."

A PERMANENT FEPC

1941

In the lend-lease period before Pearl Harbor America was considered the "arsenal of democracy." Workers were sought to man machines for war production, but barriers of prejudice stood between segments of workers and idle machines. All minorities were affected, but Negroes, as the largest group, suffered most.

JUNE, 1941

Sensing the frustration of minority groups denied the opportunity to help America in the all-out war effort, A. Philip Randolph, International President of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, called a conference of Negro leadership to work constructively on the problem. Having exhausted all other democratic means of obtaining action from government and industry, the leaders decided to call a March on Washington as a dramatic means of presenting discrimination in employment. Negroes all over the country prepared for this demonstration. However, there was no need to march, for after an historic conference at the White House President Rooosevelt on issued Executive Order 8802, establishing the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice to eliminate discrimination in war employment because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry. Thus, although Negroes initiated the movement which resulted in the FEPC, all minorities and the whole nation benefited.

JUNE 25, 1941

1942- - -

The President's FEPC has had extraordinary success, but it has had its failures, too, because it is not backed by law and has no authority to enforce its orders. Leaders began to ask: "Why not strengthen this Committee? Why not make it permanent? If it is unfair to discriminate in wartime, isn't it equally unfair to discriminate in peacetime?" Again Mr. Randolph took the initiative and on

DECEMBER 30, 1943

in a conference of leaders in Washington—this time broadened to include Negro and white, civic, union and religious leaders—there was established the National Council for a Permanent Fair Employment Practice Commis- sion. Honorary Chairmen are Senators Arthur Capper and Robert F. Wagner, and the working Co-Chairmen are A. Philip Randolph and Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers.

JANUARY, 1944

The Dawson-Scanlon-LaFollette bills for a Permanent FEPC were introduced in the House of Representatives and referred to the Committee on Labor, chaired by Mrs. Mary T. Norton. Preliminary hearings were held on the bills in June 1944, at which prominent religious, civic, and union representatives testified in favor of the bills.

FEBRUARY, 1944

The National Council for a Permanent FEPC established offices in Washington, D. C., with an interracial, interfaith staff.

JUNE 23, 1944

Senator Dennis Chavez of New Mexico introduced Bill S. 2048 (companion to the House bill) in the Senate with the following co-sponsors: Senators Downey, Wagner, Murray, Capper, and Langer. This bill was referred to the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, chaired by Senator Thomas of Utah. Chairman Thomas appointed Senator Chavez chairman of a sub-committee to conduct hearings.

JUNE, 1944

The Republican National Convention put into the Party platform a plank calling for a Permanent FEPC. Both presidential candidates and scores of candidates for Senate and House advocated a Permanent FEPC in their campaign speeches.

AUGUST AND SEPTEMBER, 1944

Hearings were held before the Senate Sub-committee on Education and Labor, at which prominent religious and labor leaders testified as follows:

Rt. Rev. Msgr. John A. Ryan, D. C., nationally known Catholic leader: "Discrimination, whether practiced by employees or employers, is definitely immoral . . . . as if they committed theft or murder. . . ."

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, American Jewish Congress: "I rest my case for the permanence of the Fair Employment Practice Committee on one basic truth: Racial, religious discrimination in the field of employment is a denial of democracy and is of the essence of fascism. . . ."

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, Federal Council of Churches of Christ: "The religious forces and I believe the democratic forces of the United States face a fundamental problem here, and that is finding concrete means to translate our ethical ideals into the realities of economic justice and racial brotherhood. . . ."

Rabbi J. X. Cohen, Commission of Economic Discrimination: "Discrimination against Jewish persons in the economic field . . . . is a paramount issue confronting American Jewry. . . ."

Rev. William H. Jernagin, Fraternal Council of Negro Churches: "Jobs and security must be provided for all our citizens if we expect our institutions of freedom to survive. . . . The world and human beings are so made that you cannot organize life securely or permanently on injustice and oppression. . . ."

Dr. Carlos Castaneda, social worker: "Our Spanish-speaking population in the Southwest . . . . are ill-dressed, ill-fed, ill-cared for medically, and ill-educated, all because of the low economic standard to which they have been relegated as the result of restricting their employment. . . ."

William Kohn, President Emeritus, Upholsterers International Union, AFL: "Any employer or trade-union official who discriminates against workers on account of race, creed, color, or national origin in employment . . . . is paving the way for sharp racial conflicts in the U. S., compared to which the Detroit race riot would look like a street brawl. . . ."

James B. Carey, Executive Secretary, CIO: "It is a matter of practical common sense. The unions that are affiliated to the CIO have found that discrimination against any minority of our citizens results in damage to the interests of all. . . ."

SEPTEMBER, 1944

Bill S. 2048 was reported out favorably by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

NOVEMBER, 1944

Bill H. R. 3986 was reported out favorably by the House Committee on Labor.

DECEMBER, 1944

A campaign-weary 78th Congress went home for Xmas recess leaving much unfinished business behind, including the bills to establish a Permanent Fair Employment Practice Commission.

JANUARY, 1945

Encouraged by the progress made in the 78th Congress, the National Council for a Permanent FEPC arranged for reintroduction of bills in the 79th Congress.

In the House, Congressman Charles M. LaFollette (R. Ind.) took the lead, followed in quick succession by several Representatives of both parties: Joseph Clark Baldwin (N. Y.), Geo. H. Bender (O.), Charles R. Clason (Mass.), Wm. L. Dawson (Ill.), Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.), Helen Gahagan Douglas (Calif.), Clyde G. Doyle (Calif.), Frank E. Hook (Mich.), Mary T. Norton (N. J.), Adam C. Powell, Jr. (N. Y.), and John M. Vorys (O).

In the Senate, Senator Dennis Chavez (D., N. M.) introduced a companion bill, S. 101, with six co-sponsors: Senators Murray, Downey, Wagner, Aiken, Capper, and Langer.

FEBRUARY, 1945

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) introduced a Senate bill to create a Permanent FEPC without enforcement powers. Public reaction was instantaneous. Other important Republican leaders agreed with church, civic, and labor groups that such an FEPC would be worthless.

The House Labor Committee, again chaired by Mrs. Mary T. Norton, reported favorably H. R. 2232 with full committee backing. The Senate Committee on Education and Labor (Senator James E. Murray, Chairman) plans early action. Both bills will soon come to floor of House and Senate for discussion and vote.

What You Can Do

1. Send a contribution to the National Council for a Permanent FEPC, 930 F Street, N. W., Washington 4, D. C.
2. Write your Senators and Representatives urging them to vigorously support and vote for the bills to make FEPC permanent.

THE WORK DISCUSSION GROUPS

In planning the Conference program, the Committee has provided general meetings at which delegates will have the opportunity of hearing outstanding leaders in America today. These leaders will undoubtedly stimulate their audiences to serious and constructive thinking.

But the Committee has also planned that the Citizenship Conference will be a work conference—that the meetings will not consist solely of listening to speeches, no matter how wise they may be; that opportunity will be given for men and women of wide interests and varied backgrounds to meet in smaller groups where they can clarify their thinking and gain from the give-and-take of wisely guided democratic discussion.

The Committee places a great deal of faith in the outcome of the work group discussions and feels that the Conference will succeed to the extent that these meetings stimulate thought and effective action.

Those responsible for the group discussions were carefully chosen and are people of wide experience who can be expected to know the best techniques for working with the discussion groups during the three periods assigned for group meetings.

In the discussion groups, responsibilities and rights of citizenship will be discussed on three fronts:

1. The world-minded American citizen
2. Basic human rights and attendant responsibilities
3. Citizenship in action in the local community.

Varying from the pattern of previous years where conferees have discussed the contributions of special-interest groups to citizenship, this year all groups will consider simultaneously the same problems, in an effort to arrive at some general agreements and devise a program of joint action. See delegate card for discussion group assignment.

REASONS FOR THE CONFERENCES

In calling the National Conferences on Citizenship, the Committee in charge has had in mind from the beginning the following pertinent points:

That never before in the history of the world has it been so important to keep civic interest and participation at a high level;

That there are many leading national organizations which play a part or can play a part in developing better practices in good citizenship;

That these organizations are all working independently, with much duplication and with varying degrees of success;

That the contributions of these organizations have had real value, and that this value can be increased many fold if the various group efforts are coordinated;

That there are practices, programs, and techniques which are effective in developing good citizenship—and other practices, programs, and techniques which are of doubtful or negative value;

That there is need for a concerted nationwide effort to evaluate and attempt to improve the programs of various groups;

That there is often a tendency for sincerely interested groups to pay more attention to the dramatic and spectacular;

That there is likewise the danger of a group developing programs which have more results in the way of publicizing the group itself than in developing effective and constructive citizenship;

That the ineffectiveness of such programs often comes not from wilful desire to advertise one's good deeds, but from a lack of knowledge of types of programs which have proved successful;

That it would, therefore, be highly desirable to bring together in conferences representatives of the various outstanding civic, religious, educational, professional, industrial, labor, and communications groups of the country who would give several days' serious attention to the concrete objectives as stated on page one of this program.

OBJECTIVES OF THE CONFERENCE

To re-examine the functions and duties of American citizenship in today's world.

To assist in the development of more dynamic procedures for making citizenship more effective.

To indicate the ways and means by which various organizations may contribute concretely to the development of a more active, alert, enlightened, conscientious, and progressive citizenry in our country.

HEADQUARTERS

The Willard is the Conference Hotel Headquarters. Please note, however, that registration is at the Great Hall in the Department of Justice.

REGISTRATION

The Great Hall of the Department of Justice will be the Conference Headquarters, where registration and information desks will be located. Registration fee of $3 covers not only the regular registration fee but also the luncheon on Monday. The price of the dinner on Monday evening is $5, and that of the luncheon Tuesday $3. Dinner and luncheon meetings are integral parts of the program, and delegates should plan to attend all three, as keynote speeches for discussion groups and general announcements will be made at these meetings.

Registration at the Great Hall:

3:00 to 6:00 P. M. Sunday, and
9:00 to 6:00 P. M. Monday and Tuesday

Though preferable, it will not be absolutely necessary to register prior to the First General Session. The personal invitation mailed to each delegate will admit him to the Auditorium of the Department of Interior where the First General Session will be held.

EXHIBITS

The Great Hall of the Department of Justice will be used to exhibit citizenship materials. Exhibits will be open to delegates on Sunday from 3:00 to 6:00 P.M., on Monday and Tuesday from 9:00 A.M. to 6:00 P.M. In addition, during the Conference movies will be shown in the Cabinet Room of the Willard Hotel, and records will be played in the Willard Hotel: Parlor D on Monday and Parlor E on Tuesday.

$2700 CHECKED OFF

Approximately $2700.00 will be turned over to officers of the Co-op by Pet Milk Company officials, in accordance with authorizations signed by Farmers Union members in Greene County. Money allocated to the state and local Farmers Union organizations from this check-off will be used to employ necessary personnel and to expand the Farmers Union program in Greene County and surrounding areas.

FUNDS FOR LOCAL, STATE, NATIONAL USE

The $5.00 dues checked off for each member will be distributed according to the decision of the Tennessee Farmers Union Committee as follows: 50c to the local union, $3.00 to the state Farmers Union organization, $1.00 to the National Farmers Union, and 50c to the UNION FARMER.

A majority of the state funds will be used in this East Tennessee area in which they were collected, in addition to the local union's share of the funds.

"When farmers hire their own representative and place him in the milk plant, to observe the weighing and testing of their milk, they have made a business-like step. It puts selling milk on the same basis as selling tobacco, corn or any other commodity.

PRICE REPRESENTATION

"Besides weight and test, farmers want to be in a position to be able to have representation with the milk companies when it comes to prices paid for milk also. In the history of farming, the tail has too often wagged the dog. It's time farmers planned to have their rightful say in regard to the products they work so hard to produce."

A majority of the state funds will be used in this East Tennessee area in which they were collected, in addition to the local union's share of the funds.

HATLEY SAYS MEMBERS PLEASED

H. N. Hatley, President of the East Tennessee Dairy Cooperative Association stated, "Members of the Co-op are pleased with the check-off. We are glad that we will receive more money for educational and other purposes in this area since the National Farmers Union established the $5.00 dues."

Signing Petition Against War . . .

Farmers and their wives at the annual picnic signed a petition to President Truman urging him to do everything possible to steer this country into a peaceful era rather than a destructive war.

Farmers Union Term Will Be Oct. 17 to 23 At Highlander

MONTEAGLE, Tenn.—The week of October 17 to 23 has been agreed upon for the Farmers Union School at Highlander Folk School, Myles Horton, Highlander Director of Organization for the Tennessee Farmers Union, announced. The Folk School is located on top of Cumberland Mountain, near Monteagle, Tennessee.

Farmers Union leaders all over the South will participate in planning the School. Among those who will assist in conducting the week-long term are: Aubrey Williams, President of the Alabama Farmers Union; J. D. Mott, Alabama State Organizer; Tom Ludwig, Manager of the Farmers Union Fertilizer Co-op; J. Albert Hopkins, President of the Arkansas Farmers Union; Jack Hustead, Secretary of the Virginia Farmers Union; A. C. Lange, President of the Tennessee Territorial Farmers Union; and H. N. Hatley, President of the East Tennessee Dairy Cooperative Association.

FOOD FOR TUITION

Although no tuition will be charged, plans have been made to ask Farmers Union locals to collect food from their members—canned goods, smoked meats, etc.—to help pay the cost of feeding members who attend the School.

DISCUSS FARMERS' PROBLEMS

Farm men and women sent by the local unions to the School will receive training in problems of interest to Southern locals. Discussions of how to set up and manage cooperatives, how to expand the membership, how to plan entertainment programs for locals, and similar questions will give all persons attending the School an opportunity to exchange ideas with members from other locals and outstanding Farmers Union leaders.

LOCALS SHOULD SELECT STUDENTS

Local unions are urged to begin now to select the representatives they want to send to the Schools. Farmers who attend the School are invited to bring their wives, or children over 16 years, with them.

Arkansas Union Sets Up Feed, Fertilizer Co-op

The Arkansas Farmers Union is now settng up a fertilizer and feed cooperative, President J. Albert Hopkins of that state announced last month. Tennessee Farmers Union President A. C. Lange and Tom Ludwig, Business Manager of the Farmers Union Fertilizer Cooperative, sat in on the organizational meeting of the new co-op.

At the recent annual convention of the Arkansas Union, held in Little Rock on Aug. 2-3, Lange and Ludwig spoke to the Union members of that state regarding the operations of the Farmers Union co-ops in Tennessee and Alabama.

COOPERATION

"We certainly appreciated the cooperation of the Farmers Union in our neighboring states in helping us get our Co-op set-up," Hopkins declared. 'The officers and the Board of Directors have been elected and we are now working on the by-laws," he reported after the convention.

"The Farmers Union in the three states needs to work toward the day when all three states can do business together on a regional basis," the Manager of the Fertilizer Co-op contends. Plans for shipping colloidal phosphate to Arkansas members were completed.

Peace, Not War, Farmers Tell President Truman

"We are against war and we ought to tell President Truman just that," one Farmers Union member told State President Aubrey Williams at the South Alabama Farmers Union picnic. Williams had just described to the gathering the destruction that would come to the whole world if it again envolves itself in global conflicts.

"Let's just take one of these posters down and give everyone present today a chance to sign his name to a petition to President Truman, saying we want to have a world of peace, not one of destruction," Williams told the farmers.

That is exactly what was done. Farmers and their wives waited their turns to sign the quickly improvised petition, written on the back of a poster.

Farmers' Prices Down But Food Prices Up

Are food prices high because of high farm prices and recent wage increases, as the corporations have been saying in the newspapers and over the radio?

Last year, the big bakers raised bread prices 2 cents a pound as the price per bushel of wheat increased on the commodity exchanges. Between January 12, 1948, and the present time the price of a bushel of wheat has fallen by 83¢ a bushel to $2.57 but the bakers have not lowered the price of bread.

Similarly the price of hogs to the meat packers has fallen by almost 15 per cent. In addition, the meat packers have just broken a strike of their employees for higher wages. But the price of meat is at an all time high.

The food trust, whose profits in 1947 were 16 per cent above 1946 records, are setting their sights for still greater profits in 1948, all at the expense of the consumer.

TRUMAN PROGRAM, CONGRESS REORGANIZATION IN HIGH GEAR

Attention in Washington this week was focused primarily on the far reaching House and Senate Committee shakeup and the Truman legislative program which got off to a running start. More than one thousand bills were introduced, two hundred in the Senate and eight hundred in the House covering a variety of subjects, including taxation, social security, health, abolition of the poll tax, Columbia Valley Authority, salary increases and many other subjects.

Curtailment of the powers of the House Rules Committee is considered here a pretty good indicator of how strong administration forces are. The other developments on the Committee front included changes in the Senate Labor and Education Committee, the Senate Finance Committee, and several of the House Committees, including Appropriations.

OF INTEREST TO FU is the new composition of the Senate Labor and Education Committee which includes no Democrats who are considered "conservative." New members are Hubert Humphrey (Minn), Paul Douglas (Ill.) and Matthew Neely (W. Va.) who are counted as strong liberals. The lineup of the Senate Finance Committee is not considered good. Among the anti-New Dealer Democrats on it are Walter George (Ga.), Harry F. Byrd (Va.) and Edwin C. Johnson (Col.). Johnson also heads the Trade Policies Subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee. He along with Senator McMahon has indicated that he is in accord with the plan of Senator Capehart, previous chairman of the Committee, to revise our anti-trust laws.

MORE BAD NEWS is the new lineup of the House Appropriations Subcommittee which must approve funds for national resources development. This Interior Appropriations Subcommittee will be highly conservative and will probably attempt to block funds for the expanded power and irrigation development which the President asked for.

PATTON DEMAND FOR FORRESTAL OUTSTER GETS GOOD RESPONSE

President Patton's demand that Secretary of Defense be replaced by "a civilian with a civilian heart and mind" attracted widespread attention in the press throughout the nation, as well as resulting in a number of letters commending him for the stand he took. One individual in Chicago wrote that Patton's statement was corageous and far-reaching and that he deserved the highest commendation for calling for Forrestal's ouster and for a 50% reduction in military expenditures.

IN PATTON'S STATEMENT released to the press, he suggested that President Truman appoint Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, or former Governor Ellis Arnall of Georgia to succeed Forrestal. The statement was prompted by Forrestal's first annual report which would, Patton pointed out, deliver into the hands of the military for the first time in this country's history the power to make war. "The report," Patton said, "regards the United States as practically already at war."

It is significant that there is a distinct dampening of sentiment here in the capital over expansion of our military program and giving more power to the Brass Hats in the Pentagon. Congressmen contacted by FU representatives believe that the President's request for Universal Military Training will not be acted on unless there is a drastic change in the international situation.

STORAGE AND DISTRIBUTION PLAN PRESENTED TO BRANNAN

FU representatives in meetings this week with James B. Carey, CIO vice president, and Secretary of Agriculture Brannan discussed further suggestions formulated by North Dakota State President Glenn Talbott, NFU President Patton and GTA Manager Thatcher for storing and processing farm commodities in surplus supply. Previously, Talbott and Patton had pointed out that a solution of the surplus problem must include extensive building of warehouses both in rural and urban areas, feeling that the Government should make funds available to buy or lease such storage facilities as are deemed necessary.

These ideas are in line with those expressed recently by President Patton at state conventions and in confeerences with congressional and USDA officials. Mr. Brannan himself is receptive to such ideas and informed FU representatives that the plan to establish a "grain bank" with storage facilities of upwardof a billion bushels of grain for use in the event of crop failures was being seriously studied by the Department

ICC HIKES FREIGHT RATES

Despite the testimony of FU representatives and the Secretary of Agriculture and others, the Interstate Commerce Commission this week authorized an emergency rise in freight rates which will add about 425 million dollars to the annual revenue of the railroads. Freight rates at the present time are 44% higher than they were in 1949.

YEOMANS ADVISES USDA OF EXTENSION SERVICE DOMINATION

President Ed Yeomans this week together with other FU representatives, conferred at some length with Under Secretary Al Loveland and Production and Marketing Administrator Ralph Trigg regarding USDA administrative problems in the state of New Jersey. Yeomans called attention to the fact that the Extension Service sought to dominate and in some instances did dominate the Production and Marketing Administration's activities in the state to the detriment of the Department's farm program. He expressed the view that USDA officials could to some extent solve this problem by appointing officials in the state who had the Department's program at heart and would sincerely attempt to carry it out.

YEOMANS ALSO DISCUSSED THE NEED FOR SOME KIND OF LEGISLATION which would encourage the competitive marketing of farm products. Yeomans said that under present conditions, the marketing situation was dominated by two or three giant monopolies and that the farmers were completely at their mercy at the market place. "Buyers," he said "this season forced farmers in some instances to take below cost of production prices for their fresh fruits and vegetables."

WHY FARMERS CHANGED THEIR VOTE

The cat is out of the bag at last as to why farmers in the grain belt decided to vote Democratic November 2. Representative Woolcott says that the Republican moguls buried his exposure of the Department of Agriculture regarding the grain storage issue. The statement, said Woolcott, which he prepared for Dewey's campaign manager explaining that the Republicans were not responsible for lack of storage facilities was never used in the campaign.

Woolcott indicated that Republicans thought that the farmers would vote Republican no matter how much they were kicked around by the 80th Congress.

BRANNAN SETS SUGAR QUOTA

Secretary of Agriculture Brannan last week set the sugar consumption quota for the current year at 7,250,000 tons. This quota is somewhat lower than the previous one and is expected to up the price of sugar and sugar beets or at least prevent prices from declining further.

PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATION ON STEEL FOLLOWS FU'S PREVIOUS PROPOSALS

President Truman's proposals to prod the steel industry into expanding production and for direct construction of steel plants by the Government if private industries failed to cooperate has as expected elicited statements from the steel industry industrialists that there will be plenty of steel by the end of this year and that no further expansion is necessary.

THE PRESIDENT'S RECOMMENDATION is in line with a recommendation made some months ago by President Patton in a letter to the Capehart Committee which is studying possible revision of anti-trust laws. At that time, Patton suggested that Capehart's investigators make a survey and determine sites where new steel plants could be built. The Full Employment Act of 1950, sponsored by the NFU and soon to be introduced, provides a revolving fund of 15 billion dollars, part of which could be used for the construction of new steel plants.

HEALTH BILL INTRODUCED IN BOTH HOUSE AND SENATE

Among the new bills of interest to Farmers Union are the National Health Insurance Bill introduced in both Houses and the Federal-aid-to-Education Bill. The Health Insurance Bill sponsored by Senator McGrath and Representative Dingell provides: (1) Health Insurance for 125 million persons with free choice of doctors and local administration. (2) Extension of Federal old age insurance to cover 25 million more persons and to double present average benefits. (3) Insurance to provide benefits when an insured person is out of work due to sickness or disability. (4) Extension and liberalization of unemployment insurance and employment service programs.

The Federal-Aid-to-Education Bill is similar to the one which passed the Senate in the 80th Congress and was pigeonholed in the House by the Joe Martin Committee. Senator Robertson introducing the bill in the Senate which provides 300 million dollars in grants to the states and an additional 300 million in loans for public school buildings and other facilities said that the bill would go far towards relieving education crises. President Truman said in his message that it was "shocking that millions of our children are not receiving a good education."

Subject - "Full Employment Act of 1950"

Release date - Immediate

January 10, 1949

WASHINGTON - - Expressing "deepest gratification" at the sponsorship by Congressman Patman and Senators Murray and Sparkman today of the "Full Employment Act of 1950" which he suggested September 24, 1948, President James G. Patton warned that serious deflationary forces are at work in the economy and action should be started now to deal with it.

Patton also said such a bill would provide a substitute for present "enormous military expenditures" which, used "simply as a means of providing employment", would lead "us into fantastic military adventures..., saddle the American people with an endless burden of heavy taxes..., of military bureaucracy, and a strictly regimented economy.

The text of his statement was as follows:

"Members of the National Farmers Union and I personally are deeply gratified that such distinguished sponsors as Congressman Wright Patman and Senators Jim Murray and John Sparkman have formally put before Congress today the proposals that we made on September 24, 1948, for machinery designed to achieve a permanently balanced, prosperous economy for the United States, entitled "The Full Employment Act of 1950."

"We believe that their action is far-seeing and statesman-like, and that in the not too distant future the country will be grateful to them for their foresight and vision in the introduction of this bill. Even if this precise approach to the problems we face should not be adopted, the very fact of its readiness for consideration by Congress must be regarded as a national benefit.

"For already we are in the midst of an uncertain period, a time of deflation in some things, of inflation in others. The Nation must be prepared to strike out on its own, specially American lines, toward meeting whatever contingencies develop. Some of the deflationary dangers confronting us have been well summarized by J. A. Livingston, the noted financial expert of The Washington Post, who said, in his column of yesterday:

"'Christmas sales were not up to expectations. Numerous companies have laid off workers. Men's clothing manufacturers have been pushing overstocked goods on the market. Agricultural products continue to sell around support levels and hogs just hit a two-year low. The cost of things has dropped and is due to drop further. New homes started are down from a year ago. Numerous business firms have either completed post-war expansion programs or are hesitant about undertaking them. Thus, machine tool orders are down.'

"It has been inevitable that the Nation would run into a period of this kind, and that is why the National Farmers Union for many months has been urging that some preparation be made for it. Next fall there is little question that the deflationary trend will be exaggerated. It is imperative that our economic system be ready to avert a major recession before its grip becomes strangling. With our present national debt and national income needs, we cannot afford a drastic decline in national income.

"In Mr. Livingston's interesting column, he points up another momentous fact. This is the inadequacy of our thinking on what to do about a slump. To "shore up the economy", Mr. Livingston says, he believes the President will undertake to throw public works into the breach, to expand social security, and, most significant, to "step up the armament program because it will prop employment."

"Public works and expanded social security are of course desirable government instruments to benefit the people — although they are not necessarily anti-depression weapons — but the stepping up of military expenditures simply as a means of providing employment offers the most frightening prospect that is before the American people.

"This is perhaps the over-riding reason why we have been pressing this proposal. Adding to military spending simply to provide jobs would offer a serious danger to national security. In a world filled with extreme and nervous tension to increase the enormous military expenditures simply as a means of providing employment would invite the most disastrous consequences, leading us into fantastic adventures in far-off parts of the world and threatening war at every moment.

"Furthermore, it would saddle the American people with an endless burden of heavy taxes, of enormous national debt and carrying charges, of military bureaucracy beyond any present conception, and of a strictly regimented economy.

"Not only workers and farmers are appalled at such a prospect. There are few businessmen who would not like to see an end to this gigantic military expenditure if the overwhelming fear of an economic crash could be removed.

"In order to do this, some economic substitute for these enormous expenditures for armaments must be found. We in the Farmers Union believe that this bill offers a feasible way of doing just that. And we believe that those members of Congress who press for an early solution to this problem will be revered by later generations as prophetic statemen and as true patriots."

FU LEADERS, PRIZE WINNERS ARRIVE TO PUT THE HEAT ON NEW CONGRESS

With the arrival this week of approximately two hundred Farmers Union representatives, counting 180 prize winners who won a free trip to Washington, activity on the FU legislative front was increased to an almost around the clock schedule. Dozens of appointments were made with Representatives, with Senators and with other Government officials. Meetings were held night and day and legislative plans and strategy were mapped out. Objectives of the visiting FU representatives included health, social security, family-farm, and many other types of legislation.

HEADING THE GROUPS OF PRIZE-WINNING VISITORS from the six states which just completed the successful organization drive are Stanley Moore (North Dakota), Gordon Tweet (Montana), Emil Loriks (South Dakota) and Oscar Forstenson (Minnesota). The delegations were accompanied by George Rockstad, in charge of the Farmers Union radio program in Thief River Falls, Minn. Rockstad will make recordings of interviews with Congressmen and other Government officials and broadcast them on his program in Thief River Falls.

AMONG THE FARMERS UNION and Farmers Union Cooperative leaders arriving in Washington were General Manager Bill Thatcher of the Farmers Union Grain Terminal, President Patton and State Presidents Glen Talbott (North Dakota), Einar Kuivinen (Minnesota), Don Chapman (Montana) and Wendell Miller, member of the executive committee.

The tempo of FU activity was heightened by the coming inauguration. Out-of-town FUers competed with the probable million people who will view the inauguration ceremony and parade. Pennsylvania Avenue, which connects the Capitol and the White House was lined with seats which sold at phenomenal prices. This inauguration promises to bring to the Capital a greater number of visitors than ever before.

FU FULL EMPLOYMENT BILL INTRODUCED IN HOUSE AND SENATE

The biggest FU legislative news of the week was the introduction of the Full Employment Act of 1950 which is sponsored by the National Farmers Union. This bill which provides a revolving fund of 15 billion dollars to avert future depressions and stimulate industry in undeveloped areas, was introduced in the Senate by John J. Sparkman (Dem., Ala.) and James J. Murray (Dem., Mont.) and in the House by Representative Wright Patman (Dem., Tex.). Although some opposition is expected to the merger, significantly a number of news articles pointed out that the bill ties in with President Truman's recent recommendations that the Government provide funds for an expanded steel production program.

MVA LEGISLATIVE SUPPORT GROWING

One of the most important differences between the 80th and 81st Congress is the attitude of members towards the proposed Missouri Valley Administration. Although the drive for MVA is up against tough sledding it hasmade notable gains both in the Valley and in Congress. According to Ben Stong, who heads the legislative MVA drive here for congressional support, membership from the ten Missouri Valley states which favors MVA, was increased considerably.

One dampening affect on the MVA drive is President Truman's attitude. The President is giving it the "nobody wants it" treatment. He told reporters off-the-record that nine states out of the ten don't want it "including Missouri." He has agreed to ask for a Columbia Valley Authority, but not MVA. There's a "let's settle for CVA" movement afoot. CVA looks like a winner, possibly at the expense of MVA.

BUT MVAers ARE TAKING PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S MISSOURI BACKGROUND seriously and determined "to show him." Senators Murray, Hubert Humphrey and Guy Gillette of Iowa are the first of several delegations going to the White House to talk about the need of MVA. Next to go will be a group of Missouri Congressmen. Then groups from other states.

Truman's real reluctance about MVA is still believed to be his personal friendship for General Pick. He'll consequently be hard to show. He doesn't want to let a pal down. MVA may have to win despite HST.

BIGGEST JOB OF ALL IS TO PROVE that the folks in the valley want MVA, says Ben Stong. He would welcome 100,000 messages to your Senators, Congressmen and the White House. (Ben now has an MVA office in the same building with FU Washington Office and gets mail and phone calls through NFU.)

Senate MVA bill will go in with Murray, Humphrey, Gillette, Langer, Young, et. al. on it next week. House bill will follow after organization of a co-sponsors' committee to show widespread strength.

BILL WEAKENING ANTI-TRUST LAWS INTRODUCED IN SENATE

Immediately after Senator Ed Johnson (D. Colo.) introduced his bill this week to revise the anti-trust laws, Washington FU representatives contacted the Senate Subcommittee on Trade Policies and asked to be allowed to testify against the bill when hearings were held on January 24.

It appears after a cursory examination of the bill that several provisions in it which would seriously weaken our anti-trust laws and hamper the Federal Trade Commission in their enforcement. FU representative in studying and analyzing the bill conferred with members of the FTC and with members of the House Small Business Committee.

THIS COMMITTEE WHICH WILL BE HEADED BY REPRESENTATIVE WRIGHT PATMAN when it is reconstituted, and contrary to the Senate Trade Policies Subcommittee, takes the position that the Federal Trade Commission should be strengthened and that stronger anti-trust legislation should be enacted. Representative Patman informed FU representatives that his committee would be more active during this season in counteracting the activities of the Senate committee.

USDA OFFICIALS SLOW TO SUGGEST AIKEN LAW REVISION

In a series of conferences this week Washington FU representatives explored the views of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Production and Marketing Administration and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics officials towards revision of the Aiken Law which provides for flexible price supports and the enactment of new legislation which would safeguard the family-size farm and provide storage and distribution facilities for farm commodities in large supply.

USDA OFFICIALS AT THIS POINT are inclined to go slow in recommending any changes in old legislation or in the introduction of new legislation. They are waiting for suggestions from Congress. However, it is felt by many Department officials that legislation which would implement storage facilities would be enacted immediately. On the other hand, officials point out that much study of the Aiken law must be made before it is revised.

USDA REPORTS ON WORLD FOOD SUPPLY - FARM INCOME

Several reports were issued by the Department of Agriculture this week which indicate that while farmers are in a period of declining income and increased production, world food stocks still are below normal. Although there has been a substantial rise of European food production and large crops in North America and Australia have relieved the food shortage, world stocks are still below those of pre-war.

ACCORDING TO WORLD FOOD SITUATION, the increased production of 1948 will be used up before the 1949 crops are harvested. At the present time, farm stocks of corn are the largest on record and conditions for 1949 wheat production are better than average.

IN ANOTHER REPORT USDA SAYS that although farmers received 31 billion dollars from marketings in 1948, three percent more than in 1947, their net income because of increased costs, suffered a substantial decline. The parity ratio which measures the purchasing power of farm income declined steadily throughout the year. By mid-December it had dropped to 109, 14 points below a year earlier and lowest since September 1942.

SOLUTION FOR RURAL EDUCATION PROBLEM

At last we have found somebody who is against education. C. W. Wampler, chairman of the State Board of Agriculture and Immigration in Virginia, said in a speech this week that farmers didn't need to go to school.

According to Wampler, there are too many farm boys in high school. "A lot of good farmers in my community never went to school," he said.

SOCIAL SECURITY FOR FARMERS PROPOSED IN NEW BILL

In a press release issued this week, Representative Dingell (D. Pa.) announced that he would introduce a bill very shortly which will provide old age and survivors benefits for farmers and farm workers. This bill will also affect those now covered by social security by doubling the old age and survivors benefits. A new feature of the bill which was not in the one Dingell introduced last year provides for disability benefits for farmers and rehabilitation for those permanently disabled. This is of particular interest because of the high accident rate on farms.

The tax base in Dingell's bill will be increased from $3000 to $4800 and the percentage of taxation on wages and salaries will be increased from 1 to 1½ percent. Self employed farmers will contribute 2¼ percent of their income and will make their reports and mail in their contributions at the same time they pay their income taxes.

PARENTS COMMITTEE SPEARHEADS CHILD LEGISLATION DRIVE

The American Parents Committee, Inc., with whom FU has worked closely, this week in its first bulletin of the year called on other organizations to join in the fight to push through legislation of benefit to children. Included in the legislation listed are measures pertaining to the local public health services, national health insurance, federal camps for migrant farm labor , public library services and school health services. The American Parents Committee emphasized that now is the time to get behind this legislation. Other groups, the committee pointed out are very vocal for the legislation they want. "But" said the committee, "the voices of children cannot be heard. Organizations need to speak up on behalf of the Nation's children."

MIDWEST FU REPRESENTATIVES' CAPITOL VISIT BIG SUCCESS

Two hundred Farmers Union representatives from five states, tired and foot-sore after a week of activity in Washington, climaxed by the inauguration of the President, report that their trip was highly successful. Leaders of the five different groups -- Stanley Moore of North Dakota, Gordon Tweet of Montana, Emil Loriks of South Dakota and Oscar Forstenson of Minnesota -- all are optimistic about the expected results of their legislative activity. The prize winning Farmers Union members met daily with their congressmen, lunched with their senators and consulted with the chairmen of House and Senate Agriculture Committees.

One of the most highly successful meetings was the one held in the Senate Caucus Room with Senator Elmer Thomas, chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture. At this meeting spokesmen for the group explained to Senator Thomas and the several congressmen present the Farmers Union legislative program for this year.

THEY EMPHASIZED THAT THE SLIDING SCALE OF PARITY SUPPORTS enacted by the 80th Congress should be repealed and be replaced by full parity for family-type farmers. They also urged the building of adequate storage facilities on farms and at terminal points. These facilities, it was pointed out, should be financed by loans to cooperatives at low interest. Senator Thomas was also urged to present his bill which calls for a divorce of the Farm Bureau Federation and the Extension Service. Thomas indicated that he supported all of these measures especially the building of storage facilities and the 100% parity idea.

ONE OF THE HIGH POINTS IN THE ACTIVITIES OF THE FU GROUP was a meeting held at the Hotel Carlyle here in which President Patton made a speech on foreign policy and the different leaders of the delegation reported on their legislative activities. Patton said that we are the crossroads of history as far as our foreign policy is concerned. He called for a great national debate in which all aspects of our foreign policy would be thoroughly aired so that the American people could decide what our foreign policy should be. At the present time, Patton stated, the military is making policy decisions which should be made by civilians.

REPORTS ON LEGISLATIVE ACTIVITY WERE MADE BY DON CHAPMAN, President Montana Farmers Union; Einar Kuivinen, President Minnesota Farmers Union, Emil Lorik, Stanly Moore, Russell Smith and Dwyte Wilson. All of these individuals indicated that a great deal of progress had been made in influencing congressmen to the Farmers Union point of view. Support, they said, was promised for a Missouri Valley Authority by the North Dakota senators as well as by a number of congressmen from other states. Significantly, several reported that the South Dakota senators and representatives were not in accord with FU objectives which called for an MVA and curtailment of military expenditures.

THE FU REPRESENTATIVES ALSO HELD NUMEROUS CONFERENCES WITH DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICIALS including Secretary of Agriculture Brannan, Governor I. W. Duggan of the Farm Credit Administration, Production and Marketing Administrator Ralph Trigg and Rural Electrification Administrator Claude Wickard. One of these meetings was an all-morning-long affair at which all of the FU groups met in the Department of Agriculture Auditorium where all promised support for the Farmers Union program and praised Farmers Union leaders indicating that they would work closely and rely on the advice of President Patton and FU state presidents and other FU officials.

SENATOR MURRAY'S SMALL BUSINESS COMMITTEE DISCONTINUED

Defenders of small business suffered a damaging blow this week when the Senate Banking and Currency Committee recommended the discontinuance of the Small Business Committee. This was interpreted by some as a stab in the back for Senator James E. Murray of Montana who organized the Senate Small Business Committee and who for years has been a stalwart defender of small business. Murray is anti-monopoly to the core and is the logical person to continue to head the Small Business Committee.

ON THE MONOPOLY FRONT attention is focused on the hearings to be held next week on Senator Ed Johnson's bill which would legalize industry-wide freight equalization and which, it is felt by FU, would weaken our anti-trust laws. FU representatives will testify at the hearings against this bill and indicate that no new legislation is necessary but that since Senator Johnson has introduced his bill it should be drastically amended before it is considered by the Trade Policies Committee of which Senator Johnson is the chairman.

ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CAPITOL Representative Wright Patman continued his fight against any change in anti-trust laws. In a press release he pointed out that the Supreme Court decision which outlawed base point pricing would encourage the development of new industries in the South and West and that our anti-trust laws should be strengthened and not weakened.

TACTICS OF MILITARY TO GET FUNDS REVEALED

Facts keep coming out about the war scare which the Nation experienced in 1948. The Hoover Commission recently revealed that in order to obtain appropriations, the military put out a phony intelligence report last spring which, according to the Commission, "stimulated recommendations which if followed might well have had serious consequences." There have also been a number of articles in newspapers including the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune which reported "The Inside Story of the Phony Red War Scare." Commenting on the Hoover Commission revelation the New York World-Telegram said "the military have picked up the ball of national policy and are starting down the field with it. Congress is practically helpless." These facts are especially significant and timely in view of President Patton's demand that Secretary of Defense Forrestal retire from the Cabinet. Forrestal, as reported in previous newsletters, had in his first annual report, called for war-making powers. Patton suggested that Forrestal's first report should be his last.

* * * * * * *

PATTON TO TESTIFY ON COTTON ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

One of the knottiest problems facing this administration is how to apply the law which lays down rules for acreage allotments. This week state Production and Marketing Administration representatives met here, wrangled over the issue but could come to no agreement. Later, hearings were held by the House Agriculture Subcommittee on cotton at which it was pointed out that the law which bases cotton quotas on pre-war production is not realistic because of the shifts in cotton acreage. Southern states, for example, have about 50% as much cotton acreage as they had ten years ago. California, on the other hand, has expanded its production. President Patton will testify on this issue before the Cotton Subcommittee and point out that no changes should be made in the law or in its administration which would not safeguard the family-type farmers.

* * * * * * *

KUIVINEN SPEARHEADS FU CAMPAIGN IN MINNESOTA

Word reaches us from Minnesota that the Farmers Union is putting on a big campaign urging the support of family-type farm legislation which would give family-type farmers 100% of parity, increased storage facilities, and funds for REA lines and a rural housing program.

EINAR KUIVINEN IN A RELEASE which he sent to all state legislators urged the enactment of legislation which would fulfill these objectives. Kuivinen also urged that the legislators demand the ouster of Secretary of Defense Forrestal.

* * * * * * *

PRESIDENT TRUMAN TO SUPPORT MVA IDEA

The most significant gain in the fight for Missouri Valley Authority was made this week when President Truman, after an interview with Senator Murray, Humphrey and Gillette indicated that he would support MVA. Senator Humphrey pointed out to the President that the present Pick-Sloan plan would not bring about complete development of water, soil and power resources of the Valley. Electric "power shortages," the Senator said, "the constant danger of floods, the growing crisis of U. S. mineral supplies, particularly metal and fertilizer elements require that no further time be wasted between studies and the initiation of development work. There should be immediate study of the feasibility of using the low-grade manganese ores of South Dakota, for example, and of expanding manganese production at all points in the valley where it is feasible."

CENTRE, Ala.—Alabama Farmers Union delegates at the annual convention last month from locals throughout the state re-elected Aubrey Williams to serve as president of the organization for another two years. J. B. Morton was re-elected Vice-President, and Orville Mastin, Secretary-Treasurer.

Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan headed the list of noted speakers at the convention that included National Farmers Union President James Patton, Alabama's Governor James Folsom, and Lee Fryer, Administrative Assistant to James Patton.

BRANNAN SAYS

"Farmers must have parity of living," Secretary Brannan declared at the convention. "This means improved production and better farm lands. It means better rural homes and more health and education facilities for farm people."

"We can't afford another depression," the Secretary stated, and the farmer is not going to be the one to have his feet knocked out from under him, as was done in 1920," the nation's number one man in agriculture stated.

Several young G. I. Farmers Union members were present, and one of them, Reed Ricker, was elected Secretary-Treasurer.

EXCELLENT LEADERSHIP

The Camp Creek local has excellent leadership, and promises to be one of the most active local unions in the Greene County area, Krainock said. J. Lynch Jones, for example, is on the Board of Directors of the East Tennessee Dairy Cooperative Association, in addition to being active in the Camp Creek local union.

Phosphate Trains

Indiana and Illinois farmers are now buying Tennessee rock phosphate by the train load. The Indiana shipment, which was dubbed the "Hoosier Farmer's Freedom Train," consisted of 60 cars.

The Indiana Farmer's Guide says that "phosphate rock is properly called the key to permanent soil building." It has been determined, soil experts say, that a finely-ground phosphate rock will supply phosphorous at the lowest cost and will return the greatest profit per dollar invested to the farmer.

This material is not treated with sulphuric acid, Farmers Union officials point out, and differs therefore from superphosphate.

SHORT HISTORY

A recent publication of The National Farmers Union only eight pages in length, entitled "A Very Short History Of The Farmers Union" is now available for use as a supplement to Junior Reserve and Junior studies. This little pamphlet, while far from being complete, gives a rough sketch of what has happened in the Farmers Union from 1902 to the present time. This pamphlet sells for $.01 each, or $.75 per hundred.

Va. Farmers Union Members Set Up Purchasing Co-op

By EARL GOBBLE,
Chairman, Virginia Farmers Union

ABINGDON, Va.—Stockholders in the Farmers Union Cooperative, Inc., met here last month and elected their Board of Directors and adopted a set of By-Laws to govern this newly established cooperative. The Cooperative is capitalized at $50,000. A charter issued by the State of Virginia, has been received by the officers of the cooperative.

The stockholders meeting was held in the enlarged office and warehouse of the Farmers Union located in the building at the west end of Depot Square, which formerly housed the Clark Grocery. This headquarters is temporary until plans are completed to erect a large concrete-block building.

C. W. Marsh, newly-elected secretary-treasurer of the Cooperative summed up the feelings of the Union farmers when he explained: "people have already organized in almost every section of the country. Merchants into associations and the workers into unions. Farmers have been the last to organize."

SUCCESSFUL STEPS

"We have made some successful steps forward. It now becomes important to expand our organization to handle the special purchasing that farm production requires," he said. "We believe in the years ahead, cooperatives will become necessary and wil be used by farmers to protect shrinking incomes. We think that our cooperative is a step forward in protecting the general welfare of our farm members."

Plans are being laid by officials of the Cooperative for meetings with crossroads and country store owners to work out distribution plans for the mutual benefit of these store owners and union members.

PURPOSES

The cooperative was organized to (1) purchase and process certain commodities that union members produce; and (2) to offer savings to members by volume purchase of phosphate and fertilizers necessary in farm production.

Officers elected by the Board of Directors, which met immediately following the stockholders meeting, were: W. K. Gibson, of Castlewood, prominent Russell County dairy and cattleman, president; Quincy Brown, Mountain City, vice-president; and C. W. Marsh, of Route 2, Abingdon, secretary-treasurer.

BOARD MEMBERS

The Board of Directors for the Cooperative follows: Ed Clark, Meadowview; J. J. Henderson, Abingdon, Route 3; Sutton Cowan, Mendota; James N. Hodges, Mountain City, RFD; Jack Pratt, of Chatham Hill, RFD; Earl Gobble, Abingdon, Route 3; Gordon Gilmer, Holston; Irvin Minnick, Abingdon, Route 1; T. G. Maloyed, Broad Ford; Mrs. Maggie Odum, Meadowview, RFD; J. A. Taylor, Holston; T. E. Byington, Castlewood; H. L. Spence, Chatham Hill; H. S. Castle, Castlewood; W. B. Shortt, Bristol, Tenn., Route 3; John Carty, Abingdon, Route 2, and H. B. Fogleman, Abingdon, Route 3.

(Pictures of the officers of the Cooperative will appear in next month's issue of the "Union Farmer".)

FCA Proves Profit To U. S. Treasury

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A check for $10,000,000 was delivered to the United States Treasury by I. W. Duggan, Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, as a dividend on stock held by the Government in the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. This is in addition to a dividend of $40 million paid on July 30.

This Corporation was created in 1934 to refinance farm mortgage indebtedness. It loaned more than $1¼ billion to about 675,000 farmers on the security of their farm mortgages during its 14 years' lending period, and in so doing it was an important factor in stopping the epidemic of farm mortgage foreclosures, as well as in the bailing out of banks and insurance companies much frozen mortgage paper.

Setting Up Local Co-op To Operate Alabama Fertilizer Plant Authorized

CENTRE, Ala.,—Stockholders in the Farmers Union fertilizer Cooperative residing in the area South of Birmingham have been authorized to take complete charge of the assets and liabilities of the co-op in the Andalusia-Georgiana area.

AUTHORIZED

The setting up of a local co-op in the South Alabama area was authorized by the Board of Directors meeting in Centre, Alabama, following the Alabama Farmers Union Convention last month.

Aubrey Williams presided at the meeting. Board members present were J. A. Knight, secretary; Wilma Van Dusseldorp. Visitors were Tom Ludwig, Manager, J. D. Mott, Leland Fryer, Administrative Assistant to National Farmers Union President Patton; W. H. Drake, President, Butler County Farmers Union.

FINANCIAL REPORT

Tom Ludwig gave the board a summary of the organization's activities for the past year, and made a verbal financial report. The report stated that the Fertilizer Cooperative chief asset was a $20,000 mixing plant at Georgiana.

AUDIT PENDING

The financial report was accepted, pending a complete audit of the cooperative's books by a certified accountant, as stated in the Co-op by-laws.

The following motion was passed by the Board regarding the transfer of the management of the cooperative from the three state directorship to a South Alabama directorship:

RESOLUTION PASSED

"It is the sense of this board that the present Board offer to deliver over to the membership of the Farmers Union Fertilizer Cooperative, Inc., who reside in Alabama South of Birmingham, all assets and all liabilities of the Cooperative which are located in Andalusia and Georgiana, Alabama, and that the aforementioned membership shall take over this property through a separate Cooperative under separate charter; and that furthermore, it is the sense of this board that upon the new organization's acceptance of the sense of this whole motion, this motion shall become effective immediately and its provisions effected by the management," the motion read.

The Board accepted the resignation of Vivian Thomas, co-op employee in South Alabama.

Aubrey Williams Re-elected Pres. Of Alabama Union

CENTRE, Ala.—Alabama Farmers Union delegates at the annual convention last month from locals throughout the state re-elected Aubrey Williams to serve as president of the organization for another two years. J. B. Morton was re-elected Vice-President, and Orville Mastin, Secretary-Treasurer.

Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan headed the list of noted speakers at the convention that included National Farmers Union President James Patton, Alabama's Governor James Folsom, and Lee Fryer, Administrative Assistant to James Patton.

BRANNAN SAYS

"Farmers must have parity of living," Secretary Brannan declared at the convention. "This means improved production and better farm lands. It means better rural homes and more health and education facilities for farm people."

"We can't afford another depression," the Secretary stated, and the farmer is not going to be the one to have his feet knocked out from under him, as was done in 1920," the nation's number one man in agriculture stated.

Brannan encouraged all the farmers of the state to participate in the affairs of the nation's government.

"This is the only way that your government can operate successfully," he declared.

GET SERVICE

"Take a good look at anyone in the Department of Agriculture and in all government agencies and see that they are bringing to you things that are most useful. See that you are getting it or know the reason why," Brannan said.

"It is through farmers' organizations and through your vote that you express your desires. You must be sure that your representatives are the kind you want. Then we'll have better living," he stated.

Brannan encouraged the Alabama Farmers to get more diversification into their farming program. Alabama farmers need to produce more meat, milk, vegetables, sheep, to make a better living from the land, the Secretary said. "This is an element of better living, and the Department of Agriculture is dedicated to helping you get better living."

PRES. PATTON

In his address to the convention National Farmers Union President James Patton stated that farmers faced more problems than at any time in previous history.

"There are certain segments of agriculture that are already beginning to feel the pressure of lowering prices for what the farmer receives on one side and raising the price to the consumer on the other," the farm leader asserted.

"We are for 100% parity for the American Farmer. We are good to American Democracy. There is no reason why we should not have a full share of the services produced in this country. For the first time we are getting a good income. We produce enough, and yet we have people who are not getting enough food and milk, and are not able to buy cotton dresses.

STATEMENT OF BENTON J. STONG, OF THE HEADQUARTERS STAFF OF NATIONAL FARMERS UNION, DENVER, COLORADO, BEFORE THE HOUSE AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE'S SUB-COMMITTEE ON RURAL TELEPHONE SERVICE, FEB. 16, 1949

Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege to appear here today and urge the enactment of the Poage Bill to amend the Rural Electrification Act so loan funds may be made available to extend rural telephone lines. We have long desired an opportunity to support such a measure.

The Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union, which has approximately 500,000 farm people in membership, has been concerned with this problem at the grass roots for a good many years. It is one field of service in the United States in which we have retrogressed from horse and buggy days and need to catch up to them again - and then go beyond. There was a much larger percentage of farm homes with telephone service in the early '20s than there are today, so in the present situation even a return to the horse and buggy day level would be an advance - not a slipping back.

Unhappily, since the early '20s, a great many of our mutual systems have been sold out to the Bell system, or other 'businesslike' operators, and instead of expansion there has been a decline in the number of farms served. Perhaps the balance sheets and rates of profit of the operating companies have been improved, perhaps models of phone instruments and technical phases have advanced, but from the viewpoint of tens of thousands of farmers who have been cut off from service, these financial and technical advances are meaningless. They are just something that are talked about in advertisements and before Congressional Committees. Those farmers are still without telephones.

There has also been the problem of the deterioration and failure of some of the mutual systems, resulting from farmers being too busy farming, or lacking the technical knowledge or trained employes, to maintain those systems.

As a result of the two factors, monopolism and deterioration, the percentage of farm homes with telephones declined from 40% in the '20s down to 20% in 1935. Some recent figures indicate that the percentage has again climbed up around 42%, but because of our knowledge of what exists out on the farms of our members, we believe that these late figures must be misleading. The telephone industry claims that it has connected 1,000,000 rural phones since the end of the war. But when you consider the average density of phones on those "rural" lines indicated by their figures - about 16 to the mile - it becomes obvious that they do not reach out from the rural communities to many actual farms, but chiefly to the houses just beyond the corporate limits, or to little clusters at main highway intersections. Comparatively few of these people are real farmers.

Apparently the filling stations, sandwich shops, tourist camps with many room phones, and even the night clubs and liquor dealers who have located outside corporate limits to escape municipal regulation, are mingled with "farmers" in these latest statistics. Not many of such businesses existed in the early '20s, so that the statistical comparisons may very well be entirely false. The real farm telephone problem is not now being met. We know of only a very, very small percentage of actual farm operators who are being connected. We are undoubtedly still somewhere behind the horse and buggy days in actual service to farm people.

We have a great many letters coming into Farmers Union headquarters regularly inquiring about how to establish phone service or urging the very thing provided in the Bill under consideration here - turning the problem over to the REA. There have been some attempts within our organization, by local groups, to meet their telephone needs locally, with a small mutual. But so far as I know, without exception, those efforts have run into some bottleneck and have been fruitless. The people have been unable to get local finance, or they have been unable to get poles, or wire, or other construction materials through the sources available to them. Their resources are limited. They are unable to send committees repeatedly to suppliers' offices to attempt to obtain concessions of needed supplies.

In many instances they have petitioned the Bell System or local independents to establish service, but to no avail. They have repeatedly been told that the area to be served would be uneconomic - unprofitable - and that the established companies are not interested.

During the past summer I spent considerable time in two areas in Utah, where the Farmers Union has recently been organizing. In both of them - the Castle Valley south of Price, Utah, and the Uintah Basin, in eastern Utah between Denver and Salt Lake City - one of the first problems considered by the new local groups was how to get telephone service.

In the Castle Valley area, south of Price, there is a phone line down the main highway, with a very few connections in the towns of Huntington, Castle Dale, Emery and smaller communities. The citizens at Castle Dale and nearby Orangeville had been working on their phone problem for several years. They had more than 300 signers to an agreement to take phone service, and had gone up to Salt Lake City to the Mountain States Telephone Company with that agreement. But they had been turned down, even for rural community service.

They had explored, and the National Farmers Union explored, the possibilities of building their own phone system. They need it desperately. There is only one doctor - and he is past 70 - in the entire valley. The people are dependent on doctors from Price, which is from 10 to 50 or 60 miles distant from them, for medical care. In emergencies, without telephones, it may be necessary to drive clear into Price to get the doctor, or to ride into the nearest community, route the owner of one of the few phones out of bed, and place the call from there. To those people, telephone service is not a luxury, nor just a convenience. It is a very real need.

The people of the Castle Valley have REA service. They can have telephone service economically on their REA lines if this bill passes. And this is today apparently the only solution for them; Mountain States doesn't want them, and it is not economically feasible for them to employ the personnel to travel over the country locating supplies, finding finance and ultimately constructing this one single system.

The situation in the Uintah Basin in Utah is similar. The communities along Highway 40, which goes through the Basin, have comparatively good phone service. But the farmers back on the mesas, are without service. In that area, again, there is electric service with which telephone service could be provided most economically.

The REA is ideally suited to extend its operations into this new field, for the services which it now renders in the electric power field meet the basic problems of adequate rural phone service. The same sort of low cost financing, technical assistance and guidance now provided by REA are the principal things which are needed to meet rural telephone needs.

The Rural Electrification Administration has, in the opinion of farm people, proved one of the finest service agencies which has ever existed in agriculture. It has supplied the technical know-how for the extension of rural power lines to farms in an adequate, modern way. It has provided patterns of operation assuring the maintenance of a high standard of service. It has achieved costs sufficiently low that service can be supplied, at prices which farmers can pay, in areas of such low population density that they are unattractive to the power monopolists, just as they are unattractive to the telephone monopolists. It has taken service, not just to the fringes of rural towns, but out into the country to the real farmers, or to the farms.

Perhaps the work it has done can well be measured by the comparative growth of rural power and rural telephone service since 1935. In 1935 there were twice as many farms with phones as with electric power. At the end of 1948, 70 percent of farms had electricity and, even accepting the confusing statistics which I have discussed, only 42% of rural people had telephones.

It is my understanding the H.R. 133 does not give a clear preference to cooperatives in the making of loans. In our opinion, such a preference should be made quite clear.

Unfortunately, monopolists have repeatedly demonstrated their unwillingness to cooperate in programs with the objectives of the Poage bill, which we interpret to be the provision of telephone service to the highest possible number of farmers who desire it. They are not interested in establishing unprofitable services, however much they may be needed. Telephone companies are now in the midst of a drive for higher and higher rates. We can only anticipate that, given the advantage of low-interest federal loan funds, they would extend lines only so far as high and extremely profitable rates could be collected, possibly only 3 or 4 more miles from town. There are obvious economies in using the existing administrative machinery of REA and the REA coops, and of using the existing pole lines which reach tens of thousands of farmers without telephone service, to establish that service. It would not be economical or sound to provide loans for duplicating private pole lines to the farms now served by REA and not by any telephone company.

We oppose any rigid requirements within the law to force REA systems to arrange switchboard service with existing phone companies. In a great majority of instances, we believe that such arrangements would be desirable, to maintain one integrated phone service, but that they should be established by free negotiation between the farmers, through their cooperative, and the existing companies, rather than under compulsion, which would leave farmers without bargaining power.

In the electric power field, the private companies are repeatedly demonstrating that they will use any hold they may get over REA cooperatives to hamper them, limit them and ultimately take them over.

The private power companies are now using the dependence on them of many REA cooperatives for wholesale power supply - and their cooperatives' present inability to build their own generating facilites - to force long-term, high-rate power supply contracts upon them, or embarrass them with inadequate power supply, obviously hoping that the members will become dissatisfied and ultimately approve a sale of their facilities to the private, monopoly industry.

We recognize that in a few instances, duplicating services might be established. We believe that they will not be many, but even if some should occur and there should be, as I believe the Committee has been told, a return to "horse and buggy days" by duplication in a few instances, we should remember that that is a forward movement - not backward - from where we are today as a result of monopolism in the telephone business.

The industry which has failed to provide farm people with telephone service should not now be given, by any compulsory clauses, a veto or limiting power on the proposed development.

We hope that before this session of Congress is ended, the House Agriculture Committee will consider legislation to give REA cooperatives a free bargaining status in the electric power field; that restrictions will be taken off generating loans, that ample funds will be provided for such loans and that federal power projects, including a Missouri Valley, a Columbia Valley Authority, and the St. Lawrence Waterway, among others, will be authorized, with preferences provided to municipal and REA systems, to meet the present squeeze which is being putting on many of the existing REA coops.

Three Farmers Union members will follow me, who come from an area where power companies are using their control of generating facilities to squeeze rural electric cooperatives.

In South Dakota, where it is anticipated that some power may become available around 1953 from Missouri river dams, the effort is to force the cooperatives to take 10-year wholesale supply contracts with the private companies - contracts which will carry them beyond the date when public power may be available.

In North Dakota, at least one existing supply contract is being breached - although it has time to run - to force acceptance of increases in rates which are already too high.

We recently made a check of what the private companies are charging REA's in the Missouri Valley states for their power supply.

As Southern members of this committee know, in the Tennessee Valley, the TVA sells power to REA cooperatives at an average of 5.2 mills per kwh. In Nebraska, the one public power state in the Missouri Valley where suppliers are public agencies, the rate now runs about 8.4 mills. In the other states, where private suppliers predominate, the rates are without exception higher, even though the averages are reduced in some of them by Bureau of Reclamation supply contracts.

The average rate paid for power in the states where supply is chiefly from private companies runs not 5.2 mills, nor even 8.4 mills, but 10 mills and more.

In Minnesota the average wholesale charge was 12.8 mills, in Colorado and Kansas 10.8 mills, in North Dakota 11.1 mills, in South Dakota 12.3 mills, in Iowa 11.4 mills, in Wyoming 10.4 mills - just twice the TVA rate - and in Missouri 10 mills. The Colorado rate would have averaged much higher but large blocks of power were supplied byBureau of Reclamation at 7.4 mills.

In the ten valley states, the excess charge over TVA's average rate amounted to more than half of the wholesale power bill. The REA cooperatives had to pay $8,581,353 for power which would have cost them only $4,070,609 in the Tennessee Valley - a difference of $4,510,743.

If high tolls to existing private phone companies for switching or other services are forced upon rural groups as they have been on the power operations, they might easily reduce the economic feasibility of reaching a majority of farm homes.

The Farmers Union not only opposes the omission of preference as to loans in this bill, and protection of the right of the cooperatives to take whatever action is necessary to provide low cost telephone service to farm people, we urge you during this session to free the REA cooperatives in the power generation field, and to assist in the adoption of a federal power development program, including the St. Lawrence project, a Missouri Valley Administration and a Columbia Valley Authority, which have been urged by the National Rural Electrification Association.

The REA has demonstrated that there can be parity of services for farm people - at reasonable costs - if the cooperatives are not restricted but are free to bargain or, if necessary, establish their own services.

We hope that the Congress will pass this bill without any amendments which would impose restrictions on it in the telephone field.

BRANNAN TO PRESENT FARM PROGRAM TO CONGRESS NEXT WEEK

Climaxing a series of conferences of FU leaders with Secretary of Agriculture Brannan comes the announcement this week by Senator Thomas, chairman of the Agriculture Committee, to a group of North Dakota farmers that the Secretary will present his legislative program to Congress on April 7.

THERE ARE SIGNS THAT BRANNAN will include in his recommendations at least a part of the Farmers Union program. President Patton conferred with the Secretary this week and reiterated that the Farmers Union still insisted on 100% parity for family-type farmers and was conducting an all-out campaign to obtain this objective. The Secretary did not indicate that he would include this recommendation when he presents his program to Congress next week, but it is known that Mr. Brannan is quite sympathetic to this idea and conversely looks with disapproval on a farm program which gives 90% parity to large-scale corporate-type farms. It is expected, therefore, that the Secretary will recommend that some differential be established between the two types of farming operations.

BRANNAN IS ALSO EXPECTED TO RECOMMEND SO-CALLED PRODUCTION PAYMENTS for increased production of livestock, dairy products and other products in short supply as well as a system of direct payments on perishables which would safeguard the consumers interests by preventing prices from rising too high and at the same time assure the farmer of a fair price.

Previously, Brannan had indicated that he favors a greatly expanded storage program which will perhaps provide funds for cooperatives and others to store and process commodities in the event of temporary overproduction.

LAST GROUP OF NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA PRIZE WINNERS ARRIVE

With the arrival this week of a group of prize winning FUers from North and South Dakota, the final phase of the Farmers Union "invasion" of Washington began. Only one more delegation is expected after this week, although farm leaders and farmers will, no doubt, individually and in small groups continue to come in to present their legislative program to Congress and to testify on legislation. The last group which will arrive from Oklahoma early next week will be accompanied by Homer Duffy, president of the Oklahoma Farmers Union, and Zeb Lawter, secretary.

THE GROUP VISITING WASHINGTON THIS WEEK, headed by Harold Jesperson and Orville Knote, made the usual round, visiting their representatives and senators and informing them of the FU legislative program. Their experience was somewhat similar to those who had previously visited Washington. Senator Thomas, for example, assured them that he was going to recommend full parity or at least 90% on all important crops. The Senator also added that he was in entire agreement with the ideas of Glenn Talbott, North Dakota FU president, and others that at least 500 million bushels of wheat should be stockpiled.

FARM BUREAU'S STAND IN A SENTENCE

Allan Kline recently before a Senate Committee explained the Farm Bureau's stand on parity. Here it is - all in one sentence; we don't think any comments are needed:

"It seems to me that the 90% of parity thing, with the productive capacity of America, with the current alignment of our capacity to sell with the possibilities as you suggested in your question that European demand might fall off - and I would there note parenthetically that I suggested we couldn't tell about that and therefore might be confronting me and congress at such a time - that it seems to me we have to take this much broader approach on this thing and try, as I suggested to start with, to save all the good things that we have learned in the experiences we have had with all these farm programs, but at the same time try to avoid the rigidity that might come from the attempt to gurantee at the Federal level a certain specific price for twenty-odd agricultural commodities in the United States."

FU REPRESENTATIVES CONDEMN MONOPOLY BILL AT HEARINGS

FU representatives testified this week before a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee on S1008, a bill which, in effect, provides for a permanent weakening of our anti-trust laws as well as a two-year moratorium. If this bill were to be enacted, the Federal Trade Commission and other agencies would be prevented from enforcing the Supreme Court decision of last May which outlawed base point pricing.

AS POINTED OUT IN PREVIOUS NEWLETTERS, President Patton has been active in this controversy and served on Senator Capehart's advisory council which investigated the effects of the Supreme Court decision. In a minority report of the advisory council, Patton strongly condemned the efforts of those seeking to undo the Supreme Court decision and pointed out that no new legislation of this kind was needed. FU representatives repeated these ideas of President Patton to the subcommittee and obtained the promise of Senator McCarran to have President Patton's minority report inserted in the Record.

Specifically, the FU representative pointed out that Section 1 of the bill, which is to be permanent legislation, included a phrase which was broad enough to legalize the now outlawed base point pricing system. The representative also pointed out that such systems worked to the disadvantage of farmers by increasing costs of farm machinery and other goods which they purchase by stifling competition in general and by preventing the development of local western and southern industry, thereby prohibiting farmers from purchasing products from near-by manufacturing plants.

PATTON PUTS FINGER ON LOW FARM PRICES AS DEPRESSION CAUSE

President Patton this week participated in an NBC radio broadcast here in Washington with Senator Warren G. Magnuson (D.Wash.), and A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, on the subject "Are Depressions Necessary?" Patton, in his remarks on the program, pointed out that farmers,workers and businessmen were all in the same boat and that the whole economy would suffer if farmers were penalized by taking from them their fair share of the national income.

He emphasized that farmers had been taking a beating during the last year, that prices of things they buy have been going up and prices of things they sell had declined in some instances by as much as one third. "On October 13, 1947," said Patton, wheat was quoted at $3.40 per bushel at Minneapolis and a tractor to harvest with cost $1800. Thus, it took 530 bushels of wheat to buy the tractor. A year later it took more than 900 bushels of wheat to buy the same tractor for it had jumped to $2250 and wheat was down from $3.40 to $2.48. The situation has worsened recently."

Patton added that farmers would not complain about reasonable price adjustments if it meant that consumers could buy cheaper food, but they objected strongly to the present situation in which fertilizer prices had risen up to 50% over a year ago and farm prices had dropped in many instances below the 90% floor. Patton also said that with the 60% parity law upon the books, farmers faced a period when their purchasing power might be cut by as much as 50%. This, Patton pointed out, would bring about a depression.

STONG STEPS UP CAMPAIGN TO DIVORSE FARM BUREAU AND EXTENSION

Ben Stong this week stepped up his campaign to bring about the enactment of Senator Thomas' bill, S.1083, which would divorce the Farm Bureau and the Extension Service. In a letter widely distributed, Stong urged that all interested individuals and groups communicate their views on this bill to Senator Elmer Thomas and Congressman Harold D. Cooley, who are chairman respectively of the Senate and House Agriculture Committee. Stong also suggested that if possible, interested FU members come to Washington and testify for the Thomas bill during the week of April 11 when hearings will be held. If you want to testify or want more information on this, write to Ben Stong in the Washington office.

HOUSING BILL TO BE DEBATED SOON

The housing bill S1070 which includes a provision for about 260 million dollars for rural housing, has finally been reported out of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. It is expected to reach the floor about April 1 and debate is expected to start around the 4th. On the House side, it is expected that Chairman Brent Spence (D.Ky.) of the House Banking and Currency Committee will introduce a measure similar to S1070 in a day or two. The National Public Housing Conference, with which FU works closely, suggests that you write Representative Spence urging him to push such legislation.

Subject - Brannan farm program

WASHINGTON - The farm program proposals put forward today by Secretary of Agriculture Brannan are of "historic importance", President James G. Patton of the National Farmers Union, said today in a statement issued by the Union's Washington office. At the same time, Patton said the Brannan proposals did not go so far as the Farmers Union wished, and that "family farmers are entitled to and should receive now 100% of parity." Patton's statement was as follows:

"The general agricultural income and parity proposals that Secretary of Agriculture Brannan presented to Congress today mark a milestone in the history of American agriculture.

"There is no question but that the statesmanship displayed in this well-reasoned and closely documented paper is of historic importance. It reflects great credit upon the Secretary and his staff.

"The National Farmers Union feels that in many respects the specifics of the program presented by the Secretary do not go far enough. It believes firmly that family-type farmers are entitled to and should receive now 100% of parity, either through commodity loans or purchase agreements or through compensatory payments.

"The Farmers Union believes, furthermore, that the formula in the Secretary's proposals whereby farmers with roughly $25,000 of gross income are to receive full parity includes many farms that are too large. We would prefer to see this breaking-point set at a lower level so as to encourage the maximum number of economic-sized family units in American agriculture.

"And we believe that the support program should be further implemented by a large-scale cooperative storage facilities loan program, these loans to be of the type now made by REA to electric power cooperatives.

"But these are differences over specifics. The principles laid down by the Secretary are good and sound. His avowed purpose to aid in maintaining incomes of farmers and at the same time to insure reasonable prices to consumers is a major step forward in national agricultural policy. His price-determination formula, based on real farm income, marks a wholly new departure in development of agricultural programs, and deserves close study.

"Above all, his official sanction of the principle that family farms are to be given preference in the extension of governmental assistance to agriculture should be hailed by everyone who believes that healthy family farms are a mainstay of a healthy American economy."

PATTON JOINS FIGHT TO SAVE FTC FUNDS

The spotlight shifted temporarily this week from the Brannan program, which is still the most talked about subject in Washington, to the monopoly drive which was waged on both sides of the Capitol. The fight on the House side centered primarily around a cut which the House Appropriation Committee had made in funds for the Federal Trade Commission. As soon as it became known that the House committee had recommended this cut, President Patton immediately sent a telegram to Wright Patman urging him to use his influence and prestige to bring about restoration of reductions made in appropriations in the Federal Trade Commission.

THIS APPROPRIATION CUT, SAID PATTON, in view of the present great wave of antitrust law violations, is more unjustified than ever before in our history. Patton went on to say that this reduction in administrative funds by $289,000 would virtually wipe out the clerical staff of the FTC and seriously handicap enforcement of our antitrust laws.

Representative Patman immediately following receipt of President Patton's telegram went on the floor and read it into the Record as well as communications from the CIO, from the National Federation of Small Business, from the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and from the American Farm Bureau Federation. All of these organizations joined with the Farmers Union in urging that the FTC appropriations be restored.

BUT UNFORTUNATELY, ALL OF THESE EFFORTS WERE OF NO AVAIL. An amendment by Representative Evins (D., Tenn.) was defeated and the independent offices appropriation bill which included FTC funds was passed. Had the friends of the FTC had a little more time, they probably would have been successful in restoring the cuts. But the representatives were in such a hurry to go on their Easter vacations that they reduced time for debating the FTC cuts to six minutes, thereby silencing nearly all of the members who wanted to speak up for the FTC.

SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE APPROVES MONOPOLY BILL

On the Senate side, there were two major developments during the week which will affect enforcement of our antitrust laws. One was the approval of S.1008 by a subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee. This bill, as was pointed out in testimony by FU representatives to the committee on March 30 (see newsletter April 1), would seriously hamper not only the enforcement of our antitrust laws, but permanently weaken them.

The FU representative directed most of his fire at the first part of the bill which was to be enacted as permanent legislation. The second part of the bill provided for a moratorium on enforcement of antitrust laws which concerned distribution costs as an element of monopoly. It is significant that the subcommittee deleted from the bill that part which would have become permenent legislation if approved. However, the subcommittee did recommend, with some minor changes, that the full committee approve the bill.

MONOPOLISTS FIGHTING CARSON CONFIRMATION ON FTC

The other development concerning indirectly antitrust legislation centered around the approval of John Carson who was recently recommended as a member of the FTC. As is well known, Carson is an enemy of the monopolists, has a long record of service in the cooperative movement. Consequently, monopolists have been combing Carson's record with a fine-tooth comb in the hopes of finding something that they could use against him. Senator Brewster, one of those who apparently is working with the monopolists, reports that he found a statement in testimony Carson made in 1945 before a Senate Committee which would in part disqualify him from serving on the Federal Trade Commission.

FULTON LEWIS JR., ALWAYS ALERT TO LEND A HELPING HAND to the NAM and other big business groups, has been carrying on a campaign against Carson. He has indulged in the usual name calling and has even hoodwinked some befuddled listeners into writing their senators protesting the nomination of Carson. Since it is reported that little or no mail is going in on Carson's behalf, we urge that you write your senators immediately. Tell them that Carson is eminently fitted for the FTC post. Tell your senators that Carson's work in the cooperative movement especially qualifies him for the position.

As a result of all this commotion, the Senate Committee, headed by Senator Ed Johnson, announced that it would hold hearings on the Carson appointment. Immediately after this became known, FU in Washington wrote Senator Johnson asking to be allowed to appear at the hearings to testify in Carson's behalf.

FU LEADERS TO TESTIFY ON BRANNAN PROGRAM

The controversy over the Brannan farm plan recommendations will be publicly renewed next week when hearings begin. Brannan will appear on the 25th and Farmers Union representatives, including President Patton and several state presidents and others, are scheduled to appear on the 27th. At the present time, FU leaders are preparing detailed statements outlining their positions not only on the Brannan recommendations but on the Farmers Union's 100% parity bill which in substance will be presented to the House Agriculture Committee. FU leaders will not unqualifiedly endorse the Brannan program. They will point out the weak features, although taking note that it is a great improvement over the Aiken Bill.

SENTIMENT ON CAPITOL HILL regarding approval of the Brannan program is considerably mixed at this point. Representative Cooley, who heads the House Agriculture Committee, seems to favor most of the features of the Brannan recommendations. He is strongly against allowing the Aiken bill to go into effect. The Aiken bill, as has been pointed out, has few friends on the House side. According to Representative Cooley, "None of us wants this Aiken bill hung around our necks in 1950. It has no friends in our committee. Not even among Republicans. We are going to get out some kind of a new farm bill."

Sentiment on the Senate side is more in favor of the Aiken law and consequently, against the Brannan proposals. Administration leaders, however, including Senator Thomas, who heads the Senate Agriculture Committee, is expected to be in favor of part of the Brannan program which has received unqualified administration endorsement.

ALFALFA FOR BREAKFAST?

British scientists have suggested using 2 percent of alfalfa meal in cereal mixtures to provide vitamin A for under-nourished children, and their South African collegues point out that alfalfa leaves are richer in Vitamin C than oranges, grapefruit, or any of the common leafy vegetables. Are you sold on the idea now?

HOUSING BILL HAVING TOUGH TIME IN SENATE

Debate on the housing bill which provides $260 million for rural housing occupied most of the Senate's time this week. Certain Republican members, including Senator Taft, worked very hard to delete provisions from the bill which would allot funds to repair substandard rural housing. They also opposed the slum clearance program. Other Republicans rallied around the housing bill supporters and even conducted a special tour among the slum areas in Washington designed to spotlight the horrible housing conditions existing in the Capital.

On the House side, the Banking and Currency Committee heard witnesses on HR.4009, the companion measure to S.1070. Hearings will be continued on April 25 when the Committee reassembles.

KANSAS DELEGATION VISITS WASHINGTON

The Kansas FU delegation, headed by Cy Perkins, arrived this week and immediately started taking in the sights of Washington and also interviewed their representatives and senators. Reaction was somewhat similar to that experienced by other delegations. They found considerable sentiment against the 60% Aiken law and conversely a lot of sentiment for the full parity recommendations of the Farmers Union.

PATTON RENEWS FIGHT FOR FEDERAL-AID-TO-EDUCATION BILL

President Patton this week threw his efforts into the fight to bring adequate schools and teachers to rural areas. In a telegram, sent to every member of the House Education and Labor Committee, Patton urged that the committee give its immediate attention to federal aid to education. He commented on the fine action taken by the Senate in approving S.276 which provides $300 million in federal grants to the states to help pay teachers' salaries and other school operating expenses. Patton also commented on the fact that education in rural areas has been "shamefully neglected."

THE BILL PASSED BY THE SENATE by a vote of 58-15 represents a partial victory in a 25-year fight to have the federal government give the states the aid they need. The bill is designed to reduce any inequalities in educational opportunities in elementary and secondary schools throught the United States. Allotments to the states range from $5 to $25 per pupil from 5-17 years of age. Under the proposed legislation, the poorer states are to receive the larger share of federal funds in order that the minimum spent per pupil in every state amounts to $55 a year.

It will be recalled that the Senate passed a similar federal aid to education bill in the 80th Congress. Unfortunately, the reactionary leadership at the House, headed by Joe Martin, bottled up the bill and did not allow the House to consider it. Prospects in the 81st Congress are much better. However, it would be a mistake to consider that federal aid to education bill will not be opposed by powerful groups. An active campaign is necessary to get the measure enacted. Wire or write your representative now.

BRANNAN PROGRAM DEFINITELY GAINING GROUND

Secretary of Agriculture Brannan's plan for a farm program is definitely gaining ground. Numerous congressmen have in the past few weeks praised certain parts of the plan and have indicated substantial support. One reason attributed to this support may be attributed to support by Farmers Union representatives and the able way in which they presented the Farmers Union plan to the House Agriculture Committee.

Critics of the plan, of course, as soon as Brannan appeared before the committee, presented a "barrage of dead cats." They denounced it as socialistic, radical, as a copy of the British plan, which, it is claimed, regiments British farmers, and as a brainchild of Jim Patton who, it was contended, was a left winger. All of this name calling resulted apparently in the net gain of support for the Brannan plan.

It was pointed out that those violently denouncing the plan, including Fulton Lewis Jr. and the Wall Street Journal, were violent anti-New Dealers and have been for many years. Such individuals and groups have opposed consistently every progressive piece of legislation that has been offered on Capitol Hill.

THE PRESS, VARIOUS FARM NEWSLETTERS, and other agencies that disseminate information are reflecting this change in sentiment. At first most said that Brannan's plan had no chance of being enacted into law. This week several reports from the newspapers and farm letters have predicted that the essential features will be enacted. For example, Wayne Darrow's Washington Farm Letter says: "Brannan's price support plan will be enacted into law during the 1950 session of Congress, in our opinion." And the Farmers Friend, published at Greenbay, Wisconsin, comes out with an editorial headed "Odds Swing to Brannan":

"The odds on the passing of the assured farm income plan are swinging in Mr. Brannan's favor in spite of a hostile press and loud rumbling from top bracket farm organizations. Of the two main reasons for this, the fact that the farmer does not scare easily is probably the most pertinent. Farmers realize, if no one else does, that agriculture has outgrown the Jamestown era which some critics resurrect in an effort to swing public opinion away from a federally operated national farm plan."

PATTON OPPOSES MUNDT-FERGUSON BILL

President Patton this week renewed his fight to preserve civil liberties for American people. In a letter to Senator Pat McCarran, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Patton stated that he opposed enactment of the Mundt-Ferguson bill which the committee is now considering. "While the bill," said Patton, "before your committee has been slightly modified we regard it still as obnoxious to civil liberties." Patton went on to say that "adequate authority exists in current law to deal with subversives and treasonable activities..."

NFU PRESENTS VIEWS ON ATLANTIC PACT TO SENATE COMMITTEE

The National Farmers Union this week officially presented its views on the North Atlantic Pact to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in the form of a resolution passed unanimously by the National Board of Directors. In this resolution which opposed the Pact, it was pointed out:

> "There continue to be...certain very disturbing elements in our government's Foreign Policy. Of these, the most alarming is the proposal for a North Atlantic Security treaty, obviously to be followed by extensive arms aid to Europe. We cannot approve such a course. We believe it to be directly contrary to American precedent and history and to be a futile gesture. We cannot conceive of a situation arising under the proposed Treaty where the United States would fight unless it would fight in the absence of a treaty. Therefore, we view the Treaty merely as a preliminary to the sending of arms to European nations."

HEARINGS TO BEGIN ON NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE BILL

Attention in Washington for several weeks will be centered on the National Health Insurance Bill S.1679 on which hearings will be held by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee beginning May 16.

FARMERS UNION REPRESENTATIVES WILL APPEAR and testify in favor of the bill. Please send us statements so that they may be inserted in the record, or if you wish to appear personally, contact the Washington office and we will arrange for you to appear.

HERE VERY BRIEFLY ARE THE PRINCIPAL PROVISIONS OF S.1679:

(1) The bill calls for the government to pay all medical, dental and surgical hospital bills for heads of families (including farmers) and their dependents.

(2) The costs will be met by a new payroll tax of 1½% each on covered workers and their employers. The tax would be levied on income up to $4800 per year. For example, on income of that amount the worker would be taxed $72 a year and employer a like amount. If the worker earned only $2400 a year, he would be taxed $36.

(3) The bill does not, as its hostile critics charge, take away free choice. Patients have free choice of doctors and doctors may reject patients. Doctors do not have to participate in the program. Individuals are left free to hire private doctors if they choose and pay them on the present basis.

(4) Administration of the plan is largely left to the states and medical standards will as now be determined by the members of the medical profession.

NFU SUPPORTS CHILD RESEARCH BILL

Among bills to receive the support of the National Farmers Union this week was S.904, the National Child Research Bill, sponsored the the American Parents Committee, which provides assistance to local communities in setting up child guidance clinics and other aids dealing with the many problems of child rearing.

In a letter to Senator James E. Murray, urging that the Labor and Public Welfare Committee report favorably on the bill, Patton pointed out:

> "One-fourth of America's children in 1946 lived on farms. Yet farmers receive only 12 to 15 percent of the nation's income. It is obvious that the lower the income per capita the less able a state is to support the services which its children need."

Patton went on to say that a strong America was dependent upon the health of the children.

A PROPOSAL FOR DEVELOPMENT AND ABUNDANCE

Address of Russell Smith, Legislative Secretary of National Farmers Union, to the National Emergency Conference on Resources, Washington, D. C., May 14, 1949

For too many years the close relationship of the development and use of natural resources to the general state of the economy has gone unrecognized. Therefore, I am grateful for the opportunity at this time to put before you some of the views of myself and my organization concerning the desirability of continuing economic stability as a prime means of promoting the orderly conservation and use of these resources. Let me be explicit here and say that, while the greatest waste entailed by depressions and panics is human waste, I am referring primarily only to natural resources. I take it that we are all in agreement on the ghastly toll of human resources that economic upheaval always takes.

Frankly, I am pleading a case, the case for enactment of the so-called "Full Employment Act of 1950". This is the Patman-Murray-Sparkman bill, which is numbered S 281 in the Senate and HR 1177 in the House. Later, I will discuss briefly the principal provisions of this bill, but first I hope to persuade you that there is a neglected field for discussion here regardless of the merits of particularlegislation designed to meet problems in that field.

To start with, the "Full Employment Act of 1950" seeks to offer governmental insurance against cyclical unemployment through the assurance that industrial investment will proceed at a stable rate, year in and year out. Some economists have mistakenly felt that, whatever else might be said of slowdowns in economic activity, they would at least put the brakes on excessive consumption of irreplaceable natural resources. It seems to me that that is a purely negative attitude toward the problem. More than that, it ignores the real impact of depression on resources. During periods of unemployment and decreased business and industrial operation, needs of the people accumulate in enormous volume. When the upturn in the cycle occurs, therefore, it nearly always leads toward inflation and, more than that, to excessive exploitation of mineral, timber, and other resources required for the goods being turned out to meet these accumulated needs.

Thus the period of relatively slow consumption of resources is replaced by one of feverishly rapid exploitation. Such disorder in the handling of those resources that once gone are gone for good is bound ultimately to result in exhaustion of resources at an earlier date than otherwise would be the case. Furthermore, instability of this kind frustrates efforts to map out substitute kinds of operations which might meet the needs that have accounted for the exhaustion of the resource.

A second point which, I believe, has seldom been stressed in such discussions as this is the impact of monopoly upon the pattern of resources exploitation. The outstanding example in the United States of course is in metals. Such operations as those of the U. S. Steel Corporation, the Anaconda Copper Company, and the Aluminum Company of America over the last 25 years have not rebounded to the benefit of the cause of conservation. The development of an adequate light metals industry has been retarded, the public interest in depletion of ore reserves has not been taken into account, and the development of new processes, combinations and substitutes, and new consumer devices has been on a far smaller scale than any of them would have been if a lively competitive situation had existed in these industries.

This is not to say of course that savage and unrestricted competition itself may not have a disastrous effect on resources. Rather the point I wish to stress at this time is that monopoly can have exactly the same kind of effects as cut-throat competition and brings with it a train of additional evils.

In summary, concentration of control in any industry at the same time unregulated by government necessarily eliminates the development of programs aimed at such public purposes as the conservation and wise use of resources. This is true because a monopoly, as any other private business, exists primarily to make profits and not to safeguard posterity.

Too often we forget, too, that the breakdown of state and local governments and responsibility in the United States, especially marked since the Civil War has been a major factor in excelorating the drain on our natural resources. While this appears to be on the surface a purely political consideration, it is also economic. The federal nature of our system of government imposed a major share of the obligations of government, in an economic sense, upon state and local entities. The corruption of state legislatures and officials by great corporations, the national necessity for tremendous interstate corporate and physical structures such as the railroad system, and the long line of decisions of the courts adverse to state and local governments - all of these contributed to a weakening of that responsibility at the grass roots which our Constitution contemplates as one of the great safeguards of the people.

The result of this diminution of all government other than the national government was to hasten materially the destruction of such natural resources as timber. The gap that was left with the wreckage of state regulation has never been satisfactorily filled by national or other regulation, at least in many fields, prominent among which is that of conservation. Perhaps in many of these fields it is too late to attempt to return to state and local regulation. Such devices of government as the Soil Conservation Districts, which receive assistance of the national government but are organized under state laws, provide one of the clews toward resolution of this problem in the future.

A fourth and in some ways most important point that I wish to make is that the undue concentration of industry, population and financial controls in the northeast quarter of the United States has caused a regional imbalance of the very greatest significance to the United States as a whole. Symbolic of this concentration is the railroad rate structure of the nation, for this region of concentration roughly corresponds to the rate territory as official classification territories and receives freight rates designed to assist it materially in its self-appointed function of drawing raw materials from the rest of the country, processing them, and then distributing them in finished form to the whole country. This imbalance is well recognized by this time, and indeed some of the participants in this conference have helped to make it well-known. The states of the South and West have been termed colonial provinces because in large measure their role in the economy has been similar to that of an Asiatic province affording raw materials, to, say, an industrial nation like England.

Parenthetically let me interpolate here that within the states themselves comprising this northeast quarter of the United States there are many underdeveloped areas and that within that territory, too, exists imbalances that tend always toward the production of instability in the economy.

However, I do not wish to belabor a well worn theme. The significance of regional imbalance to this conference relies in its by-products: the mining of the soil itself, the haphazard exploitation of mineral and other resources, the creation of both floods and dust storms, and the creation of great megalopolise where great bodies of our people are cut off from the refreshment of the natural world.

For example, the fact that the South and the West lack their due share of industries condemns the majority of the inhabitants of the South and the West to a lower standard of living than people in other states, for it has been well demonstrated that a higher level of living always accompanies an increase in industrialization. A better diffusion of our national wealth, geographically, would go far toward removing those poverty-stricken areas that stand out like blots on the maps showing the distribution of national income. In turn, such diffusion would take much of the pressure from those tillers of the soil who are forced every year to plant cotton up to the doorsteps of the cabins or to attemot to grow wheat on land that should always be reserved for grass. The greatest single factor in the creation of the vast American problem of soil erosion is pure and simple poverty among farm people. A better regional balance of industry would go a long way toward eliminating or minimizing this cause.

It must be observed, too, that the processing of raw materials at great distances from where those raw materials are obtained does not contribute to orderly use of resources. Thus, it is no concern of Pennsylvania if the iron ore of northern Minnesota should become exhausted, so long as Pennsylvania can receive iron ore from another source. Yet the exhaustion of the northern Minnesota deposits will create vast and complex problems for Minnesota. For another example, so long as fertilizer companies can obtain phosphate from sources closer to their plants, why should they interest themselves in attempting to develop the phosphate resources of the west? Yet from the national point of view it would be far better common sense to diffuse the production of phosphate rather than to exhaust this resource in one part of the country and then move on to another part.

So much for my general observations regarding economic stability and conservation of resources. As a matter of fact, in the whole discussion to this point I have been indirectly talking about S 281 and HR 1177, the "Full Employment Act of 1950". I do not regard the bill as a panacea that will answer all the questions that I have raised and meet all of the criticisms that I have made in this paper. I do regard it as a very promising start on new paths, paths that point toward greener prospects than the courses we have been pursuing. In conclusion, I want to sketch briefly to you the specific provisions of this bill so that you may see how it conforms to the ideas that I have put forward here today.

The overall objective of the bill is to establish a new Reconstruction Finance Corporation dedicated to the execution, through loans from a $15 billion revolving fund, of the long-range national economic programs recommended by the National Council of Economic Advisors and approved by the President. In other words, the revised Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would be the operating arm of the President where the Council would be his policy and programming body. Title I of the bill would establish a new seven-man Board of Directors, serving five-year terms and paid at the rate of $25,000 a year. "The principal function of the Board of Directors" says this title "shall be to assist, through management of the Capital Development Fund hereinafter described, in the achievement of the long-range program of production, employment and investment goals set forth in the Economic Report", of the President. This title also would establish an advisory board modeled on the war-time Advisory Board on War Mobilization and Reconversion.

Title II is devoted to a description of the Capital Development Fund and its uses. It should be noticed carefully that wide discretion is given the RFC in the terms and conditions, including interest, of the loans to be made from this fund, since it is felt that the exercise of this discretion may be of very great importance both in achieving purposes of the proposed law and in relating its operations to economic conditions generally.

In making these loans the Corporation is directed to "seek to maintain desirable levels of investment not only nationally but regionally, and shall vigorously attempt to encourage investment in such industrial and business enterprises as are currently or prospectively underdeveloped but necessarily must be developed for the attainment of the objectives specified in the Economic Report." Furthermore, "in the making of such loans it shall give due regard to wise use of natural resources and to promotion of the purposes of the Sherman and Clayton Acts".

Finally the categories of loans and the order of preference among these categories is of considerable significance. The final paragraph of the bill describes these as follows:

"(c) The Corporation is authorized (1) to make loans for these purposes to existing private business enterprises, including cooperatives, or new business enterprises, including cooperatives, through which the purposes of this Act may be achieved; (2) in the event of inability to make either type of loan to private business enterprises, to offer to State governments the opportunity of receiving such loans for the purpose of constructing needed industrial facilities for operation by the State receiving the loan; (3) where required to attain the objectives of the Economic Report, to make loans to the Tennessee Valley Authority, and to such similar regional authorities as may hereafter be established, for the purpose of complementing regional programs of private and State investment through the construction of facilities and promotion of enterprises affected with a general public interest: Provided, That such enterprises may include basic industrial operations essential to other manufacturing and business operations, as well as public works."

Again, let me say that I do not rest on this particular bill the case for recognition of the close interdependency of general economic conditions and the use and development of resources. The connection exists apart from this or any other bill. The choice facing us is whether we will passively accept an unsatisfactory phase of this condition or whether we will move progressively toward doing something to improve it. As a basis for discussion, at least, for making a beginning the Patman-Murray -Sparkman bill is well worth your study.

FU LEADERS CONCENTRATE ON STORAGE BILL

Farmers Union leaders this week intensified their efforts to bring about enactment of a satisfactory storage bill. HR.2682, which is intended to give the Commodity Credit Corporation authority for the expansion of storage facilities, passed both houses recently (the House and Senate versions of the bill differ widely) and is now being considered by conferees from both House and Senate.

Following President Patton's lead, FU state presidents went to bat for a bill that will enable the Government to meet the storage emergency. Patton personally conferred with some of the conferees and urged them to support the Commodity Credit Corporation charter bill in the form in which it was voted out of the Senate Agriculture Committee.

UNFORTUNATELY, THE BILL WAS AMENDED ON THE SENATE FLOOR by several damaging restrictions on credit as well as a prohibition that the CCC could not acquire a tobacco, cotton and cold storage facilities. Also included was a requirement that the CCC board of directors appointed by the President must be confirmed by the Senate. The House version of the bill was a vast improvement over the one approved by the Senate. The Secretary of Agriculture retained control of the board of directors and there were no restrictions on tobacco, cotton and cold storage facilities. However, one damaging restriction was inserted in the bill. It was provided that loans for storage must be limited to 17½¢ per bushel of the grain stored and that they must be repaid out of the sale of a single crop.

THE FARM BUREAU AS USUAL IS ON THE WRONG SIDE OF THE FENCE in the attempt to improve the bill. It became known this week that FB leaders are actively engaged in an attempt to restrict the scope of the new legislation.

PATTON DEMANDS THUMBS DOWN ON FRANCO LOAN

The Farmers Union here has become increasingly interested in the campaign to finance Franco Spain. In an effort to stem this campaign late last week, President Patton issued a statement demanding that the Export-Import Bank reject the request of Spain for a $40 to $50 million dollar loan with which to buy American cotton. "Farmers are not interested in selling cotton to the fascist dictator," said Patton. "Only such brokers as Mr. Lamar Fleming of Anderson Clayton & Co. Patton in his press release reviewed the Franco-U. S. situation. "Those Senators," Patton said, "who yesterday demanded recognition of Franco Spain, last remaining stronghold of European fascism, are in effect pressuring the Export-Import Bank to begin granting credits to a country which only lately was helping to kill American soldiers."

PATTON CONTINUED: "There is no more reason for recognition of Franco now than when the United States adopted its policy of non-recognition and Secretary of State Acheson deserves the highest commendation for sticking to it.

"It is not becoming for members of the Senate to seek to force the granting of a cotton loan by the Export-Import Bank through attacks on American foreign policy. The granting of such a loan would be an effectual reversal of that policy. It would be recognition by the back door."

SMITH PRESENTS FU POSITION ON PRODUCTION CONTROLS

In testimony before the House Agriculture Committee, Russell Smith, legislative secretary, this week reviewed the entire acreage allotment and marketing quotas situation and made suggestions as to what action should be taken. In the first place, said Smith, NFU does not regard existing surpluses as in any way dangerous or abnormal.

However, said Smith, there can be no doubt that a majority of wheat farmers are reconciled to the probable necessity for the return of both acreage allotments and marketing quotas. Smith pointed out some of the problems which exist in regard to the division and limits of commercial areas and also to the fact that limiting price support to a few favored commodities aggravated problems which made inevitable strict acreage allotment systems.

SMITH CALLED ATTENTION TO THE TESTIMONY OF GLENN TALBOTT, president of the North Dakota Farmers Union, given before the committee suggesting that equal treatment for all agricultural commodities offered the best prospect for easy adjustments in production. Enactment of this principle, Smith pointed out, would obviate most of the difficulties involved in marketing quotas and acreage allotment programs.

PATTON DENOUNCES HEALTH GROUP FOR DISHONEST ATTACK

The most important development in the fight to bring about enactment of adequate health insurance this week occurred when President Patton rushed into the fray to counteract attacks made on the President's National Health Insurance proposals. This development is particularly timely since hearings on the Administration's health bill are beginning on the House side on May 20 and on the Senate side on May 23.

THE OCCASION FOR THE PATTON RELEASE was an attack on Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator and the National Health Insurance Bill by the National Fraternal Congress, of which the National Farmers Union Life Association is a member. Patton is president of the Association. The executive committee of the Fraternal Congress passed a resolution in which they tried to prove, by using a Ewing quotation out of context, that socialized medicine was identical with the Administration's Health Plan.

IN HIS LETTER TO JEANIE WILLARD, president of the Fraternal Ccongress, Patton sharply condemned such tactics. "The National Farmers Union, as a member of the Association," said Patton, "will not be a party to such dishonest tactics. The NFU stands squarely behind the principle of extending medical service to all the members of the population by means of an insurance plan such as is proposed in the Administration's bill. Furthermore, "said Patton, "the NFU will join the other progressive groups to bring about the enactment of this legislation and to expose the Fraternal Congress and disprove the lie that health insurance will regiment both doctors and patients and interfere with medical standards."

PATTON PUSHES FU
FULL EMPLOYMENT BILL

President Patton this week appealed to Congress to begin hearings at once on the Patman-Murray-Sparkman Bill, titled, "The Full Employment Act of 1950." This bill sponsored by the Farmers Union, provides a revolving fund of $15 billion for the development of underdeveloped areas in the United States in the attempt to ward off another depression.

"Ominous warning signs" are increasing, Patton said, citing rising unemployment, declining expenditures for new plant and construction, and reduced buying power in cites and on farms. "This is not to say," concluded Patton, "that a depression is just around the corner but the only safe course is to be ready for whatever may occur."

PACE SAYS ONLY FARMER FOR AIKEN BILL IS AN IMBECILE

There is still considerable comment in agricultural circles in the Capitol about the row which was staged last week between Allan Kline, Farm Bureau president, and the House Agriculture Committee. The Farm Bureau president's second appearance before the Committee confirmed our conclusions that the Aiken bill has no friends on the committee and that several members of the committee are aghast at Kline's proposal to allow it to become law.

RANKING COMMITTEE MEMBER, STEVEN PACE, told Klein that he only knows of one farmer who favored the Aiken bill and that he was an imbecile. Kline's reply to this statement was that he favored the Aiken law and that he was a farmer. So hot became the controversy that statement after statement of insulting language was struck from the Record. The net result was to confirm committee members in their undying opposition to the 60% law and to publicly air the Farm Bureau Federation's dirty linen.

H. L. WINGATE, President of the Georgia Farm Bureau Federation and R. F. Shaw, an executive vice president of the North Carolina Farm Bureau Federation, appeared to dispute the contentions of Kline that Farm Bureau members favored the Aiken Bill. "I don't know of a single cotton farmer throughout the entire South," said Wingate, "who is in favor of this 60% parity law."

FARM BUREAU POSITION 1/

NFU POSITION

THE BRANNAN PROGRAM

A proposal has been made recently to this Committee by the Secretary of Agriculture. So far it is a statement of politico-economic philosophy -- not a farm program.

The National Farmers Union is strongly back of the Secretary's proposals and urges this committee to place them before the House in legislative form.....The proposal of the Secretary can be regarded as a milestone both in the struggle to maintain and preserve the family-type farm, and in the effort to tie together the interests of producers and consumers.

THE AIKEN 60% LAW

The American Farm Bureau Federation views Government price supports as appropriate and necessary protection to farmers against unreasonable price declines. We want to preserve and increase the productive efficiency of American agriculture. We want to fit a workable price-support program into a free competitive enterprise system.... we support the basic principles of the Agricultural Act of 1948....We believe the price-support program provided in the Agricultural Act of 1948 to be sound and workable.

Of the other major alternatives before Congress, one would mean severe contraction of farm income. This is the alternative of letting the Title II "sliding scale" provisions go into effect on January 1st. The severity of this impact upon farmers' incomes has not been generally realized....to let Title II of the 1948 Farm Act go into operation for a year would be a great tragedy.

1/ Statements made by Farm Bureau and NFU before House Agr. Committee April 27,28 1949.

FARM BUREAU POSITION

NFU POSITION

PARITY CONCEPT

The parity price approach to a fair exchange value for farm commodities is discarded. This concept has been the basis for agricultural unity for the last 20 years.

It repeals, in effect, the philosophy of fair farm prices in the marketplace which is contained in the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 and the Agricultural Act of 1948.

Parity, as I understand it, and as it has been sold to the American people as a concept, is that price for agricultural commodities which is supposed to be fair.

I know of no basis, Mr. Chairman, from an ethical standpoint, from a moral standpoint, and certainly not from an economic standpoint, by which we can justify any drop in parity for family-type farms. Parity is supposed to be parity....I know of no justification to talk about any fraction of parity.

REGIMENTATION

It means Government-administered farm prices and farm income, with government control of all land and livestock production.

It is our belief that if a farm program treated all commodities on a comparable basis that with a few exceptions and in a reasonably short period of time we could get the adjustment of production within agriculture and get them with less so-called regimentation than with any other device that has as yet been proposed.

EQUAL TREATMENT OF COMMODITIES

The American Farm Bureau Federation last spring recommended to Congress that cotton producers be authorized to vote on marketing quotas when cotton supplies are normal or above and the price is 90 percent of parity support whenever production controls are effective..... Farmers in the South, where agricultural income is lower, are more anxious to use marketing quotas as a means of adjusting production to market demands, than are producers in other regions. This affords them an opportunity to adjust supplies to demand before their industry is in trouble, and if successful, maintain conditions which would bring about a balance between supplies and market requirements. If these programs fail to accomplish their purpose, then according to the variable schedule, loans would decrease.

We believe that all commodities need to be treated on an equal basis in order to effectuate democratically the necessary shifts into and out of production of various kinds of crops..... a program should be worked out so that all commodities in agriculture can receive comparable treatment.....so that a farmer can see that he can come out just as well from a cold blooded financial economic standpoint with changing commodities.

FARM BUREAU POSITION

NFU POSITION

FARM SUPPLIES AND PRICES

We are convinced that the level of price support should be tied to farm supplies, and that farm prices should be used in helping to guide farm production.

Without a program where a farmer knows he can work in cooperation with all other farmers, the only answer that an individual farmer could possibly have to low prices for his crop is to do everything within his power to increase production so that the multiple of increased production times lower and lower prices might, he hopes, yield him enough revenue to enable him to stay in business.

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY TO THE FARMER

Two principal viewpoints prevail with regard to the role of farm price supports in our economy. Some people view support prices as "fair" prices -- that is, as "profitable" prices for producers. These people appear to view the Government price-support level itself as the objective of farm price policy. If price supports are to be used to guarantee farm income rather than as a protection against unreasonable price declines, it follows that the Government must assume responsibility for determining what is a fair level of farm income.

We as farmers look to God for seasons to grow our crops. We also look to our national Congress for laws to assure us a fair price for our crops.

We farmers must have laws to protect us from the short comings in our economic system. We must have stable prices to make a living and to have the necessities of life. The farmer had much fear last year that the Congress would not give to us a new farm program to continue some protection on prices.....

There are at least four million of us farmers producing food for sale. We are not organized. We have no marketing organization strong enough to market our products on a stabilized basis. The world, and surely America, needs our food. We produce in abundance, or try to, no matter what we get for it. We believe in abundance. So after the bitter experience of the past we have arrived at the conclusion in which nearly all farmers concur -- that it is a proper function of Government to help stabilize agriculture in the public interest.

FARM BUREAU POSITION

NFU POSITION

AIKEN LAW AND HIGH SUPPORTS

I should like to point out that the Agricultural Act of 1948 provides, on a permanent basis, for the highest level of price supports we have ever tried to operate in peace time.

The farmers have much fear today that under the Aiken bill farm prices may drop to 60 percent of so-called parity. We as farmers know what that means. It means losing our homes and having our families be in great need. I have talked with hundreds of these farmers and this is their feeling. These small farmers do not write to the Congress very often. They have no organization to speak for them. But I assure you that they are now and have been, living in fear of the outcome of the farm program.

BENEFITS FOR CONSUMERS

It introduces a cheap food philosophy. It seeks to establish the principle that taxpayers should pay a considerable portion of the grocery bill of consumers.

We thoroughly agree with the theory of production payments or compensatory payments because I think in the long pull the consumers have to have some kind of a break out of this. It relates to their living costs and their income.

UNIT SYSTEM

The proposal would place a ceiling on opportunity in agriculture. This in turn, would result in penalizing efficiency.....We view any unit limitation as a dangerous precedent -- an opening wedge which eventually would result in government supervised and stablized agricultural poverty.

Never before has a Secretary of Agriculture in a general farm program suggested that special consideration be given family-type farmers as distinguished from large "factory farm" operators. Congress for many years has sought a means whereby its often expressed sentiments favorable to family farms could be translated into actual program terms. The Secretary has suggested such a device and principles which can be followed..... Let me beg you to use this unit system or one similar, to insure the existence of the family-type farmer. History both recent and ancient, tells us that when nations let the big farmers eat up or crowd out the small farmers, these nations fail. One of the three main causes of the fall of the ancient Roman civilization was that big, forced-labor farms could produce cheaper than the small farmers; therefore pushing the small farmers out of business. The family farmer and his farm have meant much to America and our way of life through the years and at the present time. We plead with you to make secure the family farmer on his land.

Subject - National Health Insurance Vs. Socialized Medicine

Release date - In a.m. papers of Monday, May 23, 1949

WASHINGTON - In a letter made public today, James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union, protested sharply against a resolution passed by the Executive Committee of the National Fraternal Congress of America which attacked the health program recommended by President Truman. "As president of the National Farmers Union Life Association, a member in good standing of the National Fraternal Congress, I wish to disclaim any responsibility for and deny any agreement with this resolution," Patton stated in the letter.

Patton indicated in the letter that he regarded the action of the Executive Committee of the National Fraternal Congress as a complete distortion of facts and he demanded "immediate retraction of the unauthorized resolution" and said that passage of the resolution was "part of a campaign of the American Medical Association and other groups to sabotage the efforts of those who are working toward the goal of bringing adequate medical service to the American people."

The letter follows:

"I am in receipt of a resolution regarding national health insurance passed by the Executive Committee on April 8 and forwarded to members of the National Fraternal Congress of America on May 4. As president of the National Farmers Union Life Association, a member in good standing of the National Fraternal Congress, I wish to disclaim any responsibility for and deny any agreement with this resolution.

"This resolution falsely claims that socialized medicine as defined by Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, is identical with and the same as the National Health Insurance proposal of President Truman.

"I refer you to the second paragraph of the resolution which is a quotation from a statement Ewing made in the January 1949 issue of American Druggist. According to this quotation, Ewing defines socialized medicine as: 'Socialized medicine means that the doctors are salaried employes of the Government. As thier employer, the Government can direct and control any detail of their work....' Then in the seventh paragraph of your resolution it is stated: '...the health insurance proposal at the national level, known as socialized medicine...' Apparently this is a deliberate attempt to label the President's Health Insurance proposal as simply socialized medicine.

"I denounce this statement as a complete distortion of the facts. In the very same publication from which the Ewing quotation on socialized medicine is taken there is also a complete definition by Ewing as to what constitutes national health insurance. This publication consisted of a record of a debate between Ewing and Dr. Fishbein in which the participants undertook to answer a series of questions. The first question concerned socialized medicine and national health insurance. In the first paragraph, Ewing defined socialized medicine and in the third paragraph he defined national health insurance as "simply a method of paying for complete medical care by pre-payment plan...each beneficiary would select his own doctor. The doctor would be free to reject any patient...."

"Thus, the distortion is clear. The Executive Committee of the Fraternal Congress chose to take what Ewing said in the first paragraph about socialized medicine, pretend this to be the same as national health insurance, and ignore the clear-cut definition of national health insurance which Ewing gave in the third paragraph.

"On behalf of the 35,000 members of the National Farmers Union Life Association, a member of the National Fraternal Congress, I insist upon an immediate explanation and retraction of this disgraceful libel. The National Farmers Union Life Association will not be a party directly or indirectly to such outrageous actions.

"It seems quite obvious to us in the National Farmers Union Life Association that this action of the Executive Committee of the National Fraternal Congress is part of a campaign of the American Medical Association and other groups to sabotage the efforts of those who are working toward the goal of bringing adequate medical service to the American people.

"The words used in the resolution have a familiar ring. There have been similar statements and resolutions made, all to the same end. That end is to pull the wool over the eyes of the American people in the attempt to convince them that a national health insurance plan would mean regimentation of patients, regimentation of doctors and the lowering of the medical standards.

"We in the National Farmers Union Life Association are not deceived by such tactics. We know that the President's Health Insurance plan will allow complete freedom for the doctor and the patient. Patients may, under the plan, hire private doctors if they wish. Doctors may reject patients or not participate in the plan at all. There is nothing in the proposal of the President that would lower medical standards. Doctors still would determine what constituted the best recognized medical practices.

"The only thing compulsory about the plan is the requirement that a small tax be levied on salaries up to $4800. This method of financing insurance, as is well known, has proved quite successful and sound in regard to social security benefits. The health insurance plan would not regiment anybody any more than the Federal Social Security system which has been in effect since 1935.

"Finally, we would like to repeat that we demand an immediate retraction of the unauthorized resolution of the Fraternal Congress and to serve notice on the Executive Committee that we are informing our members of this situation and will on behalf of our membership and at their direction take whatever action seems appropriate if this action is not recinded."

STATEMENT OF JAMES G. PATTON, PRESIDENT, NATIONAL FARMERS UNION, BEFORE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE CONSIDERING RATIFICATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT, May 23, 1949

The National Farmers Union favors early ratification by the Senate of the International Wheat Agreement.

We believe the Agreement should be approved on two grounds of overwhelming importance. The first of these is that early operation of the Agreement will help considerably in meeting a serious approaching wheat surplus problem in this country. The second is that international management of the price and movement of a basic commodity such as wheat will be a tremendous step toward the establishment of a secure peace.

The terms of the Agreement by this time are well-known and I need not consume the time of the Committee in going into them in detail. Suffice it to say that the National Farmers Union believes the price range within which importing and exporting countries are to agree is reasonable and fair in the light of changes in price both here and abroad during the time that has elapsed since the wheat agreement originally was transmitted to the Senate and now. The decline in the price of wheat has of course made it impossible for the United States to obtain as high a selling price as had originally been called for in the Agreement.

It should be pointed out, however, that this is not necessarily an unmixed evil. It is to be hoped of course that the United States will sell abroad more wheat than the quota allotted to it in the Agreement and it is wholly possible that the volume that will be sold at a somewhat lower price level than would have been the case under the original version of the Agreement will prove to be of as much value as would a less volume at a higher price. In any event, we are convinced by the reports of our representatives who were consulted in the course of negotiations that an excellent job of representing the interest of the United States was performed by those speaking for this government and that it would not be possible at this time to obtain a more favorable arrangement.

As to the export quota allotted to the United States under the Agreement, the Secretary of Agriculture already has pointed out that in the aggregate, including exports to the occupied areas of Germany and Japan, a guaranteed market for some 300 million bushels of U. S. wheat will exist for the next four years if the Wheat Agreement is ratified. While it is true that under the European Recovery Program considerably more wheat than this has been exported by this country annually, it is equally true that we cannot look forward to an indefinite continuation of such exports. For one thing, other countries are getting back into normal peacetime production of wheat. For another thing, countries participating in the Marshall Plan are tending to shift their purchases from the United States more and more to non-agricultural goods. The market assured under the Wheat Agreement is far greater than any enjoyed by the United States in most of the years prior to World War II. In 1940 for example we exported but 41 million bushels.

One other word regarding the Agreement itself. It is unfortunate of course that two such vast wheat producers as Russia and Argentina are not included in the Agreement. Their abstinence of course makes the success of the Agreement less certain than would be the case if they had adhered to it. However, we are firmly convinced that there is an excellent prospect that the Agreement will succeed even without those two countries and that in the not too distant future its very success will persuade them of the advantages of becoming parties to it.

To turn to the domestic picture in wheat the outlook is clearly difficult. There is good reason to believe that this year approximately 1½ million acres will be planted to wheat and that the carryover may run as high as 400 million bushels. Both of these figures are somewhat above official estimates of the Department of Agriculture, but the Department consistently for the past few years has been inclined toward conservatism in such estimates. The maximum exports expected from our total wheat supply to be expected in the forthcoming year are about 450 million bushels. Without the Wheat Agreement, they may be less than that. In any case, we are moving into a period where the adjustment of production, of supplies and of prices, is going to furnish terrific economic and administrative headaches.

Whatever the subsidy involved in the operation of the Wheat Agreement may amount to, it is our view that it will enable a saving of considerably more money to the United States Treasury. The heavier the carryover, the greater its depressing effect will be upon prices and the greater will be the amount of money that must be spent to maintain prices of wheat under any seriously proposed domestic farm program. In summary, we believe that, from a domestic point of view, the International Wheat Agreement will be of very great value in helping to solve the so-called surplus problem of one of our greatest crops.

The Secretary of Agriculture and the Assistant Secretary of State have discussed with you the value of the International Wheat Agreement as one means of helping the nations of the world to avoid another desperate futile race for self-sufficiency. Already some countries that could more profitably spend their energies on other production have begun to encourage the uneconomic production of wheat. I should like simply to add more stress to what these other witnesses have said on this score. Every possible weapon should be utilized in the fight against a return to extreme nationalism. The progress made by European countries toward integration of the European economy under the European Recovery Program has been very disappointing. Ratification of this Agreement will, we hope begin a reversed trend.

In addition let me emphasize that the type of commodity agreement represented by the one before the Committee is not to be confused with the old-fashioned restrictive contracts, cartels, and agreements that characterized the pre-World War II world economy. If it were such a document, the National Farmers Union would be in the forefront of those opposing it.

The International Wheat Agreement is a commodity agreement which gives scope for needy countries to negotiate outside the area of commercial trade with countries having a burdensome surplus for the use of food that otherwise would go to waste. Its objective is stability and not restriction. There is all the difference in the world between this kind of agreement and one that seeks simple limitation of production in order to maintain prices at unduly high levels.

The Wheat Agreement in its present form is a logical development from the work of the Food and Agriculture Preparatory Commission which met in Washington in 1946. That Commission had been set up by the Copenhagen conference of FAO to consider courses open to member nations following failure of the conference to approve the proposals of then Director-General Sir John Boyd Orr for the establishment of a World Food Board. The Preparatory Commission after months of study and work recommended the establishment of a system of commodity agreements the terms of which would be such as to effectuate many of the objectives of a World Food Board.

The Wheat Agreement in its present form was drafted along lines recommended by the Preparatory Commission. The National Farmers Union hopes, therefore, that it will prove to be only the first of a series of commodity agreements that will be negotiated rapidly so as to bring order and stability into international trade in all of the principal agricultural commodities.

Specifically it is our belief that American tobacco farmers, cotton farmers, rice farmers, and perhaps many others, would benefit to a very marked degree if similar action were taken at the earliest possible moment to establish a framework of mutually agreed upon price and market arrangements of the kind that would be put into force under the Wheat Agreement. We believe also that all of these agreements should carry provisions for getting excess food to the people of the world who need it, such provisions to be operated in such a way as not to impair the stability and effectiveness of the commercial provisions of the agreements.

We urge this Committee in its report on the Wheat Agreement to call upon the administrative arm of government to take the initiative among the nations in exploring the possibility of early conclusion of such agreements.

PATTON WORKS TO SECURE PASSAGE OF FULL EMPLOYMENT BILL

President Patton this week continued his campaign to bring about enactment of the Full Employment Bill sponsored by the Farmers Union. In conference with Secretary of Agriculture Brannan, Leon Keyserling, vice chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, and several other key government officials, Patton called attention to rising unemployment, declining expenditures for new plant construction, and reduced buying power in cities and on farms.

THESE CONFERENCES FOLLOWED CLOSE ON THE HEELS of a Patton statement released late last week (see newsletter of May 20). In this release Patton reviewed the entire legislative situation in regard to the prevention of economic depression. First, Patton said, Congress has ignored the Administration's proposals for economic stabilization and for the expansion of production. Second, Patton called for the immediate enactment of the O'Mahoney-Sparkman resolution which calls for an investigation of the role that economic investment and construction expenditures play in our economy. Third, he asked for passage of the Celler-McCarran resolution for an inquiry into the operations of life insurance companies. Fourth, Patton called for enactment by Congress of the Full Employment Act of 1950 which was put forward last September by the National Farmers Union. "This bill," said Patton, "has been gathering cobwebs in the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee and in the House Banking and Currency Committee. It should be dusted off...We need action far earlier than we think...We are too great and influential a nation to go back...to 'made' work such as leaf-raking projects...What we need is a method of stimulating industrial investment in advance of depression."

Patton commented finally on the great increase in corporate profits which were being accumulated at a time when consumer buying power was falling steadily. "The great corporations raked in $32 billion in profits in 1948," said Patton, "and retained, after taxes, nearly $20 billion. When this accumulation of undisturbed profits is related to the falling off in investment in new plant, in retooling, and in related expenditures, then the warning to the Nation becomes plain."

BRANNAN BILLS INTRODUCED IN BOTH HOUSES

The fight to bring about enactment of the Brannan plan for American agriculture went into another phase this week with an introduction of two bills introduced by Senator Thomas of Oklahoma and Representative Cooley of North Carolina. These congressmen are chairmen respectively of the Senate and House Agriculture Committees. The Thomas Bill may be considered an Administration Bill as it is so drawn to carry out every important feature of the Brannan program. The much debated unit system is included as well as the provision that production payments be made on meat, poultry and dairy products. Brannan's revision of the way in which parity is calculated is also included.

Cooley's bill differs from the Thomas Bill in two important respects. First, it adds wool and peanuts to the products which are to have first preference in price support operations. Second, Cooley omits the unit system from his bill which would limit price support benefits to a gross production of approximately 25,000 dollars for any one farmer.

IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING THE INTRODUCTION OF THE THOMAS AND COOLEY BILLS, Farmers Union leaders scheduled a series of conferences to work out plans for an all-out fight to bring about enactment of the Brannan program. It is felt in FU and other circles that there is a strong possibility that the House of Representatives will pass the essential features of the Brannan program. The Brannan plan has been quietly and steadily gaining ground. Business groups, even bankers, are lining up for the program, especially those who are directly and indirectly interested in stabilizing prices of perishable commodities.

NFU PROTESTS SHOTGUN HEARINGS ON CVA

President James G. Patton late last week vigorously protested, by telegram, hearings involving over-all development of the Columbia River conducted by the House Public Works Committee on the basis of an unpublished report of the U. S. Army Engineers. The Army and the Bureau of Reclamation have gotten together on another Pick-Sloan plan - this one for the Columbia river basin. It will become known as the Newell-Weaver plan, named for the Army and Bureau engineers who worked it up.

THE TWO AGENCIES HAVE BEEN TRYING TO GET AROUND THE WHITE HOUSE, which has not yet approved the plan nor submitted it to Congress, and get their plan before Congress as an alternative to the CVA. With Congressman Whittington, a vice-president of the pro-Army Rivers and Harbors Congress, co-operating, the two old line bureaus got some of their stuff into the record at the House hearing.

After Patton of NFU protested the premature hearings he was assured by Congressman Whittington, in a letter, that no action would be taken on over-all plans for the Columbia basin, nor the new shotgun plan of the Bureaus, until they were properly submitted to Congress by the President.

PATTON URGES RATIFICATION OF THE WHEAT AGREEMENT

President Patton this week appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee that is considering the International Wheat Agreement and urged its early ratification. There are two principal reasons, Patton pointed out, for ratification: One is, Patton said, "is that early operation of the Agreement will help considerably in meeting the wheat surplus problem. The second is that international management of the price and movement of a basic commodity such as wheat will be a tremendous step toward the establishement of a secure peace."

While it is true, said Patton, that under the European Recovery Plan, considerably more wheat than this has been exported by this country annually, it is equally true that we can not look forward to a definite continuation of such exports. Finally, Patton expressed the hope that the Wheat Agreement would be only the first of a series of commodity agreements that will be negotiated rapidly so as to bring order and stability into international trade in all of the principal agricultural commodities.

FU LEADERS WORK FOR HOUSING BILL

FU leaders this week carried into its final phase the battle for decent housing. In a telegram sent to members of the House Rules Committee, President Patton urged immediate action on a rule to bring the general housing bill up in the House as soon as possible. It will be recalled Housing Bill S.1070 passed the Senate on April 21 and that a similar bill HR4009 was reported out by the House Banking and Currency Committee on May 12. Unfortunately, the House version provides $12½ million less for farm housing than the Senate bill.

NFU URGES PASSAGE OF EDUCATION BILL

A representative of the National Farmers Union this week presented a statement to the House subcommittee on federal aid to education which is considering the aid to education bill. The Senate bill having previously passed by a vote of 58-15, the House committee, headed by Representative Barden, is now considering a similar bill. The bill considered by the House and sponsored by Representative Barden provides $314½ million for federal aid which is an increase of $14½ million over the amount provided by the Senate.

HOWEVER, THE BILL AS WAS POINTED OUT IN THE FU STATEMENT, HAS ONE especially bad feature. The Barden Bill allows federal funds to be substituted for state and local school taxes. Thus, improvement in standards of education might not in all instances be brought about by enactment of the Barden Bill. State contributions might be merely withdrawn from the educational budget and the burden shifted from the Federal Government. Thus, the net result might be an actual lowering of educational standards. The FU representative in his statement to the committee insisted that this provision of the bill be eliminated.

RESOURCES CONFERENCE HEARS MVA SUPPORTED

This Nation now has the advice of an emminent conservative Republican Engineer and an emminent liberal Democratic engineer in regard to Missouri Basin development.

BRIEFLY, BOTH OF THEM - HERBERT HOOVER AND MORRIS LLEWELLYN COOKE - say that the Pick-Sloan plan stinks. Hoover's report on Organization of the Executive Department of the Government gave the Pick-Sloan operations down-the-road.

Mr. Cooke, first administrator of REA and an engineer of international reputation, told the recent Emergency Conference on resources:

"We must get away from the type of administration of resources now being followed in the Missouri River Basin which, while doubtless honest from a fiduciary standpoint, represents a new low in the profligate waste of public funds and further represents planning inadequate to the point of being childish."

Subject - Senator Lucas's program

WASHINGTON - Strongly assailing the "must" legislation statement Tuesday of Senator Scott Lucas, Glenn J. Talbott, chairman of the National Farmers Union Executive Committee and two state presidents of the Farmers Union today joined in a telegram to Lucas urging that "a new federal farm program embodying the principles of the Brannan Plan should be given top priority consideration". The Farmers Union leaders were Paul Opsahl of the South Dakota Farmers Union and Don W. Chapman of the Montana Farmers Union.

The Farmers Union leaders sent the telegram to Lucas from Jmestown, North Dakota, where they were attending a meeting. The telegram was made public simultaneously in Jamestown and here. Its text was as follows:

"According to the press you have decided to drop the new farm bill embodying the Brannan proposals from the list of 'must" legislation during this session of Congress. This news is very disturbing especially if it means letting the 1948 farm act go into effect next year by default.

"The National Farmers Union urges that new farm legislation should not be officially forgotten despite the crowded congressional calendar. We believe that a new federal farm program embodying the principles of the Brannan Plan should be given top priority consideration. The need for it is most urgent. Farm income is presently down to a critical point. Further farm deflation means certain disaster. Surpluses of many farm commodities seems certain and without assurance of parity income that economic condition of millions of farmers will be irreparably impaired. More than this, the nation's general economy is presently in no position to withstand the shock of severe farm depression. The absence of an adequate farm program would have far-reaching and disastrous effects upon our entire economy. We are convinced that Title II of the 1948 farm act is totally inadequate to cope with the urgency of the problems now facing agriculture.
